I object to the idea—I am sure, knowing him, that my hon. Friend the Member for Workington did not really mean this—that it is all right to kill animals with dogs as long as people are not riding horses and wearing red coats. Some people—I do not include my hon. Friend—who have not looked deeply into the issue, are motivated by the feeling that people in red coats on horses are people whom we should not like because they are part of an era that we want to see no more of. I resent that. I have said many times that I do not hunt, but I know people who do. It is difficult to be in the House and not know someone who hunts. I do not believe that someone who hunts is de facto a cruel person. The Bill's proponents have no right to say that they are cruel people, or they do not believe in animal welfare.

I shall now move on to the new clause.

Mr. Leigh: Would it not help our debates if both sides were more honest and those who support hunting admitted that it not only culls foxes and is a part of country life but a sport, and those who oppose fox hunting admitted that, if it is abolished, foxes would still have to be culled, perhaps in a more cruel way?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should be grateful if the hon. Lady did as she said she would and returned to the new clause.

Kate Hoey: Those of us who feel that the debate has become polarised and sterile want some honesty in it.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding), who knows about mink hunting. She represents the views of the people who live where mink hunting takes place.

New clause 25 deals with the licensing of terrier work. I am concerned about some of the things that happen in terrier work attached to hunting. I pay tribute to the National Working Terrier Federation, which has tried hard to get people to understand what it does. The National Working Terrier Federation produced a document, "Hunting with Dogs. A Consultation Paper", which it has just brought up to date. It is important to understand what terriers do because, as the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire said, all parties agree that foxes must be controlled; we are discussing the process. The involvement of terriers is part of the process.

It is clear that, in some areas and instances, the use of terriers is necessary. That does not mean that we cannot control the way that they work and ensure that any malpractice, particularly in the more unofficial use of terriers, can be controlled. The federation was founded in 1984 to promote the efficient and humane use of working terriers for pest control purposes. It is made up of member working terrier clubs, affiliated organisations and individual supporters, and its code of practice and conduct for terrier work is accepted as a measure of good practice, and recognised by most practising terrier men as more comprehensive than any other.

Clearly, no one in an organisation can control all its members. I am especially concerned, now that there are more foxes in our inner cities and other urban areas, about the actions of some of the thugs who have attached themselves to the idea of what they see as a real form of sport and are moving into the inner cities and using dogs to go after foxes at night.

People may say about me, "What does an urban Member know about hunting?" Actually, I know an awful lot about it, but I shall not go into my background again now. Besides, we must face the fact that, in inner cities such as London, foxes are becoming a major pest and will have to be controlled. We shall have to find ways of dealing with them.

11.30 am

I do not suggest, as the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) implied, that we should have a Vauxhall hunt, but we shall have to consider the issue seriously and find ways of dealing with it. At first, people in inner cities are happy to see a fox, and they encourage it, but within three or four days, two weeks at most, they see the reality of what foxes can do. The House will have to address that problem in some way at some stage.

Our new clause would allow foxes to be dug out only under licensing arrangements—arrangements that we should have to work out with the National Working Terrier Federation. There is no point in trying to enact legislation to control some of the practices now taking place in the countryside unless we get the vast numbers of people now engaged in those practices to work with us—and that has not been done.

We shall talk more about that aspect later, but it is nonsense that a piece of draconian legislation can be going through the House without one Select Committee report or any independent inquiry since 1951, and without any real consultation with the people, whether one likes them or not, whose lives have been involved with those activities and whose jobs could be at risk. That is the reason—a reason that has nothing to do with filibustering or with the strength of people's feelings—why the Bill will not work and cannot be allowed to go through.

New clause 25 refers to licensing arrangements involving the Secretary of State. I am afraid that, with the Bill, we are giving the Home Secretary a huge amount of work to do, whether it goes through in its present form or in the form that we suggest—or at all.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Will the hon. Gentleman give way? [Laughter.] I am sorry, I meant the hon. Lady. I am grateful to the hon. Lady, the Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey), for giving way to me. Will she confirm that the overwhelming majority of people involved in fox hunting, whether they hunt to eradicate a pest or for sport, fully support regulations on terrier work? That includes the Masters of Fox Hounds Association. They all want to eradicate what, unfortunately, does happen in a small number of cases.

Kate Hoey: I forgive the hon. Gentleman for his mistaken impression of my sex.

Before Second Reading, I was not involved with any of the lobby groups on either side but, since then, I have been surprised and impressed by the genuine willingness of people who hunt to consider measures to control some of the excesses, and to recognise that the number one priority must be animal welfare. I wish that some—only some—of the people who are adamant about banning hunting with dogs really thought about the subject from an animal welfare point of view as much as the hunters do.

Mr. Ian Bruce: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Kate Hoey: No, I shall not give way any more, because I want to finish this section of my speech.

Obviously, there must be discussion about what is to go into the licence. Our suggestions are not prescriptive; they are simply some ideas:

"The conditions attaching to licences for terrier work shall be established by the authority, but shall include—

(a) a prohibition on the use of hard or baiting dogs;

(b) a provision that foxes bolted using terriers . . . shall normally be despatched with a suitable firearm and by no other means; and that is already happening in terrier packs associated with some of the better hunts—

(c) a requirement"—

"for all dogs used for this purpose to be fitted with electronic locators to establish their position underground".

Mr. Gray: I entirely support the principle behind the new clause, but may I suggest two amendments that the hon. Lady might want to suggest if the Bill goes to another place? First, she uses the expression "terrier packs", but that is inaccurate, because there is no such thing as a terrier pack. I believe that, under MFHA rules, one can use one terrier, or two, on some occasions, so that expression may need amending.

Secondly, subsection (4)(b) of the new clause refers to foxes having been "bolted" before being dispatched. That is an unfortunate juxtaposition of words, because one cannot bolt a fox. More often, a fox will be dispatched having been cornered in the earth rather than having bolted.

Kate Hoey: That shows how difficult it is to deal with a complex and complicated issue in a sensible way. In other debates, we shall talk about independent inquiries, and so on, because they represent the way forward.

Mr. Ian Bruce: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Kate Hoey: I shall, because I did not give way to the hon. Gentleman before—but this must be the last time.

Mr. Bruce: I am grateful to the hon. Lady, because I wanted to find out whether she had had any intelligence from the Home Office about what is happening in the review of people's ability to own guns. Clearly, that is crucial. There may be legislation telling people that they will have to use guns to control foxes, yet the Home Office may shortly say that most people will not be allowed to have rifles or shotguns.

Kate Hoey: I have been much too busy in the past two days to have discussions with any of my colleagues on that issue.

I support the range of new clauses. They all have different aspects and claim rights for particular areas and groups. I hope that the House will have the opportunity to vote on some of them separately, because it is important that we should be able to register separate votes on separate new clauses.

Mr. Hogg: I want to say a few words about new clause 7, but before I do so I shall repeat what I said on Second Reading: I am whole-heartedly against the Bill. I oppose it root and branch. I do so because I think that it is a monstrous infringement of civil rights. That is the basis on which I oppose it. None the less, I have to contemplate the possibility that the House may approve the Bill and send it to another place. On that basis, and that basis alone, I have tabled many new clauses and amendments, and wish to speak to them.

I shall begin by commenting on what the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) said about new clause 1. In that new clause, he has accepted the principle that it is important to retain fox hunting for some classes of animal husbandry, but he has confined that exemption to sheep farming. I know of no reason so to confine it. Once one accepts the principle that it is right to use fox hunting as a means of controlling foxes preying on livestock, it is wrong in principle to confine the exemption to sheep farming. That is why I tabled new clause 7, which would extend the range of husbandry for which fox hunting may be retained.

Mr. Gray: I find myself in the curious position of having my name alongside that of the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) in proposing new clause 1. It refers specifically to sheep in the context of national parks because the largest animal group in agriculture is sheep. I have not discussed this with the hon. Gentleman, but I dare say that, if the Bill goes elsewhere, we might consider other amendments to extend the clause into other areas of agriculture, such as pigs or poultry.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is wise in what he says, and I imagine that the hon. Member for Workington will pay great attention. However, two other problems are associated with new clause 1.

Mr. Desmond Swayne (New Forest, West): May I draw to the attention of my right hon. and learned Friend a problem with the new clause? The key question is whether it applies to the New Forest in my constituency. Although it is not defined as a national park in accordance with the 1947 legislation, the New Forest heritage area enjoys the benefits of planning policy guidance note 7. In other words, in planning terms, it has the benefits of a national park. If the clause does not apply to the New Forest, why on earth not?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend makes an important point, which brings me to my second criticism of the new clause. It is reflected in my new clause 7, one of many which the Madam Speaker was good enough to select. No principle that I can readily identify justifies confining the exemption to national parks. The principle is whether we need fox hunting to maintain good husbandry. Whether the land is in a national park is neither here nor there. When my hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) and the hon. Member for Workington reflect on that point, they might like to extend new clause 1 to provide an exemption in respect of all animal husbandry and to remove that part of it which confines it to national parks.

It is dangerous to confine the clause to national parks. By the nature of things, fox hounds run. They are no respecters of the boundaries of national parks, and it would be a total nonsense if people had an exemption for fox hunting while they remained within the national park but committed a criminal offence as soon as they crossed the boundary.

Mr. Tim Collins (Westmorland and Lonsdale): May I suggest another reason why the new clause may have been tabled by the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours)? He knows that the Bill is about as popular as the black death in the Lake district. In my constituency, 80 per cent. of votes at the last general election were cast for candidates publicly committed to opposing such legislation. Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that, if the hon. Gentleman does not succeed with the new clause, he should, by right, oppose the Bill in its entirety?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is wholly right. The hon. Member for Workington—with whom I have served in this House for nearly 20 years—is a man of principle. By proposing new clause 1, he is conceding the principle of fox hunting. He has tried to restrict it, for the reasons that he has explained, but he has admitted the justification of principle.

I have talked about husbandry and national parks, and I wish to record my dismay that the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is not in his place to advise the House on the matter. I also record my dismay that the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, who is responsible for national parks and the environment, is not in his place to assist the House on the application of new clause 1.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: My right hon. and learned Friend has drawn attention to the nonsense of permitting hunting merely in national parks. While they are running, hounds are no observers of whether or not the land over which they are running is in a national park. In addition, the boundaries of individual farms do not coincide with national park boundaries. Is it right that lambs and sheep in a national park should have a degree of defence against foxes as predators, while those located just outside the national park should not have the same defence?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend makes a yet more subtle point than perhaps he fully appreciates. Within a national park, there will be a number of farms—some with sheep, some not. What is being contemplated in new clause 1 is that, provided that the objective is the preservation of sheep, no offence is committed. As my hon. Friend rightly observes, fox hounds are no respecters of boundaries. They could cross from a farm within the national park where there are sheep to a farm within the national park where there are no sheep. The latter farm will probably have no protection.

Mr. Garnier: Surely the problem is not the ability of the hound to ascertain the boundary of a national park, but the fox, which is the pest and attacks livestock. The fox is no respecter of boundaries either.

Mr. Hogg: That is quite right. The trouble is that it is not the fox which is prosecuted, but people like my hon. and learned Friend.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: My right hon. and learned Friend has dealt with matters of principle in relation to the new clauses and the other clauses that provide exemptions from the prohibition of hunting. Does not clause 2(b) already reflect the principle that he seeks? The Bill is not against the hunting of mammals, and it expressly permits the hunting of mammals provided that the mammal is a rabbit or one of the many types of rodent. It also provides for the concept of dogs or hounds running from land on which one is permitted to hunt to neighbouring land. Will he develop that point in support of his argument?

Mr. Hogg: My right hon. and learned Friend makes two important points. The first goes to the question of principle. What distinction of principle is there between rabbits and rodents on the one hand and foxes on the other? I see none. I suspect that, in the Labour party, there is a dislike of fox hunters, but that is not a distinction of principle—it is an unworthy prejudice.

Mr. John Hayes (South Holland and The Deepings): That point has been made by a broad coalition of people who oppose the Bill. People with a long history of concern for wildlife have picked up on that inconsistency. I am thinking of the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) and my old friend James Barrington, who has written wisely on this matter. Those inconsistencies have brought together a wide range of people to oppose the Bill.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is entirely right. It is no accident that every Conservative Member of Parliament representing Lincolnshire takes the view articulated by my hon. Friend.

Mr. Hawkins: Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that it is particularly peculiar that there should be a suggestion that rats and rabbits can be hunted but not foxes, when anyone who lives in the countryside and has seen sheep attacked by a fox knows that the fox is the most dangerous of the predators in the group?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is right. Two principles emerge from what he has said. First, there is no conceptual difference between foxes on the one hand and rodents and rabbits on the other hand. Secondly, one must infer from what my hon. Friend has said that there is a great deal of ignorance among Labour Members of the facts.

I shall refer briefly to new clause 6 and then move on to the grouping. Before doing so, I shall make a final observation on new clauses 1 and 7. If the House were foolish enough to pass an exemption that had an application only within national parks, what would be the position of farmers in the immediately adjoining areas? There would be a high degree of displacement, over a period, of foxes from within national parks to adjoining farms.

I move on to new clause 6—

Mr. Ian Bruce: Before my right hon. and learned Friend does so, I have a query for him. I am grappling with the Bill and I want to use his expertise. In new clause 7, my right hon. and learned Friend has the term that someone "uses a dog for the control of foxes".

Is there an evidential link? If there are 100 people and 100 dogs in a field and a hound goes off and kills a fox, how is that hound being used by an individual? I can see no evidential link. If I were a magistrate or judge trying to work out how that person had used the dog when the dog was merely following its instinct, where would I find an evidential link?

Mr. Hogg: If one were sitting in a judicial capacity, one would ask what measure of control the individual being prosecuted retained over the hound or dog in question. If it could be said that there was real control over the dog or hound by the person being prosecuted, there would be "use" for the purpose of new clause 7 and, no doubt, that of the hon. Member for Workington.

New clause 6 relates to gun packs. I have no personal experience of gun packs, although I do know of them. I am framing my remarks in the context that I am against the Bill overall but, if we must have it, we need to retain gun packs. The hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) has been good enough to acknowledge already that, if gun packs are to be retained, as has been emphasised already by my hon. Friends, including my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh), those who shoot foxes with a shotgun must use a heavy load of shot.

I have shot a good deal in my life. I do not shoot as much now as I used to—mainly because I am going deaf and not for any reason of principle. I have seen foxes shot at and shot. It is a dismal performance. Frequently, foxes are wounded only to escape and die of gangrene. I hope that anyone who follows the arguments of the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire on gun packs will recognise the vital importance of using a heavy load of shot.

I say to the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire—not in a critical spirit—that I am cautious about the licensing concepts that he has embodied in his new clause. I am against excessive regulation and I do not know what particular authority the associations to which he has referred may possess.

All right, if we must have the Bill, we have gun packs. However, the principle that justifies gun packs also justifies fox hunting. I am much in favour of fox hunting in preference to other forms of control.

Mr. Öpik: The right hon. and learned Gentleman having raised the issue of licensing, let me say that I accept that there would be a great deal of work to do to make it workable, effective and, more than anything, fair. That would be the debate to which we should move once we had completed work on the Bill.

Mr. Hogg rose—

Mr. Gray rose—

Mr. Hogg: I give way to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Gray: I am grateful to my right hon. and learned Friend for giving way. I merely want—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There cannot be an intervention on an intervention.

Mr. Gray: My right hon. and learned Friend leapt up and then resumed his place. I was keen, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to keep myself in order.

My right hon. and learned Friend was talking about the use of shotguns for culling foxes after they had been flushed, using the Welsh gun packs. Does he agree that there is a significant and worrying trend, which is that people are talking about marksmen using high-powered rifles for the culling of foxes after they have been flushed out of deep cover by gun packs? That form of culling would be almost impossible to carry out, especially at night. There would be significant difficulties, at least in Wales, where the risk of ricochet could lead to inadvertent injury to bystanders. We should all be concerned about that.

Mr. Hogg: I do not pretend to have a knowledge of gun packs. Therefore, what I am about to say is not an informed view. However, I think that it is probably right. I should not think that rifles could be used safely in the context of a gun pack because of the long range of rifles. I possess a .22 and I am careful where I use it. I should think that, with gun packs, one could use only shotguns with a heavy load because of the limited range. Rifles are to be used in a wholly different context—for example, shooting foxes at night under licence. I should not recommend—I do not think that the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire does—using rifles with gun packs.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher and Walton): My right hon. and learned Friend is again touching on a point of principle about the role of the fox, and in my view the fox is vermin. In areas that are not as rural as many of the areas in his constituency, such as my constituency in Surrey, there is the problem of the urban fox. It would be helpful if he were to clarify the issue. There must be varied ways of controlling the fox population. Sometimes, those who oppose hunting foxes with hounds forget that the fox is vermin. They have no answer when questioned about how they would cull the fox. It needs to be made clear that the objective is to keep down the fox population. There is no reason in principle why hunting with hounds should not be one such method.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is entirely right. There must be a variety of ways in which we confront the problem of foxes where it occurs. I cannot say that I have addressed the subject of how we should deal with foxes in urban areas. Clearly, that would not involve the use of fox hounds, at least to any measurable extent. Nor, I suppose, could it involve the use of firearms of any sort. I suppose that we come down to trapping and poisoning, neither of which is an attractive option.

I move on to the grouping of the new clauses, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and make a respectful observation. Before I do so, however, I should say that the entirety of the clause that we are debating is different from the clause that was discussed on Second Reading. Clause 1 was rewritten in Committee. It follows from that that the House collectively has never debated the contents of clause 1 as it now stands.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: My right hon. and learned Friend is making an important point of principle, and I should be grateful for his help. It seems that clause 3(2) shows that the promoter and supporters of the Bill recognise that the use of dogs or hounds is necessary for controlling foxes, and that their complaint is the way in which they are used for controlling. Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree with that? Does he regard that as the only substitute for the original gun pack clause that was in the original Bill?

What would my right hon. and learned Friend say about the fact that, as would seem to be entirely sensible and proper—I support the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik)—we need gun packs but that they will no doubt chop or kill a lot of foxes in cover, which raises once again the entire question of principle in relation to the Bill?

Mr. Hogg: My right hon. and learned Friend makes two important points. Anybody who studies the Bill seriously will see that, time and again, there is compromise on the principle. The Bill explicitly recognises the right of people, for a variety of reasons, to kill foxes and, indeed, other wild mammals. Nobody has been able to provide a reasonable explanation why a distinction should be made between fox hunting, shooting foxes or the destruction and killing of other wild mammals. There is no difference of principle.

I think that my right hon. and learned Friend is flattering the supporters of the Bill, because they would not admit any compromise. The Home Office has told the Bill's supporters, "The Bill you've drafted is absurd, and to make it marginally less so, you shall have to move new clauses." That process has exposed the intellectual incredibility of the Bill, to which my right hon. and learned Friend just drew attention.

My final observation is on voting. I made the point that clause 1 has been entirely redrawn and has never been debated by the House collectively. This group contains at least four separate subjects. New clause 1 and new clause 7—

12 noon

Mr. Bennett rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put, but MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER withheld his assent, and declined then to put that Question.

Mr. Bennett: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should not want in any way to challenge your ruling, but I ask you to reconsider, before one of my colleagues moves the same Question. The minority has every right to filibuster, but the majority has the right to put the Question after the debate has continued for a reasonable time. I hope that you will agree that that point is rapidly approaching.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall certainly bear in mind, as the debate proceeds, the points that the hon. Gentleman made.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am grateful for the way in which you reacted but, with great respect, point out that we have debated the Bill for only two and a half hours. The first portion of the debate was taken up—quite properly—by the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) in moving his new clause. We are debating a wide group of new clauses, covering a number of specific and different issues, and would wish to vote on a number of those, because of the different subjects that they cover. I urge you to allow us just a little longer to debate these matters.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the points that the hon. Gentleman has made. That is precisely why I have allowed time for further debate. I suggest that we now get on with the debate.

Sir Richard Body (Boston and Skegness): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We have not touched on new clause 3, which is of great importance to an important minority. The subject was touched on only briefly in Standing Committee and on Second Reading, and it is important.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman was not in the House; we have dealt thoroughly with new clause 3.

Mr. Hawkins: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your clarification. Am I correct in my understanding that you have said that, because of the large number of different subjects in this group, there will be an opportunity for separate votes, because for those of us who—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That matter has already been dealt with.

Mr. Hogg: It might be helpful to draw attention to the different subjects covered by this group. New clause 1 was moved by the hon. Member for Workington. I tabled new clause 7. I would have no complaint about there not being a vote on new clause 7.

New clause 3, to which the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) spoke so ably, deals with mink. It is a free-standing subject.

New clause 6, which was tabled by the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire, deals with gun packs. Again, it is a free-standing subject. I support what he said about the desirability of a separate vote on that.

The hon. Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) tabled new clause 25, which deals with the terrier pack issue. That is also a free-standing issue. I suggest—it is, of course, at the discretion of the Chair—that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, allow four separate votes to cover the four distinct issues contained within this group.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: I wish to respond to the points that have been made this morning and, in so doing, shall be as brief as possible.

In response to my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), the point about national parks was dealt with adequately in Committee, but I wish to re-emphasise the point about the stock losses that are alleged to be suffered in that area. The number of sheep lost is nothing compared with the number of foxes lost through malnutrition, starvation and hypothermia. That is where the priority should be—[Interruption.]

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Foster: I have only just started my speech. I intend to be brief and I shall therefore take no interventions.

My hon. Friend the Member for Workington argued that shooting in the national park areas when hunting with dogs—

Mr. Leigh: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. More than a quarter of a million people are affected by the new clauses. During his main speech on Second Reading, the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) took hardly any interventions, and now he will take none. That shows his arrogance and his unwillingness to listen to the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is for individual hon. Members to decide whether to take interventions. It is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Foster: Conservative Members pretend to represent the countryside, whereas we all know that they do not.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it not a discourtesy to the Chair for an hon. Member to turn his back on you, Mr. Deputy Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will decide what constitutes a discourtesy.

Mr. Foster: In the summer months, when hunting on the fells does not take place with dogs, shooting is the only method available for fox control, and that is when the tourist season is at its height. I therefore dismiss the argument that dogs are necessary and that an unnecessary risk will be imposed on walkers in the national parks.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) dealt with new clause 3 and made a point about mink. Rampaging through water courses and that type of environment will clearly do spectacular damage to wildlife. Interestingly, the new clause that my hon. Friend presented to the House is so carefully drafted that it acknowledges that point in subsection (4), which says that if damage is done to wildlife, the Environment Agency should look at other ways of dealing with mink. If there are other ways of dealing with mink, which save dogs going along, let us have them. People will then not need to hunt with dogs.

The hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) made a prolonged speech. In yet another cameo appearance, he turned up briefly, made his speech and skittled off, as he did throughout the Committee stage. When I questioned him about that, he confessed that he was sitting on two Committees at the same time. That shows how much importance he placed on this Bill's Committee stage, and it is a disgrace that he is not in the Chamber now to hear my response.

The hon. Gentleman spoke nonsense about the Bill being entirely new. If one original clause is split into six new clauses, the number of clauses increases, but that hardly makes a new Bill; it simply plays with the format. He also said that we rushed through our business in Committee, yet when I tabled a new sittings motion at the 10th sitting to sit throughout the night and again the following night, Conservative Members skittled off within two hours. Indeed, the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) intervened on the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) and paid tribute to the Chair. He should have done that at the end of the Committee proceedings, but he was not there and left it to just one Conservative Member. That is not acceptable.

Several hon. Members rose—

Hon. Members: Give way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman has made it quite clear that he does not intend to give way.

Mr. Gray: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it not the convention in the House that an hon. Member gives way when he mentions another hon. Member? The hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) mentioned my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), so should he not give way?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are conventions in the House, but it is for the hon. Member who is speaking to decide whether to give way.

Mr. Foster: With regard to—

Mr. Garnier: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Foster: I have said that I will not give way.

Conservative Members complained that my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture is not present. They might like to know that he is attending a conference in Paris, discussing global agriculture. I should have thought that the friends of the countryside on the Conservative Benches would applaud his attendance, but the fact that they denigrate it shows how much they care about the British countryside—their remarks are hollow and a sham.

The hon. Member for Montgomeryshire thanked me for giving him an exemption, or, as he put it, granting him a favour. After listening to his contribution, he can rest assured that I shall grant him no more favours.

Gun packs will be allowed to shoot foxes, but allowing their dogs to chase foxes to the point of exhaustion would constitute fox hunting under another guise, which is unacceptable, and such a provision would probably be abused.

My hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) discussed terrier work, which is one of the most objectionable aspects of hunting with dogs. Masters of fox hounds have told me that they do not like the fact that terriers are stuffed down holes to flush out a fox. If those who organise and take part in hunts and get pleasure from killing wild mammals find terrier work objectionable, so much for the middle ground. Dogs become involved in fights underground or suffocate, and it is unacceptable for any hon. Member to condone such a practice.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Foster: I have said that I will not give way.

I urge the House to vote against new clauses 1, 3, 6, 7, 19 and 25.

Mr. Kevin McNamara (Hull, North) rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put, but MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER withheld his assent, and declined then to put that Question.

Mr. John Greenway (Ryedale): I am grateful for the opportunity to contribute to the debate.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) has not tabled any amendments. He refuses to accept any amendments, which suggests that he has not listened to the debate and is not prepared to admit that the Bill is defective in any way. Is that in order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Greenway: As I was saying, I am grateful for the opportunity to contribute to the debate on behalf of the official Opposition. The Bill may fail to make further progress, but we must debate the amendments because, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) said, it may progress to the other place.

The issues raised in the new clauses demonstrate the impracticality of the Bill's central objective to ban all hunting with dogs. It is open to question whether the measures proposed in the new clauses would meet all the obvious and real concerns, but clearly the Bill would be better if at least some of them were accepted.

As was made clear on Second Reading, the Bill poses an unacceptable restraint on personal liberty and freedom. It is unwise to criminalise an activity and the tens of thousands of people involved in pursuing that activity. They are law-abiding and decent people who are merely pursuing an activity that has been traditional for generations and which, as the new clauses underline, has a clear purpose—the control of pests, such as the fox and mink, and the conservation of the countryside.

New clauses 1 and 7 provide an exemption for the need to protect sheep farming or animal husbandry in national parks. A large part of the north Yorkshire moors is national park and lies in my Ryedale constituency. I concur entirely with the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) that people in national parks hunt out of necessity. Fox control is crucial to sheep farming, which is an important part of agriculture within all our national parks, which are traditional areas for lambing.

Only this week, a constituent of mine—Lorne Wilkinson, a sheep farmer who has said that I can name him—wrote a moving letter to me about his experiences of using methods of control other than hunting with dogs. While I do not want to detain the House, it is reasonable to mention that on each of the occasions when shooting or snares were used, the result was greater suffering for the fox than would have been the case had dogs been used.

[Mr. Greenway]

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham asked why new clause 1 includes only sheep. New clause 7 contains the wider definition of animal husbandry. Mr. Wilkinson's experience as a sheep farmer who also has a free-range flock of hens is that the hens, too, are susceptible to the fox and the vixen, sometimes with disastrous results.

The hon. Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) asked why only the national parks are included. New clause 19 deals with similar concerns to those that arise in the national parks, but in the context of the open countryside in general. Although clause 3 effectively grants an exemption for stag hunting, that is of little value when hunting foxes. That matter arises as a direct consequence of the Bill and has been the central issue in the debate this morning.

The Bill recognises the need to use dogs to locate or flush out a fox. The hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) showed his ignorance of these matters. Locating a fox with a dog is not the controlled and tidy exercise that the Bill suggests. We cannot manage natural instincts quite as precisely as the hon. Gentleman and the sponsors of his Bill pretend. Anti-hunt literature shows that that point is only too well appreciated as it refers to instances of dogs chasing foxes into gardens, public parks, open spaces and, occasionally, on to railway lines. Such an incident occurred in my constituency on Boxing day, when the hounds of the Saltersgate hunt, which hunts on foot in the national park, chased a fox on to the north Yorkshire moors railway line, causing a Boxing day special train to be stopped. The fox was caught and killed instantly by the hounds. Not surprisingly, some of the passengers on the train found that distasteful.

New clause 19 seeks to overcome the Bill's central tenet, because in its present form the Bill outlaws such a practice and it would have been illegal for those dogs to kill the fox, which would have had to be shot instead. That raises the question of public safety, and it is perfectly reasonable to ask whether the train would have had to be evacuated. I doubt that those who found the incident distasteful would have been reassured by the fox being shot rather than being killed by the dogs.

Mr. Gray: My hon. Friend is addressing the Bill's central absurdity—the presumption that, somehow or other, shooting a fox is more humane than killing it with hounds. That is the Bill's absurdity, and it is why the measure must fail.

Mr. Greenway: My hon. Friend makes his own point. My point is that new clause 19 seeks to allow owners and occupiers of land to require the hunt to kill the fox rather than permitting it to be shot. That is the fundamental difference. There is great merit in the proposal by my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), because the owners and occupiers of land would be responsible for the death or injury of a member of the public or perhaps for a motor accident as a result of activity on land over which they had control. If a landowner is involved in the shooting of foxes, who is liable for death or injury?

Mr. Ian Bruce: My hon. Friend asks whether shooting is acceptable to the public. He may like to know that when a golf club in my constituency decided to shoot some foxes in an urban environment, there was a petition and great protest from my constituents. Therefore, shooting is no more acceptable than hunting to the people who complain about hunting.

Mr. Greenway: My hon. Friend's point is self-explanatory.

New clause 19 would improve the Bill and should be supported. I hope that the House will be given an opportunity to vote upon it at the appropriate time.

Mr. Tom King: My intervention relates to new clause 19. Earlier in the debate, it was said that clause 3 allows stag hunting but prohibits fox hunting. I do not think that the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster), who may have been engaged on another matter when that was said, registered any reaction to that. He did not allow any interventions in his speech, but if I had been allowed to intervene, I would have asked him whether he accepted that that interpretation was correct. Can my hon. Friend elicit a response from the Minister or from the Bill's promoter as to whether that is correct?

Mr. Greenway: My right hon. Friend makes a telling point. I have studied the matter, and I am simply giving my own interpretation. It seems to me that clause 3 would allow stag hunting to continue in that it is conventional that while the dogs—

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. George Howarth): To assist the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King), I should say that clause 3, as amended in Committee, states:

"A person does not commit an offence under section 1(1) if he uses a dog to stalk a wild mammal, or to flush it from cover, for the purpose . . .

(b) of controlling the number of a particular species in a particular area, in order to safeguard the welfare of that species in the area".

I think that that is the point that the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) is trying to deal with. I should say also—although the Government are neutral on the Bill—that the situation described by the hon. Gentleman is covered in clause 6.

Mr. Greenway: We have now clearly heard the Government's view that clause 3 would allow the hunting of stags. The central point at issue is that stags are shot after having been located by dogs—I do not have stag hunting in my constituency—whereas in fox hunting, rather the fox being shot, it is normal for the hounds to kill the fox. The point that I am dealing with is the impracticality of someone with a pack of hounds or other type of dogs locating a fox and then expecting those dogs to back off while the fox is shot. That clearly will not happen.

Mr. Howarth: I should point out that clause 3(2) would require that the animal be shot rather than dealt with in some other way. Therefore, the position is not quite as described by the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Greenway: That is precisely the point that I made—the stag will be shot after having been located by dogs. Presumably, the stag would be used as food, potentially for human consumption.

Mr. Garnier: My hon. Friend candidly admitted that there is no stag hunting in his constituency; neither is there in mine. My right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) asked about the continuance of stag hunting under the Bill. My hon. Friend might apply his mind not only to clause 3(1)(b), which the Minister quoted, but to paragraph (a). Red deer is delicious to eat. That paragraph would permit the stalking of a wild mammal or its flushing from cover for the purpose of "obtaining food for human consumption", although, as the Minister was perfectly correct in saying, only if the hunter takes reasonable steps to ensure that the wild mammal is shot. That is precisely what happens with stag hounds in the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater and in other parts of Devon. Therefore, the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) has yet to get his head round—[HON. MEMBERS: "Speech."] Is it a speech? Those are words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Greenway: My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) has made precisely the point that I was making: to differentiate between locating stags with dogs—

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Hounds.

Mr. Greenway: Hounds—as my hon. Friend says—and shooting the stags; and the impracticality of using hounds to locate and flush out a fox, and then requiring that the fox be shot. Common sense tells us that hounds will dispatch the fox with all due speed long before people with guns have arrived.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: Like some of my hon. Friends, I am now totally confused about the meaning of clause 3. Like them, I thought that it would permit stag hunting. However, the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) shook his head when that provision of the Bill was stated. Will my hon. Friend try to elicit an answer from the Minister or the hon. Member for Worcester on whether clause 3 would or would not allow stag hunting?

Mr. Greenway: The matter is clearly open to interpretation. I am sure that there will be further opportunities for my right hon. and hon. Friends to raise the issue and to seek even further clarification—although one realises the difficulty of doing so when the hon. Member for Worcester refuses to take any interventions.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Greenway: I should like to make a little progress, and deal with the major benefit that would be provided by passing new clause 19.

Mr. Heseltine: I have never hunted in my life, but clause 3(2) states:

"Subsection (1) applies to a person only if he takes all reasonable steps to ensure that the wild mammal is shot as soon as possible after it is located or emerges from cover."

However, that could take a significant amount of time because the hounds will have to chase the stag and get it at bay—that is the whole point—where it can be safely shot. The courts will have huge difficulties in trying to interpret whether the shooting took place as quickly as possible. Either the clause is so loosely drafted as to be impossible, or it does not include the possibility of the stag being shot as quickly as possible. Are there to be marksmen trying to shoot the running stag? That is an indication of the nonsense of the clause.

Mr. Bennett rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

Question put, That the Question be now put:—

The House proceeded to a Division—

Sir Peter Emery (seated and covered): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. May I ask you to cast your eye over Standing Order No. 36(1) which clearly states that if a closure is granted, it must not infringe the rights of the minority? Five new clauses are being debated, each with an entirely different subject. That means that each subject has been granted slightly under 35 minutes, which certainly does not seem to be fair or proper. The new clauses were taken together for the convenience of the House, but that should not mean that the rights of the minority are infringed. Might I suggest, therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we call off the Division and allow the minority a little more than 35 minutes' debate on each new clause?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Standing Order gives the Chair the discretion to decide on these matters, and I have decided that I will accept the closure motion.

Sir Peter Emery (seated and covered): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I see that you did not cast your eye over Standing Order No. 36(1), so may I have your assurance that before we move on to a further debate, you will do so, so that in future we are certain that the point has been taken on board by the Chair?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have noted the right hon. Gentleman's point.

Mr. Bennett (seated and covered): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Do you not find it remarkable that well over 100 hon. Members have been able to vote in the Aye Lobby, yet it appears that hon. Members are still delaying the vote in the No Lobby? Is not that another example of the filibustering that has been going on today, and will you take steps to ensure that they vote at a reasonable speed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is always essential that Members vote at a reasonable speed.

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (seated and covered): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. How long will it take to clear the Lobbies? It seems to be taking much longer than usual.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already dealt with that point of order. Perhaps the Serjeant at Arms will check whether there are any reasons for the delay.

Question accordingly negatived.

Sir Patrick Cormack: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I fully understand that we are now to debate new clause 2, but I would be grateful for your guidance and clarification. The previous debate was cut short by the supporters of the Bill, one of whom moved the closure which your predecessor in the Chair, understandably, felt he had to accept. I must point out that that prevented my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) from completing his speech dealing with important issues, such as firearms, from the Front Bench. It also prevented the Minister from giving his advice on clause 3 and other matters to the House. That underlines the importance of having, at the proper time, individual votes on all the amendments grouped together with new clause 1. I would be grateful for your assurance that that will happen as and when we come to the new clauses.

Mr. McNamara: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I understand the point that the hon. Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) is making, but it is purely and simply at the discretion of the Chair whether the closure should be accepted or not. To make an implied criticism of the Deputy Speaker, as the hon. Gentleman has done—and to do so from the Opposition Front Bench—is disturbing.

Mr. Heseltine: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Gentleman makes an important point; it is a matter for the discretion of the Chair. However, in the distinguished exercise of your authority in the Chair, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the fact is that you will wish to take account of the interests of Back Benchers. If they have been denied the opportunity to express themselves fully on these matters, and if they have not had the benefit of the Minister's reply and advice, surely it must be legitimate for them to ask to express their views by a formal vote when the time comes.

Mr. Garnier: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. At about 11.50 am, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) moved that the Question be put. Fortunately, your predecessor in the Chair decided not to accept the motion at that time. In future, Mr. Deputy Speaker, would you bear it in mind that had that motion been accepted at that time, the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) would not have been able to reply to many of the points made during the debate, let alone the Minister and one of my hon. Friends on the Opposition Front Bench?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is turning into a debate. There is a simple point of order to be determined. It is in the Chair's discretion to decide at the appropriate time whether a separate Division is to be taken on a new clause or amendment that was part of a group. That will fall to be determined, in the case of new clause 3, after we have dealt with the next group of amendments.

New clause 2

POWER TO AMEND

'.—(1) The Secretary of State may by order made by statutory instrument amend any of the provisions of sections 1 and 8 to 13 so as to reduce the activities prohibited by section 1 or the powers and penalties in respect of any offence.

(2) An order under subsection (1) shall not be made unless a draft has been laid before, and approved by, each House of Parliament.'—[Mr. Luff.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Mr. Luff: I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following: New clause 20—Power to amend section 1—

'(1) The Secretary of State may, by Order made by Statutory Instrument, amend any of the provisions of section 1 so as to change the activities prohibited by section 1.

(2) An Order made under subsection (1) shall not be made unless a draft has been laid before, and approved by, each House of Parliament.'.

Mr. Luff: I think that the House will agree that we had an exceptionally reasoned and well-informed debate on the previous group of new clauses, with the sole exception of the lamentable, ill-tempered and inadequate speech by the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster). The hon. Gentleman made one of the worst speeches that I have heard in the House—if not the worst. That is important in relation to the new clause, because as the hon. Gentleman worked himself up into an extraordinary lather of hatred against anyone who dared put a reasoned point to him, he revealed the passions that underlie this debate on hunting—at least on the Labour Benches, largely.

If the Bill proceeds—I hope sincerely that it does not in its current form, as I am sure the hon. Member for Worcester realises—there must be some mechanism within it to adjust its provisions in the light of the passions to which I have referred, in the light of the developing knowledge of hunting, in the light of the effect of a ban on the countryside and in the light of developments in our scientific understanding of what is involved.

Mr. Hawkins: My hon. Friend has mentioned the extraordinarily bad speech by the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster). Does he agree that it is extremely surprising that the hon. Gentleman, on Second Reading, allowed hardly any interventions? I sought to intervene twice, as Hansard records, but he would take no interventions from Conservative Members. Does that not show extraordinary intolerance, and an assumption that only he and his supporters can be right, and that 284,000 people last Sunday—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not sure whether the hon. Gentleman is helping the House. He has raised a matter that clearly goes outside the scope of the amendments.

Mr. Luff: I understand what you say, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I will not respond to the intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins).

The inability of the hon. Member for Worcester to respond to the many important points made during the previous debate underlines the importance of new clause 2. Ultimately, we did not have a debate on the previous group of new clauses. Instead, we had a series of speeches in favour of them, with no reasoned argument against them. I believe that reasoned argument will emerge in favour of many of the points made by my right hon. and hon. Friends and by others outside the House. That is why the new clause is so important to the future progress of the Bill.

The Bill has aroused huge passions in my constituency—passions which, I regret to say, the hon. Member for Worcester has unleashed. One of my constituents was terrified at the weekend when a group of protesters hurled abuse at her at the kennels of the Worcestershire hunt. She said:

"Later about 20 demonstrators decided to come down here. They were shouting 'scum' and 'you should fall off your horse tomorrow and break your neck or die from cancer' at me. I was terrified."

That was because the organisers of the protest had chosen to go to the kennels when all the men would be away in London for the countryside march. Julian Barnfield, the Worcestershire huntsman, is quoted in yesterday's edition of Worcester Evening News as saying:

"My little girls are four and eight—we very nearly didn't take them with us on the march, but thank God we did . . . They would have been terrified."

That is the nature of the behaviour of many supporters of the Bill. These are passions that we must seek to control.

The hon. Member for Worcester never listens to this sort of argument, and that is why the new clause is so important. If he had listened to the arguments that those of us who have severe reservations about the Bill advanced, he might have been able to cope with many of the difficulties that could arise if the Bill were ever enacted. The trouble is that the hon. Gentleman does not even answer letters. I am one of his constituents, and I write to him regularly. Generally, I receive letters with rubber stamps rather than a signature at the bottom. I noticed that he sat giggling throughout most of the debate on the previous group of new clauses. He was not listening. He is smiling and smirking even now. These are serious issues with serious consequences for many of my constituents.

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): Does my hon. Friend agree that it is extraordinarily difficult for us to fashion proper legislation, which is our prime responsibility, when the promoter of the Bill will not allow any interventions to permit dialogue, and will not allow sufficient time for the Minister to guide the House in its deliberations? Does my hon. Friend accept that it is frustrating for us as legislators, particularly when considering private Members' Bills, to be denied proper dialogue and the proper mechanisms by which to try to improve and fashion legislation?

Mr. Luff: I agree entirely. At the risk of repeating myself, that is why new clause 2 is so important. It is the failure of the hon. Member for Worcester to engage in proper and constructive dialogue that makes the new clause so important.

Mr. Tom King: My hon. Friend will have heard my interventions on stag hunting. An unfair question was asked: whether stag hunting would be permitted or excluded under the Bill. It does not matter what the hon. Member for Worcester thinks; he is the temporary trustee of the Bill. What matters is what ends up in legislation.

I do not want to embarrass the Minister, but I am not clear who is taking responsibility for the Bill. We have not had a speech from him to answer some of the legal queries. I do not blame the hon. Member for Worcester, as he is a new Member and it is a tough assignment to take up, but I do not know what back-up he has. Where is the legal advice to say whether the queries raised will be answered?

This is almost becoming a point of order. We must have proper legal guidance when considering a Bill. We know, as do you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with your experience, that the House has an unfortunate reputation for passing rather bad legislation that has to be sorted out afterwards.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The right hon. Gentleman, whose experience is also considerable, might know that he is encouraging his hon. Friend to go wide of this group of new clauses and amendments.

Mr. Luff: My right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) made an exceptionally serious point. In no way do I wish to challenge the Chair, but it was regrettable that we did not hear at length from the Minister during the debate on the previous group of new clauses. The fact that we did not hear from him underlines the need for new clause 2. When the Minister reads the report of the earlier debate, he will see that my hon. Friends—and my honorary hon. Friends the Members for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) and for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey)—made important points that were not addressed. That may make the Bill unworkable, and certainly deeply regrettable.

The Home Secretary will not have the luxury that the hon. Member for Worcester enjoys. He will have to listen to the voice of reason or he will be in trouble politically—possibly even legally. I suspect that he would be grateful if he were given powers to deal with the Bill's inadequacies.

New clause 2 is a modest attempt to conciliate. Those of us who support the so-called middle way approach have made a rather more ambitious attempt to conciliate, which we hope will be discussed next week if we debate the Bill again next Friday. The new clause attempts to conciliate at the margins by smoothing some of the Bill's rough edges—or at least giving the Secretary of State the chance to do so.

We are not seeking to undermine the Bill in any way through the new clause, which genuinely builds on a provision already in the Bill to give the Secretary of State power to amend the Act in respect of exemptions. There is already a precedent in the Bill for the new clause.

I regret that many important issues in the previous group of new clauses were not addressed. I had hoped to speak about the use of terriers by gamekeepers. That is an important issue and relates to new clause 25, but there was no opportunity to debate it because the debate was truncated. Some issues could not be voiced because of the early closure.

We did not have an adequate response from the Minister, although he did make a helpful attempt, for which I am grateful, to deal with a point that had been raised. It was helpful, and I was glad to see him engage in debate. However, if he sits on the Front Bench and rises only when he finds it absolutely essential to do so, he will enhance the necessity for this new clause and greatly enhance the need to amend the legislation by statutory instrument.

1.15 pm

I am wearing a lifeboat badge, which I bought this morning—I believe that Lifeboat day is tomorrow. In a sense, I am offering the hon. Member for Worcester a lifeboat. The new clauses tabled by the hon. Members for Montgomeryshire and for Vauxhall are effectively lifeboat clauses as they could enable him to get the Bill on to the statute book. If he does not accept them, he will probably fail to do so.

I must make it perfectly clear that I have never even been on a horse in my life—except for about 30 seconds on my sister-in-law's horse, which was not a comfortable experience—let alone on a hunt, but I know huntsmen much better than the hon. Gentleman does. Unless he removes his blinkered prejudice towards those who hunt and those who speak up for hunting, he will find that he needs that lifeboat desperately, and I urge him to clamber on board. More seaworthy lifeboats will come along later, but this one will at least give him a chance of survival.

The hon. Gentleman's choice is whether to go down in glory with a Bill that fails, and therefore betrays the animal welfare lobby on whose behalf he claims to speak, or perhaps to get something on to the statute book. The House and the other place would take a different view of the Bill if it contained a clause of this nature. As it stands, the Bill is excessive. It contradicts everything that the House stands for in respect of personal liberty and freedom.

Mr. Swayne: While I accept that the Bill is wholly repugnant, is it so repugnant that we should countenance the awful principle that secondary legislation can amend primary legislation, which is effectively what my hon. Friend seeks?

Mr. Luff: To be entirely honest, I find the procedure unsatisfactory, but I would not have tabled the new clause had I not felt it essential to deal with abuse of the Bill. I do not want the Bill as drafted to reach the statute book, but there is scope for compromise. The Bill could reach the statute book and help the cause of animal welfare without inhibiting personal freedom. Sadly, the hon. Member for Worcester shows no sign of listening to that argument. I hope that, over the next few days, he will reflect on what has been said today and come round to our way of thinking.

Jacqui Smith (Redditch): Stop patronising.

Mr. Luff: I have been patronised by those on the other side of this argument for years and I am fed up with it. This is a clear statement of objective fact. I quote in my aid the Home Secretary during the Firearms (Amendment) Bill on 18 June 1997. He began by quoting what he had said on Second Reading of the Bill. He said that the House had > "'to be very careful before we use our power to prohibit actions that were previously lawful and involved no criminal intent. Simple disapproval can never be a ground alone for prohibition.' . . . I have repeated that statement because it is applicable to today's debate and will be applicable to future debates. It is a principle to which I and the Government of which I am a member seek to work whenever we address the difficult questions of balancing the personal liberty of law-abiding people against wider issues".—[Official Report, 18 June 1997; Vol. 296, c. 399.]

The Home Secretary was right. I do not deny for a minute that the House has a duty to protect animal welfare. I oppose the Bill because it will reduce animal welfare. However, we have a duty to stand up for civil liberties, and the Bill's draconian nature simply does not do that; it demands some new checks and balances.

I hear what my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) says and I share his constitutional reservations about the procedure proposed in the new clause, but it is the only procedure open to the House to deal with the problem. If the hon. Member for Worcester has the wisdom to accept the new clause, he may save his Bill by allowing some variants if, specifically and most importantly, it is shown that the Bill is in conflict with the European convention on human rights. I find it extraordinary that the House is currently considering two Bills—this and the Human Rights Bill—that could stand in sharp contradiction. There is increasingly well-informed speculation that the Government believe that the Bill will contravene the European convention on human rights which they are seeking to incorporate into British law. The Minister may give the hon. Member for Worcester a nod and a wink, and say, "Mike, take this on the chin, because that will give us the opportunity to avoid that potential conflict."

Mr. Gray: My hon. Friend will have seen today's reports in The Times and The Daily Telegraph that the Home Secretary has announced that this or any other Bill to ban fox hunting will not be given Government time, which all Conservative Members welcome. Has that announcement been made because of the conflict with the Human Rights Bill?

Mr. Luff: I welcome the newspaper reports, but would not want to ascribe motives to the Government. The hon. Member for Worcester should reflect seriously on the arguments for the new clause. The Home Secretary's remarks to The Times are on the record, so the hon. Gentleman must do some serious thinking or he will have wasted hours of his time that would have been better spent serving his constituents.

Mr. Garnier: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for mentioning the European convention on human rights and the Human Rights Bill, which is shortly to go to a Committee of the whole House. The hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) has yet to get his head round how the Bill might infringe article 1, which deals with protection of property, article 8, which deals with the right to respect for private life, and article 11, which deals with freedom of assembly and association. Can my hon. Friend assist him?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) will not proceed in such a way. We are discussing the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill.

Mr. Hogg: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. New clause 2 would enable the House to take account of the important matter of whether the Bill infringes the European convention on human rights. Is not it highly desirable that you should not accept a closure motion until the Minister tells us whether the Bill defies the convention?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hear the right hon. and learned Gentleman, but the Chair will decide on the matter at the appropriate time.

Mr. Luff: I do not pretend to be a lawyer, like my distinguished hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), and I do not pretend to understand the complex implications of the convention.

Mr. Garnier: I do not pretend to be a lawyer; I am a lawyer.

Mr. Luff: I bow to my hon. and learned Friend's superior legal knowledge and deep understanding, and hope that he gets many clients for a long time to come. I shall conclude my remarks on any link between the convention and the Bill.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) is right.

Mr. George Howarth: Hon. Members have asked whether the hunting ban proposed in the Bill would breach the European convention on human rights. The hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) mentioned articles 1 and 8. I understand that no one would be deprived of his or her property if the Bill were enacted—therefore, the Bill does not contravene article 1—and that although article 8 is broad in scope, a ban on hunting with dogs would not contravene it. The concerns raised by the hon. and learned Gentleman do not apply. I should also say that the Government remain neutral on the issue.

Mr. Hogg: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We are glad to have heard from the Minister, but he made an intervention which means that he cannot be asked questions. Will you give him the opportunity to make a speech, which would allow hon. Members to question him?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a matter for the Chair. Those hon. Members who want to participate will seek to catch my eye.

Mr. Luff: I have reluctantly decided to expand my remarks, because the matter is clearly important to hon. Members.

I am grateful to the Minister for his helpful remarks. He may be right to say that the articles would not be contravened, but I am advised that he may be wrong. Article 1, which deals with protection of property, and article 8, which deals with the right to private life, are relevant.

There is also an argument that article 11, on the freedom of association and assembly, might apply. I am told that those articles must be read with article 14, which prohibits discrimination on any grounds in respect of the substantive rights offered under the convention. The most important part of that article is the provision that prevents the selective invocation of public interest to justify legislation that prohibits the activities of one particular minority, but leaves alone other comparable activities. That is an important point in the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. Dominic Grieve (Beaconsfield): My hon. Friend touched on the precise point that goes to the heart of the human rights convention. Unless the bans proposed in the Bill can be justified on rational grounds, and not on illogical grounds that appear to discriminate, the Bill will fall foul of the convention.

Mr. Luff: That is an important and serious point.

Article 1 deals with the right to property. We must remember that hunting takes place predominantly on private land. The Bill would fundamentally interfere with the right of individuals to choose how to use their private property.

Sir Brian Mawhinney (North-West Cambridgeshire): I am trusting to my memory here; I do not claim that it is infallible, but I think that on this occasion, it is right. I think that there is a clause in the Human Rights Bill, which will come before a Committee of the whole House before long, that provides that if the Bill becomes law, it will be incumbent on the Government, before the introduction of any piece of legislation, to give the House authoritative legal advice on the standing of that legislation vis-a-vis the convention. My right hon. and learned Friends the Members for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) and for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) are nodding to show that my memory of the Human Rights Bill is correct.

In the light of that, and given that the Government hope that the Bill will be law before too long, perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) should encourage the Minister—subject to the wishes of the Chair—to wait until next Friday to make his speech. He could then give us the authoritative legal advice on this issue, which in principle the Government are willing to do because it is part of the provisions in the Human Rights Bill. Should the Minister decide to make his speech today, or should the Chair decide to accept a closure motion before the end of the day, my hon. Friend should ask the Minister to rise on a point of order next Friday and satisfy us on this legal point.

Mr. Luff: That was more a point of order than an intervention, but I wish strongly to associate myself with my right hon. Friend's remarks. He made a powerful and convincing case. It is a shame that these issues were not explored in the Standing Committee—

Sir Nicholas Lyell: My hon. Friend is touching on an important aspect. He will be aware, as will the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster), that this is a criminal Bill. Clause 1(2) provides not only for the person who is hunting to be criminally liable, but for the owner of the land vicariously to be criminally liable. Clause 2(c) provides that something done has an effect on criminality. The whole question of ownership of property ties in with the human rights aspects in an important way. We need to hear from the Minister on that at some point.

"at the request of the owner"

Mr. Luff: My right hon. and learned Friend makes a valuable contribution to the debate on an important point.

[Mr. Luff]

I want to highlight the Bill's potential impact on farmers, who will be denied the right to choose how to control pests on their land. That may be a breach of the first protocol of article 1 of the convention, but also of article 8 on respect for private life. I understand that the convention draws that aspect very widely, and it has been said that that should reflect many facets of moral and social issues in our pluralistic society. Hunting plays a crucial part in social recreation, as well as in the economic and farming life of rural Britain. For those reasons, I think that article 8 will probably also apply.

The Bill could be challenged because of the lack of a sufficiently clearly defined public interest ground. There is no public interest ground for the Bill—it flies in the face of true public interest. There is also the absence of a specific ground for intervention, which applies under article 8. There is no necessity for the Bill; in fact, there is a necessity not to have the Bill as it will reduce animal welfare. There is a lack of proportionality, which is important, and there is discrimination under article 14 of the convention.

I understand that because it is not a Government Bill, the legislation would have a lower status in Strasbourg, and would be lower in the pecking order and more liable to challenge. I did not intend to make those points, but the Minister prompted me to make them, and it is important to place them on the record. The Minister must address them in the House before we vote on the new clause.

1.30 pm

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I ask my hon. Friend to reinforce that point. We have been told several times that the Home Office has redrafted some of the clauses. I do not know whether that is correct, but if it is, it means that the Government are taking an unusual degree of responsibility for the Bill, and it is important to know the amount of responsibility that they are taking. No doubt the Minister will tell us about that.

Mr. Luff: My right hon. and learned Friend's intervention, with which I agree, speaks for itself.

New clause 2 could save the House and the Government a great deal of difficulty. There were great hopes that the Prime Minister might reconsider his position on a royal commission or some other sort of independent inquiry on the future of hunting. I do not think that the right hon. Gentleman completely ruled that out at Prime Minister's Question Time a few weeks ago. I sincerely hope that he did not.

I think that it was my hon. Friend for the purpose of this debate, the Member for Vauxhall, who said that it was remarkable to be considering such draconian legislation without the results of a serious inquiry by the Government or any other body. Such an inquiry could produce new evidence or might authenticate the evidence that we claim exists in opposition to the Bill. That could require the Secretary of State to make changes so that he can sleep comfortably if he believes what he said about civil liberties during the passage of the Bill that led to the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997.

The Bill criminalises an act that is proper and acceptable in certain circumstances that are not materially different from circumstances that it condemns. That poses huge problems of interpretation for the courts. I am sure that the Home Secretary will want a power to amend some parts of the Bill. It contradicts the principles of natural justice, proposes disproportionate penalties and has no provision for compensation for those whom it will affect. Because it is a private Member's Bill, the measure cannot deal with money issues. To put before the House a Bill that does not allow for compensation is fundamentally wrong. A major part of our deliberations on the firearms legislation was on that topic.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is speaking about compensation. Is he aware that the European convention on human rights has established that those who are dispossessed of property are entitled to compensation? That may be yet another way in which the Bill would transgress that convention. If fox hunting were ever abolished, it would probably have to be done by Government legislation because of that requirement for compensation.

Mr. Luff: My right hon. and learned Friend makes an important point of which I was not aware. It leads me to wonder whether the Bill is acceptable under the private Member's Bill procedure when, technically, such a measure should have a compensation provision, which would, of course, make it ineligible for that procedure. I hope that the Minister will reflect on that before next week.

The Bill's definitions of offences are inadequate. Who are the criminals? It may not be a serious point, but there is no distinction between dogs and bitches. The Secretary of State may want power to amend those definitions.

Mr. Paterson rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It would assist everyone if the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) would show that he is giving way.

Mr. Luff: I indicated with my hand, but not with my voice. I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Paterson: It might help my hon. Friend to know that in Committee, we continually pressed the Bill's supporters to understand that on a wet, windy afternoon in Market Drayton a magistrate will have to interpret the legislation and someone may go to gaol. In the Bill's first and second incarnations, the words "hunt" and "hunts" appear in the first line, and at no stage could the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) give a definition of that fundamental word. It was left to the "common sense" of magistrates.

Mr. Luff: My hon. Friend shows why it is so important for the Secretary of State to have power to vary the Bill's effect and impact if it were to become law.

In the past, the debate in the country about the purpose of hunting has been sterile. It is about pest control and dispersal, but as a country sport, it brings pleasure to people. There is no contradiction there. It also brings important benefits to the environment and supports employment in remote rural areas. In addition, it has social benefits. At some stage, the Home Secretary may well want to reflect on those benefits and on powers to reduce the impact of this legislation.

I am convinced that, if we deal with the concerns of most people in this country, we can isolate the extremists, and develop legislation that will give hunting an acceptability that I accept it probably currently lacks in some people's mind. That would be a huge step forward, and the House would be able to debate issues more important than fox hunting. New clause 2 would give the Secretary of State powers to amend legislation in the light of knowledge and developing concern, and I commend it to the House.

Mr. Heseltine: The essence of our debate is the differences between clause 7 and new clauses 2 and 20—all three of which are effectively Henry VIII clauses. My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) has already made the important point that, if we take the Bill at face value, we will be passing primary legislation and giving to this Parliament, or to a subsequent one, the ability by order to change the Bill's entire purpose. Everyone will admit that clause 1(1) states the Bill's essence—to ban hunting. Therefore, in a future deliberation, Parliament could by order alter the Bill's fundamental purpose.

Allowing a new Act to be designed by secondary legislation is an undesirable technique. If we replace section 1(1), we shall change the Bill's entire substance without any of the deliberative processes of a Committee stage and Report stage, which allow the House to scrutinise legislation. Change would be made by a simple resolution of the House after minimal debate. The House has been reluctant to use Henry VIII clauses and the other place has been almost insistent that they should not be used.

Clause 7(1) admits the possibility that it may be necessary not to amend the details—as that is precluded by clause 7(1)—but to destroy the Bill or to amend it substantially. Is it just possible that the more relevant powers that the House should consider are new clauses 2 and 20, which deal with the House's ability to deal with the Bill's detail?

I was not a member the Standing Committee that considered the Bill. After listening with some care to most of what has been said in this debate, that does not cause me great concern, except in one material sense: one does not get the impression that the Committee's conduct was of the highest standards of constitutional practice.

Mr. Ian Cawsey (Brigg and Goole): It was on our side.

Mr. Heseltine: I understand the point that the hon. Gentleman makes: on his side, the conduct was of the highest standards of constitutional practice. How does he square that with precluding debate on virtually anything other than the Bill's first provisions, tearing up the part of the Bill that had been thoroughly debated, and then relying on the Government to replace the substance of the original Bill with a totally new set of provisions? Has he the effrontery to suggest that that is best constitutional practice? He has not been an hon. Member for long but, if that is the basis on which his constitutional judgment rests, he has not fully understood the great traditions that make this the mother of Parliaments. However, he may come round to it. If he would listen to the arguments that my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire has so eloquently made, and to which I hope to add, he will understand the substance of what we are saying.

Basically, we do not like Henry VIII powers. The Bill's supporters understand that, on the Bill's substantive issue, it is necessary to have the ability totally to destroy it. That shows me that there is some unease in the minds of the Bill's supporters. It has apparently occurred to them that they might have got it wrong. Indeed, it has been proved beyond peradventure that they did get it monumentally wrong, which is why the Home Office had to get involved to get it right.

The problem with that, to which my Front-Bench colleagues have drawn attention, is that the Home Office is silent. It has done the work, the thinking and the planning and it has written the notes on clauses, but the only people who cannot share in all that are Members of Parliament. We cannot hear what the Minister has to say. He gives no sign and makes no intervention. Were I a Minister in this Government—heaven forfend—I would want to be eloquent on behalf of the officials who have contributed so much to the Bill.

Mr. Grieve: Is not that silence all the more remarkable given that, on Second Reading, the Minister told the House, first, that the Government were neutral and, secondly, that neither they nor he could see any reason why, with a bit of co-operation, a proper Bill could not be put on the statute book?

Mr. Heseltine: New Labour, new legislation. The fact is that Home Office officials have been deeply involved in the Bill.

Mr. Garnier: My right hon. Friend should not be surprised by the internal contradiction in clause 7. There is another contradiction in the fact that the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) says that he is in favour of animal welfare, yet the Bill permits exemptions which would promote the sorts of activities of which he so heartily disapproves.

Mr. Heseltine: My hon. and learned Friend is better versed in the detail of the Bill and I shall listen with great interest when he expands his arguments later.

I find it very difficult to understand how there is to be a Henry VIII clause that allows the Bill to be substantially wrecked but which does not allow the House to deal with subsections (2) to (5) of clause 1. We can do what we like with clause 1(1), but we can do nothing about subsection (2), which refers to an owner or occupier of land committing an offence

"if he permits another person to enter or use that land to hunt in contravention of subsection (1)."

I do not know how such matters are defined. If someone happens to cross the threshold of a farmer's land and the farmer does not actually tell him not to, perhaps because his permission was not sought, is he committing an offence? If the farmer has not put up fences, is he deemed to have permitted the person to use his land? Who is to determine such things? The House cannot other than by new substantive legislation.

Clause 1(3) refers to the owner or keeper of a dog. Apparently, someone who has a dog commits an offence if he permits another person to use that dog. I do not know what kind of dogs other hon. Members have, but mine are not under such control. If someone whistled at my dog and encouraged it to do something, I could not guarantee that I could force it to resist.

Mr. Hogg: My right hon. Friend was talking about clause 7, wholly correctly, but does he agree that the real vice of that clause is that it enables the Secretary of State by order to remove the exemptions to clause 1? In other words, by order, the Secretary of State can extend the range of criminal offences and the number and class of people to whom those offences will apply.

Mr. Heseltine: I understand what my right hon. and learned Friend says. That shows the complexities of the matter before us. The second—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. or hon. Gentleman who has brought a phone into the Chamber should take it out immediately. [Interruption.] I suspect that the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) must be grateful for my intervention; otherwise, we might never have known.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no doubt that I am grateful, but the person making the call probably is not.

Clause 7(1) is extremely restrictive. If there are to be Henry VIII powers, I see no reason why they should not cover other parts of the Bill that deal with penalties, confiscation and so on.

I should like to make a further point that is borne out by my own experience of dealing with such issues. In 1981, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King)—who is not here—and I were responsible for steering the Wildlife and Countryside Bill through the House. As the House knows, I have never hunted in my life and it is extremely unlikely that I shall do so now.

My particular interest in the Wildlife and Countryside Bill was the conservation of bird life, as I am interested in bird watching. I contacted the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, explained that we were introducing a comprehensive Wildlife and Countryside Bill to protect bird life and asked for advice on what needed to be done. By and large, we reached agreement with the RSPB on what was necessary for the conservation of birds.

1.45 pm

The Act is now almost 20 years old; at the time, it was considered a pace-setting measure for conservation. However, nobody had foreseen the plagues of Canada geese and magpies or the inland penetration of cormorants. Those developments have transformed the conservation issue. I have no factual evidence. I have seen surveys, but I do not call them in aid. Nobody will ever persuade me that the plague of magpies that now affects virtually every part of the country is not an incomparably more damaging threat to the migrants whose eggs we were trying to protect in 1981 than anything little boys pinching eggs could do.

I live in the heart of England, where there are now cormorants. As everyone knows, they attack fish indiscriminately, but at the time of the Wildlife and Countryside Bill, they were never seen in that part of England. Black-headed gulls are everywhere. That was not the case 20 years ago. The issue that the hon. Member for Worcester, with his contemptuous dismissal of any argument that he does not like, has to face is that it is very difficult to deal with the balance of nature. In the end, only one force—the human one—can preserve that balance for some of the animals that we are considering today. The more one denies that, the more forces will be allowed to threaten other parts of the natural chain. I advocate the ability to make legislative changes to reflect that because I went through the same process 20 years ago for similar reasons to those that I suspect motivate the hon. Member for Worcester. I am very aware that, having produced that legislation, we now hardly have the capacity to control the increasing plagues of predators that have developed as a consequence.

I was interested in what the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) said. Although I knew nothing about pack hunting when I came to the House today, it struck me as a classic example of the changes that the House could want to make.

All the advocates of the Bill must know that the wildlife listed in the Bill will be culled. That is not in serious dispute. The issue is how it is done. Some of the means are illegal and I suspect that there will be an increase in illegal culling because people's livelihoods will be at risk. They may be fined or imprisoned, but they will do it because their livelihoods will be at risk.

Let us assume that people will resort to the legal method—shooting. That means either that there will be exactly the same amount of shooting as there is now, in which case there will be less culling, or there will be more shooting. Let us assume that there will be more shooting. Will it have anything to do with what might be called risk? If there are more guns and more people shooting, will there not be a greater danger that somebody will get hurt or killed? The Bill gives us no powers to deal with that, because we may deal with section 1(1) only. One could easily conceive of a situation in which a Government would say, "We know that culling is necessary and we acknowledge that the only real alternative is shooting, so we want a regulatory system to contain shooting." However, I do not think that one could introduce a regulatory provision under this provision; doing so would be an abuse of the legislation as currently drafted.

My hon. Friends have made an extremely reasonable proposal, and I was among those who tabled new clause 20. We are trying to give a subsequent Parliament—or the present Parliament in later years—the ability to put right what is generally agreed to have gone wrong.

We do not want to wreck the Bill; no one will be obliged to use those purely voluntary powers. The proponents of the Bill need not worry as long as they have a majority in the House, because they will not allow the amending legislation to pass; they have agreed that there should be amending legislation, but only to a narrow part of the Bill.

I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire was right to say that, if the proponents of the Bill want to make progress, they should accept new clause 2. What is the fuss? No one can use the powers against their will. They must admit that such powers could be necessary in certain circumstances, because they have incorporated them in the Bill. We simply say to them, "Why not give yourselves more flexibility?"

Mr. Hogg: I shall speak to amendments Nos. 53 and 54, which stand in my name. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I repeat what I said to you on 1 May—that I oppose the Bill root and branch because it infringes civil liberties. I have tabled these amendments only because if there must be a Bill—I hope that there will not—it had better be a better Bill than that which stands before the House.

Clause 7, to which my two amendments apply, gives the power to amend the exceptions under clause 1(1). It gives the Secretary of State the power by order

"to remove, amend or add exceptions to section 1(1)."

I outlined to my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) the consequences of that power. It would be possible for the Secretary of State to use the power under clause 7 to remove, or to transform fundamentally, all the exceptions that the Bill provides. Moreover, that process would be done by statutory instrument.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: My right hon. and learned Friend is focusing on a very important legislative principle. Does his argument lead him to point out that that would enable the Secretary of State to create new criminal offences by secondary legislation?

Mr. Hogg: My right hon. and learned Friend is wholly right; that is the point that I am trying to make. I want to be fair to the Minister, who may have been responsible for the clause, and at least welcome the fact that the amending power is by way of affirmative resolution procedure—that is to say, there must be a debate in the House and the order must be approved by both Houses. That is welcome as far as it goes, but the Minister will forgive me if I say to him that that procedure allows only 90 minutes of debate in the House and that the terms of the order are not amendable.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), the former Attorney-General, is wholly right when he says that the clause enables new offences to be created by secondary legislation. I fundamentally oppose that, on principle. I know that, on occasion, the Government of which I was a member created new offences by secondary legislation. We have all done it far too often. As a general principle, we should not create offences or obligations by secondary legislation unless it is absolutely necessary, because the debate is limited and there is no ability to amend.

The narrow purpose of amendments Nos. 53 and 54 is to remove some of the evil that I believe lies in clause 7. If the amendments are agreed to, the Secretary of State could only add to the exceptions, not remove them. That is an unsatisfactory process, but I would rather that he used the powers in the clause to increase the exceptions than for any other purpose. That was the spirit in which I tabled the two amendments.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: I shall first respond to the comments of Opposition Members. The hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) is indeed one of my constituents. Perhaps I should remind the House why: last year, he valiantly joined the chicken run. That may be why he is so keen to persecute foxes—he fears that he is under threat—but I assure him that the best way to deal with a fox that is chasing him is a quick shot; he may have had his day by the time the timetabled hunt arrives.

Mr. Luff: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Foster: I shall certainly give way to my constituent.

Mr. Luff: May I encourage the hon. Gentleman to raise the tone of his comments and address the serious issues.

Mr. Foster: In the few remarks that I have made so far, I have raised the tone of the debate higher than the level to which the hon. Gentleman brought it.

Mr. Crispin Blunt (Reigate): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Foster: No. I want to make some progress.

Hon. Members say that we failed to engage in proper dialogue. That is a bit rich, given that we are also accused of taking too long in Committee, when we rightly had proper dialogue. I cannot get a grip of Conservative Members' contradictory arguments.

Mr. Gray: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Foster: I want to make some progress first, if possible.

The hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire said that the new clause represents an offer of a lifeboat, but the Titanic would be a more appropriate offer of help. Clause 7 already provides the Secretary of State with powers to change by statutory instrument—however unsatisfactory that may be—the exemptions from the express offence of hunting.

The new clause would allow the penalties, the level of forfeiture and interpretation of the Bill to be changed by statutory instrument. That is not acceptable, although I accept that a future Secretary of State could change the level of forfeiture and what is meant by the offence if we allow him such flexibility.

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Gentleman is relying on clause 7, but if he examined the new clause more closely he would see that the amending power relates exclusively to exceptions, not to the generality of the issue, about which my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) and my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) have spoken.

Mr. Foster: The clause was written in that way deliberately—I do not think that there is anything wrong with that.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Foster: May I first make a little progress?

The hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire mentioned dispossession of property, but the Bill would not dispossess owners of their dogs—it would not prevent kennels from having dogs. It would, however, stop people using those dogs to chase wild mammals. People could still use dogs to follow an artificial scent; they could still take pleasure in the chase and enjoy the social scene and the liberties that that involves. All that we want is to stop the cruel and barbaric act of hunting wild mammals with dogs—that is what the Bill is all about.

The right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine)—he is no longer in the Chamber; his was another cameo appearance—spoke about the balance of nature. I can think of nothing more likely to interfere with the balance of nature than humans taking pleasure from torturing wild mammals.

Mr. Paterson: The hon. Gentleman asked for an example of hounds helping conservation. Does he realise that the Banwy valley fox hounds and the Berwyn fox hounds are called out at the direct invitation of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds around Lake Vyrnwy and on the moors to protect rare species?

Mr. Foster: That may well be the case but it does not necessarily mean that it is the most humane and effective way. That is what the Bill is about. No one denies that fox numbers may have to be controlled. That is why there is an exemption for flushing, which was so welcomed by the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik). It is all about the manner in which the interference is conducted. Humane shooting is the most effective way of dealing with a pest. It is selective, safe, humane and efficient. All those things are important.

On the contribution of the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg), if we are to make provision for statutory instruments in a Bill such as this, it is important that the Secretary of State is given the utmost flexibility. His amendments deny flexibility to the Secretary of State and that is why I oppose them, as well as new clause 2.

Mr. Beith: When I saw new clause 2, notwithstanding its respectable parentage, I was worried. However, I welcome the amendment that the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) expounded a moment ago. My concern was underlined when the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) said that we must allow the Secretary of State maximum flexibility. I do not believe in giving Ministers flexibility to decide what the law is or is not, or should or should not be. That should be done by primary legislation.

I well understand the motives that led to the tabling of new clause 2; it was well intentioned. I shall say why shortly. If we are not careful, we shall degrade the law-making process by turning to secondary legislation—statutory instruments—to deal with primary matters of law and allow brief House procedures to determine what is a criminal offence or what will condemn our constituents to possible prison sentences. We frequently arrive at that situation, as we did two nights ago, when, in a debate on clause 99 of the Scotland Bill, the Government suggested a procedure, as a result of my request, to ensure that fisheries legislation affecting England could not be determined solely by the Scottish Parliament, and would have to be determined by the Westminster Parliament as well. No one objected to the use of that procedure. I raised my anxieties about it, but had to concede that it was better than our having no powers at all.

We are usually attracted to using such forms of words when we feel that some greater good must be served. We should never do it without pausing to reflect and, wherever possible, we should restrict the capacity to do it. The right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham proposed a restriction that goes to the heart of the matter. New clause 2, and clause 7 if his amendment were accepted, would allow the Secretary of State only to reduce the risk of penalty of imprisonment for our constituents. It is worse if a Minister can decide, and implement by a brief procedure, that something should become a criminal offence; it is perhaps less worrying if a Minister pulls back the boundaries of the law as it affects the public.

Mr. Nick St. Aubyn (Guildford): Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that clause 7 would allow the sport of shooting to be abolished by statutory instrument with only 90 minutes of debate in the House?

Mr. Beith: I am very worried both that that becomes technically possible and that there is a logic in the case for the Bill that could readily be extended to other sports, such as shooting and fishing. We must be careful about such provisions and recognise that some people—I am not one—desire that various such sports should be banned. I do not, as it happens, take part in any of them myself, but I am pretty cautious about what I am prepared to send my fellow citizens to prison for. Whatever our individual views, likes and dislikes may be, and however strong they are, we must think carefully before we turn activities into criminal offences.

Mr. Hawkins rose—

Mr. Luff rose—

Mr. Beith: I should like to make progress, because I want to develop my argument.

That aspect is significant partly because the procedures by which statutory instruments are dealt with in Parliament are very different from those for primary legislation. A statutory instrument, even one subject to affirmative resolution, is normally debated for only an hour and a half—almost invariably by a Committee rather than by the whole House.

In Committee, it is not possible to amend the statutory instrument in any way. Even if it is thought to go too far, to be too wide or to be inaccurate, it cannot be subject to any of the amendment processes to which we are subjecting the Bill, and implications cannot be drawn out so readily. Often, all that happens is a vote late at night in the House, and hon. Members come in and ask, "What is this all about? What happened in Committee?" There is no process of amendment. The House has sought to recognise on many occasions—certainly if this House does not, the other place, in its revising role, does—that that is not an adequate process by which to create new criminal offences.

Mr. Hawkins: The right hon. Gentleman is drawing attention to the concern that many of us share about the fact that, in promoting the Bill, the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster), who has said that one of his favourite sports is angling, runs the risk that one day someone whose hatred of anything to do with the countryside is even more virulent than his—perhaps someone in his own party—will use his legislation to ban the sport on which he says he is so keen.

Mr. Beith: The potential widening of the Bill to cover other sports is another reason why some of the Members who have supported it so enthusiastically should stop in their tracks and ask themselves, "Just a minute; what monster are we creating here?" Many of them have sought to distinguish between country sports on the ground that some are acceptable and some are not. I do not understand the logic of some of the distinctions that they draw.

Mr. Luff: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: I do not want to give way again for the moment, because I want to make a little progress.

Would it be reasonable to accept the use of that procedure to allow the Secretary of State not to add to but to reduce the number of offences in the Bill? I could reluctantly be dragged to that point, because the general effect of the Bill is to take away the civil liberties of hundreds of my constituents—people who engage in hunting or follow hunting on foot, or work in pursuits that depend on hunting, as farriers, as grooms or in carrying out other activities related to the care and upkeep of horses. The civil liberties and livelihoods of very large numbers of people would be affected in all sorts of ways.

Amendments have been tabled to later parts of the Bill in the hope of drawing the attention of the House to the economic consequences, which have not been properly assessed.

Mr. Hancock: I am sure that my right hon. Friend is not seriously suggesting that, once the Bill is carried, as I hope that it will be, all the people actively involved in looking after horses in one way or another will be put out of work and deprived of their livelihood because people would get rid of their horses. If that is his serious contention, what evidence is there to support it?

Secondly, will my right hon. Friend explain to the House that the overwhelming majority of Liberal Democrat Members of Parliament support the Bill—

Dr. Brian Iddon (Bolton, South-East): Where are they?

Mr. Hancock: The overwhelming majority of members of our party in the country are also actively campaigning to ensure that the Bill is passed.

Mr. Beith: I must point out that, in the Chamber, there are two Liberal Democrat Members who oppose the Bill and only one who is in favour of it. It is a free-vote issue, and members of all parties take different views on the matter.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: Not now. I shall answer my hon. Friend, but I shall give way to the right hon. Gentleman in a moment.

My answer is yes, I do believe that the livelihood of people who look after horses and provide services related to them will be affected by the Bill. People in constituencies such as mine—obviously this is not so in Portsmouth, but it is in Northumberland—keep horses to hunt. They may hunt two or three days a week, and they will not incur that expense if they cannot hunt. In particular, they will not keep hunters for that purpose. When we think about the economic consequences, the impact of that on point-to-point racing and even national hunt racing will have to be considered. There is no doubt that, whereas some of those people will want to continue their love of horse riding, the economics will not stack up if they are no longer able to hunt and horses will not be kept in the same numbers.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: I pay tribute to the right hon. Gentleman. Those of us who have known him for a long time would expect him to address the issue of the civil rights of his constituents. He has just said something as profound as anything I have heard in the Chamber in 19 years—that he is cautious, as all of us should be, about deciding what it is we send our constituents to prison over. In a sense, we are the guardians of the freedom of our constituents. He was right to emphasise that people will go to gaol as a consequence of the Bill. Does he think that there is anything about the Bill that is of sufficient seriousness to warrant sending our constituents to gaol—and, if so, what?

Mr. Beith: I touched on that point on Second Reading, and it is relevant to the new clause. If we do not amend clause 7, a Minister could—by a stroke of the pen and a relatively short procedure in this House—add to the range of offences, and thereby lead to the sending of someone to gaol for something which was not originally included in the Bill. We must stop and think carefully about that, just as we must stop and think carefully about the principle of the legislation.

In order to be convinced that that was a reasonable course of action, we should have to accept that what was being prohibited was manifestly, clearly and unmistakably a much more cruel way of controlling the fox population—or whatever other animal or fish might be included—than other means of doing so, or that it was totally unnecessary to control the population. No one in the House thinks that it is unnecessary to control the fox population, and it has not been demonstrated that hunting with hounds is significantly, manifestly or demonstrably more cruel than shooting or snaring.

When I press my hon. Friends who feel strongly on this—I respect their strong feelings—I find that, in the end, they resort to the argument that people should not take pleasure in that activity. I find that to be a totally inadequate basis for legislating to send people to prison. We can send someone to prison for carrying out acts of wanton and unnecessary cruelty. We cannot send people to prison because we do not approve of a method of controlling animals that is no less cruel or causes no less pain than others, or because we think that people should not enjoy doing it. Someone might well enjoy engaging in snaring animals, but that is a far more cruel way of controlling the fox population.

I refer now to the amendments tabled by the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham. With great reluctance, I accept that it might be reasonable if we are to have the Bill—frankly, I think that that is extremely unlikely—that there should be some capacity to reduce the extent to which it takes away people's civil liberties in the future, especially if it were clearly demonstrated that other methods were being tried but were not working.

Mr. Luff: The right hon. Gentleman is talking about the amendment tabled by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg). Does he agree that new clause 2 also meets his test—it not only reduces the power of the Secretary of State, but is slightly more comprehensive in its scope?

Mr. Beith: I linked the two together, because they both involve reducing only the extent to which the Bill can create offences and send people to prison. The power can be used only to take away offences, rather than add to them. That seems to me to be the partial defence of using a procedure that, otherwise, I do not like. To have such a measure in the Bill would ensure that, in future, a Secretary of State presented with incontrovertible evidence that more cruel methods were being used than fox hunting could take fox hunting out of the Bill. That is the purpose of the amendment, and there may be scope for argument as to whether that is sufficient.

The supporters of the new clauses—I note the names of the three hon. Members concerned—are associated with attempts to find some kind of middle way to meet some of the concerns of those who believe, as I do not, that fox hunting is inherently more cruel, while not removing either civil liberties or the practical usefulness of fox hunting.

I commend the efforts that those hon. Members have made and the efforts of those, some of them formerly associated with the League Against Cruel Sports, who have examined the issue closely and realised that we should try to find some middle way. If there are elements of unnecessary cruelty that can be removed from country sports, let us consider what they are and whether they can be removed. The process outlined in the new clauses would at least allow that consideration to continue. If evidence were subsequently produced that, for example, fox hunting with a particular control added to it would be improved, that might be something that the Secretary of State could consider.

2.15 pm

I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) was right when he said earlier that probably we would need some form of licensing or regulating authority to operate effectively a process of examination. Like others, I do not like too much licensing and regulating. However, we must ensure that we protect animals from unnecessary cruelty. I can justify having a licensing mechanism if it can help to achieve that object. I cannot defend, unamended, a Bill that will not lead to a reduction in cruelty to animals. Instead, the Bill will invite the use of other methods to control foxes that are not demonstrably less painful or cruel than the methods of traditional fox hunting. I am bound to be concerned about and oppose—

Mr. Clifton-Brown: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: I am coming to the close of my remarks.

I am bound to oppose legislation that, without adequate justification, would take away the civil liberties of many people. It does not matter whether I agree or disagree with those people. The essence of my position as a Liberal is that sometimes I have to tolerate things that I do not like or with which I do not agree.

Mr. Gerry Steinberg (City of Durham): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: I did say, in effect, that I would not give way. However, the hon. Gentleman makes the only attempted intervention from the Labour Benches, so I shall give way.

Mr. Steinberg: The right hon. Gentleman has made great play of civil liberties. How did he vote on the banning of handguns?

Mr. Beith: As the hon. Gentleman knows, I was against the banning of handguns. It was a free-vote issue. I believe that the Cullen report set out, at the Government's request, a better method of controlling handguns, and that banning would not have prevented the ghastly incident which generated pressure for legislation. As I have said, it was a free-vote issue. My response underlines the fact that I examine legislation rather carefully from the point of view of civil liberties.

The Bill, if enacted, would make huge inroads into the civil liberties of hundreds of law-abiding people in my constituency, and thousands throughout the country. It threatens to send to prison many people who are engaged in activities that are currently legal. I do not believe that the case has been made out. Therefore, I am prepared, reluctantly, to support a new clause, and pleased to support an amendment to the Bill, which would give the Secretary of State the opportunity in future to reduce the likelihood of the Bill sending people to prison.

Kate Hoey: First, I make an unreserved apology to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). You will not be aware, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that earlier today I said that my hon. Friend had told me that on one occasion he had filibustered because he had spoken for three hours. I have since had a long chat with my hon. Friend, and I made it clear that I would tell the House that he did not filibuster for three hours. Indeed, the Deputy Speaker in the Chair at that time made it clear to him that he had not breached any legal aspect of the proceedings of the House. My hon. Friend made an extremely good speech for three hours, which was clearly within the rules of the House. I want to make that plain because my hon. Friend knows the procedures of this place better than anyone.

I say in the most friendly spirit to my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) that perhaps it would have been sensible if he had spent a little time, before he introduced the Bill, talking to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover about private Members' Bills and the difficulty of getting such a Bill through the House when it raises a controversial issue, when there is to be a free vote and when hon. Members on both sides of the House have strong feelings.

I shall be brief because I know that a number of my colleagues are trying to speak before 2.30 pm. I know that Opposition Members want to do so. I just—[Interruption.] Perhaps some of my hon. Friends would like to speak before 2.30 pm as well. I very much agree with the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), who said that the new clause degrades, as he put it, the law-making process. We are all aware of that. This is not the way to handle legislation.

We came up with the new clause precisely because, if the Bill is passed as it stands, it would be a serious breach of civil liberties. I do not want to repeat—were I to do so, I might be ruled out of order—the reasons why I did not support the Bill on Second Reading. I have spoken about animal welfare. When people look at the Bill carefully, they will see that the Bill would not do anything for animal welfare.

I am concerned, as I mentioned on Second Reading, about the attitude on civil liberties. I am pleased that the Minister mentioned the European Court and the European convention on human rights.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: Will the hon. Lady give way on a point about civil liberties?

Kate Hoey: This is the only intervention that I shall take, because other hon. Members want to speak.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: Is the hon. Lady aware of James Barrington, who works with Wildlife Network, an organisation with which she has been working to find a middle way? He is a former member of the League Against Cruel Sports. Writing in the magazine Smallholder in February, he said:

"As hard as it is to accept, especially for people who have spent many years campaigning against fox hunting, the simple answer is that the fox is likely to be worse off" as a result of the Bill.

Kate Hoey: That is the conclusion that any hon. Member who really looked at the issues would reach. That is why it is important that, when faced with a Bill such as this—many of us may well have been in favour of bans in the past as we had never seriously looked at this—we understand what we are doing, and understand the point made by the right hon. Member for Berwick–upon–Tweed about what our constituents could face if the Bill is passed without amendment.

I hope that the Minister will come back with a little more detail about the European convention on human rights. It is clear that, if the Bill is passed, there will be many grounds on which it could be challenged. We do not want to sign up to the Human Rights Bill, bring it in and then find that many people from various interests will try to challenge it. I mention the grounds on which this Bill may be challenged so that my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester has them in mind when he looks at them over the next week. The first important one will be a lack of a clearly identified public interest. That must be looked at with article 1.

To be lawful, the Bill will have to pass the test of proportionality and fair balance. That concept will be a big legal consideration. Part of that would require the legislator to identify both the general interest that is being served by the interference and the motive for the legislation. There will be a number of legal difficulties with the Bill if it is passed without amendment.

Although it is not perfect, our new clause is a measure of the great confidence in the Home Secretary felt by all parties, in the sense that it has been tabled by an hon. Member from each party, because we feel that he will look at this fairly. If the Bill is passed, we know that it will affect the balance of nature and wildlife management. However, as a result of our new clause, the Home Secretary will have the power to step in and change the Bill, for example, by not prohibiting hunting by dogs if it is considered that some of the other methods that are being used are more cruel than that. I am pleased that we have had this opportunity. As other hon. Members want to speak, I shall simply say that I hope that the House will support the new clause when it comes to voting next week.

Mr. Garnier: I am grateful for the opportunity to discuss new clause 20, which is co-sponsored by my right hon. Friends the Members for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor), for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), who has already spoken briefly, for Epsom and Ewell (Sir A. Hamilton), for Bridgwater (Mr. King), who hopes to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in due course, and for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth).

This has been the most interesting part of today's proceedings, because we have been dealing not only with whether fox hunting, deer hunting or hare coursing are good or bad, but with the bigger constitutional question of Henry VIII clauses, which were first drawn to the attention of the House this morning by my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Grieve) in an intervention and were touched on by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid–Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) in his extremely cogent speech.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire for the efforts that he has made, with the hon. Members for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) and for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey), who is my London Member of Parliament—I am grateful that she is—[HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] I hope that I do not ruin her career by admitting to that.

Kate Hoey: In case people think that there is any kind of bias in that, I should explain that I probably have more Members of Parliament as my constituents than any other hon. Member.

Mr. Garnier: May I speak on behalf of them all, by drawing to the attention of the wider listening public the signal contribution that the hon. Lady has made to the issue of civil liberties, in terms not just of hunting but of how a Member of Parliament can speak up and address the House on issues that may be deeply unpopular with his or her party colleagues but that the House has a right to hear. I am particularly proud to be a Member of a House that allows the hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) to express ideas that are unpopular, particularly among Labour Members, and present their case fearlessly.

[Mr. Garnier]

I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire, the hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire for their attempt, in founding the Middle Way Group, along with Mr. Barrington and Mr. Davies, to find a solution. The hon. Member for Montgomeryshire used a telling phrase the other day when he was introducing the group. He said that he intended to find a solution, not to claim victory. I hope that I paraphrase him correctly. It was an intelligent remark, and I hope that he will take my praise in the spirit in which it is intended. I do not wish to belittle the group's efforts. Although I am not sure whether I agree with everything that those three hon. Members seek to do, I applaud their effort to build bridges between the two polarised and extreme positions.

One of the problems from which the debate suffers was exemplified by some of the remarks made by the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster). On television later that afternoon, he refused to see any merit in the position adopted by the three hon. Members who have formed the Middle Way Group.

Mr. Öpik: May .I confirm the hon. and learned Gentleman's understanding of our intent? It is to find a way forward rather than to claim victory for one side or the other.

Mr. Garnier: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for—

Mr. Bennett rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put, but MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER withheld his assent, and declined then to put that Question.

Mr. Garnier: Such a motion comes ill from the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), who was called the "amender-general" in Committee. He tabled more than 200 amendments designed to wreck, inhibit and obscure debate. He sought to ensure, through a parliamentary device that he attempted to construct, that hon. Members could not debate matters of considerable public interest on the Floor of the House on Report. Happily, that device failed, and my hon. Friends and I are grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for deciding not to accept a closure motion at this stage. A number of other hon. Members want to speak on what my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley described as one of the biggest issues with which we have to come to terms.

My new clause, which is supported by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater, who is sitting beside me, would allow the Secretary of State, by order "to change the activities prohibited by section 1."

It contrasts with new clause 2, which has been tabled by the Middle Way Group of MPs and permits the Secretary of State to amend by order

"any of the provisions of sections 1 and 8 to 13".

Having considered new clause 2—

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed on Friday 13 March.

Mount Vernon Hospital, Northwood

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dowd.]

2.32 pm

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): I am privileged to have secured this Adjournment debate on the future of Mount Vernon hospital, Northwood, which worries my constituents more than any other local issue. The hospital's future has been an underlying concern since I was first elected to the House as the local MP in 1979, but the Minister of State, Department of Health, knows that this background anxiety has become a grave preoccupation in recent months. He received most courteously a constituency deputation which included the pressure group Community Voice, representatives of the Northwood and Ruislip residents associations and the community health council.

The hospital is part of the Mount Vernon and Watford Hospitals NHS trust, and the only hospital in my constituency that offers general medical as well as surgical and, most importantly, specialist cancer and related services. It has built up a formidable reputation as a regional cancer centre. It is the largest on a single site in England, supporting burns and plastics, oral and maxilla facial and other surgical services.

So good has the reputation of the hospital become over the years that a number of world-quality research and complementary facilities have been drawn to the site. Among those are the Gray laboratory for cancer research, the Reconstruction of Appearance and Function Trust—RAFT, the Marie Curie research wing, the Michael Sobel House hospice, the Paul Strickland scanner centre and the Bishopswood private hospital. They are mutually supportive because of the physical investment and, above all, the high intellectual calibre of the world-class personnel who have been drawn to Mount Vernon to do research and clinical work at the frontiers of medicine.

Like so many great British institutions, Mount Vernon hospital is not the product of some grand strategic design. Since its inception in Edwardian times, it has grown in a somewhat higgledy-piggledy fashion to meet local and national demand, so that today, it is a remarkable blend of listed architecture, single-storey hut-style constructions, and ultra-modern ward blocks and facilities. What makes it all work so effectively is the spirit and dedication of the staff and their common sense of purpose.

The hospital's geographic location at the extremity of so many health authorities, boroughs and county boundaries is symbolised by the hospital's non-appearance in the Government's document, "Health services in London: a strategic review", which was published last month.

The Mount Vernon business plan for this financial year was summarised by the outgoing chief executive Stephen Ramsden, to whom, along with the outgoing chairman David Swarbrick, I pay warm tribute. The summary states:

"Our strategic objectives are to provide:

the best local specialist health services,

the leading plastic surgery and burns services in the country, a world class cancer service.

The Trust's plans for change have already taken shape with the establishment of a single Accident and Emergency Centre at Watford General Hospital with Mount Vernon concentrating on specialist services and services for referred patients.

The Trust faces a difficult financial agenda with expenditure continuing to increase at a higher rate than income. In addition the Trust faces an unprecedented reduction in Health Authority income linked to a forecast reduction in emergency admissions, which has not materialised. Regrettably, it is inevitable that services will be reduced in the short term to meet these pressures and we will strive to protect services for emergency and clinically urgent patients, and secure a long term solution.

During 1997/98 the Trust will continue to influence the planning of the reconfiguration of services throughout West Hertfordshire. Active collaboration with the St. Albans and Hemel Hempstead NHS Trust and the West Herts Community Services NHS Trust will be a key feature of this."

The Gray laboratory, which is a leading centre for radiation research applied to cancer treatment, has sent me a document, which I will submit to the Minister, to complement the paper which the local Mount Vernon support group, Community Voice, handed to him when I took them to see him, as part of our delegation, a few weeks ago. It is entitled, "The threat to research at Mount Vernon". The main points in the document summarise the essence of local constituency concerns, as well as the professional anxieties of all who work at Mount Vernon.

Financial solvency has proved to be an increasing problem in recent years, and losses have been sustained largely by general surgery. The special centres for cancer and plastic surgery treatments have been financially stable and, to a large extent, they have subsidised the general services on site. Because of the crisis that is due to the overspend, the West Hertfordshire and Hillingdon health authorities have engaged in reviews, concentrating on an assessment of the requirements for acute services in the district general hospitals. The West Hertfordshire review is considering the rationalisation of services at Mount Vernon and Watford, Hemel Hempstead and St. Albans, favouring concentration on only one site.

The proposed changes may lead to general medicine and surgery leaving the Mount Vernon site. The future of plastic surgery there has been the subject of reviews, and at least six options are being considered. Changes that are occurring at the Chelsea and Westminster hospital, where plastic surgery services have been developed in response to the closure of Queen Mary's hospital at Roehampton, complicate the picture.

The movement of other services from the Mount Vernon site threatens to destabilise services for cancer patients and for those who require plastic surgery. The close integration of other specialties in medicine is essential to both those specialties for the achievement of a high standard of care. The reviews have focused on the requirements of surrounding areas for district general hospital services, and the destabilising effect on the major centres for cancer treatment and plastic surgery and burns and the enormous commitment to research have been given a low priority.

The South Thames review on plastic surgery has taken no account of the impact of the proposed change on the Mount Vernon centre. The insecurity that surrounds the special centres at Mount Vernon has enormous consequences for work on patient care and research. The combination of a large clinical case load and important research that is of international interest has proved most attractive in the recruitment of high-standard staff in all disciplines and at all levels. The honours that have been achieved by staff and the demands that are made upon them to lecture nationally and internationally speak for themselves.

The continuing insecurity means that valuable members of staff may migrate elsewhere, and it may prove difficult to recruit able young people. It is already proving difficult to recruit support staff, such as secretaries, who are critical to the service. There is a vast investment of capital in research buildings and equipment. It totals more than £20 million and £5 million is currently committed to building and equipping new and continuing projects. Annual research expenditure totals £8.2 million.

In view of the uncertainty over the future of the hospital, £200,000 that was promised has been lost, but much more is at risk. Early clarification about the position of the major centres and their associated research is essential. Without such clarification, the collaborative research and clinical teams that have been developed over the past 40 to 60 years are in peril of disintegrating, and continued fund raising is certain to prove more difficult.

I have to mention RAFT, whose chairman is Sir Robin Chichester-Clark, the former Member of Parliament for Londonderry City and County. We should all recognise its remarkable work. It was established to help in research and education in the context of the thousands of patients who every year suffer horrendous burns, injuries or accidents, those who undergo surgery to remove cancers or those who have birth defects. RAFT can meet those needs only with the support of donors and friends. The research has already resulted in improved patient care for an enormous number of people, but it can continue only if the money can be found to pay the salaries and the laboratory costs of the team of 22 researchers. The cell and molecular biology groups, for example, jointly require £250,000 annually. RAFT relies entirely on charitable donations. Thanks to loyal supporters, last year was a successful one, and more than £1 million was donated.

RAFT—which is celebrating its 10th anniversary this year—has written to me that it has achieved remarkable "scientific recognition, prizes and professorships."

The letter goes on to say:

"The location on site at Mount Vernon of the following probably provides UNIQUE facilities for innovative, pioneering research and encourages close collaboration between surgeons at the patient's bedside".

Such facilities are crucial to RAFT's future.

RAFT is a purpose-built centre at Mount Vernon and employs 23 surgeons and scientists. RAFT's letter goes on to state that it "has received donations amounting to £600,000 from its generous supporters to expand its laboratory facilities, but until the results of the various reviews etc are known, the Trustees do not feel able to proceed" with the planned extension of the facilities.

I can only reiterate the final paragraphs of Community Voice's submission to the Minister, which are endorsed not only by myself, but by the Hillingdon community health council and by the board of Mount Vernon hospital. The chairman of Community Voice, Mike Turner—to whom I pay tribute—wrote:

"To dismantle or separate any one aspect of the work"— at Mount Vernon—

"would have a very adverse effect on the present efficient arrangements.

However Hillingdon Health Authority is considering an option to remove the Plastic and Burns Unit from this site.

The Mount Vernon and Watford NHS trust, which manages the Cancer and Plastic Surgery Departments, has issued an official statement, 'If Plastic Surgery is closed at Mount Vernon, then the purchasers and Regional Office'"— of the NHS—

"'need to be prepared to close the whole hospital as other surgical services are reliant on shared services with Plastic Surgery. Cancer is reliant on surgery.'

Our consultation with both cancer consultants and plastic surgeon consultants confirms that they all feel that the present successful collaborative arrangement must remain."

It should go without saying that the collaborative arrangement between RAFT, the Paul Strickland scanner centre, the Gray laboratory and the fourth facility—the regional cancer centre, which is the jewel in the crown, and the heart of the hospital—should remain.

The letter continues:

"In these circumstances the four groups indicated at the opening of this report request the Minister to veto any proposal to remove Plastic Surgery from the Mount Vernon Hospital site", which is what I ask the Minister to do.

I add my voice to those urging the Minister to end forthwith any uncertainty over the future of Mount Vernon hospital at its current site, to confirm the admirable role that it plays not only in the local community but nationally, and to give it a really good—an optimistic—chance to expand further.

2.48 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Paul Boateng): I am delighted to have the opportunity to respond to this debate initiated by the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson), whom I congratulate on securing time for a debate on a subject of such importance to him and his constituents. I know that he has devoted much time to it.

We are indeed fortunate to have heard the hon. Gentleman's tribute to the staff of Mount Vernon hospital. I am sure that he speaks for all his constituents who are aware of the very real contribution that NHS staff make to the success of hospitals such as Mount Vernon, often working in difficult and challenging circumstances, not least the circumstances arising from the financial problems experienced in and around Mount Vernon.

I assure the hon. Gentleman that the Government are absolutely determined to secure for the nation and for his constituents a national health service of which the country has good cause to be proud by virtue of the quality and expertise that it contains and by virtue also of the rediscovery under this Government of the founding principles on which the NHS was established, principles which were, sadly, eroded by the previous Administration. The principles of fairness, accessibility and quality, which were all variable under the previous Administration, have once again become central to the delivery of health care in this country.

We are also absolutely determined to bear down on the burdensome costs of administration that were the product of the internal market created by the previous Government. This Government put the emphasis on patients and patient care and on ensuring that we use resources cost-effectively so that every penny of additional spending is well spent.

We have seen this winter an example of how the additional £1.2 billion that we made available for the NHS across the country has been used to ensure that health and social services, working together, have helped not only to meet the inevitable demands of winter but to begin to redress the underfunding that characterised the previous Administration. The hon. Gentleman outlined the impact of that underfunding on Mount Vernon.

The recent publication of our Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation" and the White Paper "The new NHS" show the Government's commitment to building a healthier nation and a modern, dependable NHS. The abolition of the internal market and its replacement by a system of integrated care based on partnership between NHS bodies and other local agencies is designed to deliver a better service to patients through improved quality and efficiency, offering prompt high-quality treatment and care built around the needs of individuals. "The new NHS" forms the basis for a 10-year programme. We will renew the NHS over that period as a genuinely national service and improve it through evolutionary change rather than organisational upheaval.

There is a very real question in the hon. Gentleman's mind, and in the minds of his constituents, as to the future of Mount Vernon.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas (Harrow, West): Is my hon. Friend aware that many of my constituents, especially those in Pinner and Hatch End, also use and benefit enormously from the services currently provided at Mount Vernon? Will he assure my constituents that in any public consultation on future patterns of service delivery they will have the same right and opportunity to be consulted as the constituents of the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson)?

Mr. Boateng: It is important that the consultation process embraces all those interested parties. We need to ensure that it is shaped and informed by those interests and is not in any way hurried or precipitate, because we need to get it right. We are seeking to take into account the broad range of views about the future. The review that has been under way since last August is being conducted by Hillingdon health authority in conjunction with a number of interested parties: Mount Vernon and Watford general hospitals, Hillingdon hospital, Harrow and Hillingdon Healthcare NHS trust, local GPs, the London borough of Hillingdon and community groups including the local community health council. We want all groups and agencies that have an interest to be given an opportunity to participate. The neighbouring health authority of West Hertfordshire has also been carrying out a local review of health services over the past 10 months. That, too, inevitably impacts on Mount Vernon hospital.

There is a problem about the underlying deficit. The trust's main purchasers are now seeking to withdraw funding in line with their own investment strategy, which was originally developed to manage the transition following the closure of the accident and emergency department in March 1996. The trust's cost base has not reduced in line with the proposed loss of income, which has adversely affected the trust's financial deficit. Had no remedial action been taken, the trust would have had a deficit of some £7.3 million in 1997–98. It was therefore important to agree a cost-saving programme that aims to reduce the deficit to a more manageable £4.8 million in 1997–98. It ipcludes, as it was bound to, reprofiling of staff, budget controls and a temporary reduction in elective work.

The hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood came to see Ministers about his concerns, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Ms Ward). We pay tribute to the work of the cancer centre at the hospital; it is obviously world class and world renowned, but it must be stressed that local services are also important.

The final configuration must be both clinically coherent and financially viable. It will be decided after the most careful consideration, which will take into account also the review of the plastics and burns service and the relationship between that service and the cancer service. Any proposals for significant service changes will need to ensure that financial balance and sustainable services throughout the health care economy in Hillingdon and West Hertfordshire are achieved. I can assure all hon. Members that all such proposals will be subject to full public consultation and involvement in the decision-making process.

I should like to say a word about waiting times, which I know are of concern to all hon. Members with an interest in Mount Vernon. We are absolutely determined to get to grips with the legacy that we inherited from the previous Government and to deliver on our pledges. The most recent figures, released on 19 February, reflect that legacy, as well as the inevitable consequences of the winter. They are not good, and we are determined to address the situation.

Mount Vernon and Watford Hospitals NHS trust was the second worst performer in the North Thames region, with 126 over-18-month waiters on 31 December 1997. That is unacceptable. I am glad that we now learn that the trust will have got rid of those 18-month waiters by the end of March. We shall expect that improvement in the delivery of the service to continue, because the previous failures have been unacceptable.

We shall go forward together in the new national health service. The expressions of anxiety voiced by the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood and by my hon. Friends have been heard, as have those of the dedicated staff in Mount Vernon and throughout the NHS. I am sure that, ultimately, we shall achieve a reconfiguration that meets all the needs that hon. Members have outlined. That is the way forward—a final configuration that is both clinically coherent and financially viable.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 23 February 1998

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list the properties and land owned by the Commissioners which they have identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30328]

Mr. Stuart Bell: None. The Commissioners' property and land are investments held to support the ministry of the Church of England. They are kept under regular review and from time to time disposed of and acquired in the light of investment and other financial considerations. Details of such properties are commercially sensitive. The Commissioners are also the vendors of redundant Churches and a small number of these are vested in us at any one time for sale.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Attorney-General what changes he proposes for the Crown Prosecution Service's cash and running costs limits for 1997–98. [30436]

The Attorney-General: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 4 will be increased by £4,500,000 from £220,083,000 to £224,583,000. Funding of the increase will be by a transfer of funds from the Home Office (Class VIII, Vote 1) and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The running costs limit of Class VIII, Vote 4 will be increased by £4,500,000 from £216,605,000 to £221,105,000. This will fund several Home Office legislative initiatives.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Cash Limits

Mr. Leslie: To ask the President of the Council if she intends to make any changes to the 1997–98 cash and running costs limit for the Privy Council Office. [30270]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 3 will be increased by £147,000 from £2,636,000 to £2,783,000 and the running cost limit is increased by £147,000 from £2,662,000 to £2,809,000. The increase will be offset by reductions in:

The Home Office: £44,000—Class VII, Vote 1
Department of Health: £44,000—Class XI, Vote 2
Customs and Excise: £15,000—Class XVI, Vote 3
DfEE: £15,000—Class IX, Vote 1
Scottish Office: £12,000—Class XIII, Vote 4
Welsh Office: £7,000—Class XIV, Vote 3
Northern Ireland Department: £6,000
Foreign & Commonwealth Office: £4,000—Class II, Vote 1 and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Posts

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what factors led him to decide that (a) the Minister of Transport should have a Cabinet post and (b) the Minister for the Environment should not have a Cabinet post. [28926]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 February 1998]: We decided to merge the old Departments of the Environment and Transport after the election so we could ensure the proper integration of planning, housing and transport, and enable environmental issues to be taken fully into account in all of them. Transport was represented in the Cabinet in the last government, and is likewise represented in this government.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 6 February 1998, Official Report, column 806, if he will publish the cost to public funds of his trip to Japan when it is available. [29527]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 February 1998]: Yes. I will write to the right hon. Member in due course.

Single Currency

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he discussed the Capers Jones report to President Clinton urging postponement of the single currency during his recent visit to the USA; and if he will make a statement. [29856]

The Prime Minister: I did not discuss the Capers Jones report during my recent visit to Washington.

Cash Limits

Mr. Stuart Bell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the Cabinet Office: Security and Intelligence Services cash limits for 1997–98. [30273]

The Prime Minister: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 2 will be increased by £1,863,000 from £718,913,000 to £720,776,000. The running costs cash limit will be increased by £1,967,000 from £367,688,000 to £369,655,000. The increase in running costs will be offset by the reallocation of expenditure within the Vote and take on board transfers from the Cabinet Office, Class XVIII, Vote 1 and the FCO, Class II, Vote 2. Capital end year flexibility of £1,349,000 has been taken up. There will be an increase in Appropriation in Aid of £2,987,000 and a net increase in Superannuation payments of £500,000.

The increase will be offset by transfers and charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Stuart Bell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the 1997–98 (a) cash limit and (b) running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services Vote. [30272]

The Prime Minister: The cash limit for Cabinet Office: other services (class XVIII, Vote 1) will be increased by £2,922,000 from £37,444,000 to £40,366,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £1,824,000 from £44,094,000 to £45,918,000.

This is to reflect a transfer of £1,604,000 from the Office of Public Service (Class XVIII, Vote 1) for security functions and jointly administered common services; a transfer of £4,000 to Security and Intelligence Services (Class XVIII, Vote 2) for services provided.

In line with previous practice, it has been decided that the Cabinet Office will bear the cost of the 1998 Economic Summit, requiring an increase in the department's 1997–98 provision of £1,322,000.

The increase will be offset by transfers and a charge on the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Departmental Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what provision his Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what subsidy is provided for (a) nursery places and (b) holiday play schemes; if he will list the organisations used by his Department for child care; and if child care vouchers are made available to staff. [30008]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 February 1998]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 19 February 1998, Official Report, column 792.

Official Residence

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1998, Official Report, columns 471–72, if he will list the costs of the repairs and refurbishments at No. 11 Downing Street by subhead in each year since 1993–94. [30560]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my previous answer which accounted fully for the costs.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the level of British aid to India. [30478]

Clare Short: India is the largest recipient of British bilateral aid; we expect to spend around £90 million this year, all on grant terms. Substantial additional funds are channelled through the European Union, multilateral agencies and non-governmental organisations.

We are currently reviewing our development strategy for India in the light of the White Paper on International Development. Future levels of British development assistance to India will depend on the outcome of the review.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she next plans to visit India. [30477]

Clare Short: I intend to visit India in September or October this year.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how she proposes to inform the public about the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on developing countries. [30589]

Clare Short: I have made my views on the MAI public in response to Parliamentary Questions and in response to letters from Members of Parliament, enclosing inquiries for members of the public. Officials from my Department are also answering a large number of public inquiries about the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI). My officials have agreed to speak about the MAI at a number of conferences and seminars organised by academic institutions and NGOs.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the capacity of the Governments of developing countries to control the potentially adverse impacts of foreign investment under the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [30583]

Clare Short: Foreign investment has an important role to play in economic development which is essential to meeting the international poverty eradication targets. The problem for many developing countries, particularly the poorest, is marginalisation from these global capital flows. The Government therefore support the establishment of a better international framework for investment through instruments such as the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI). In our study of the development implications of the MAI, my Department is exploring how the needs of developing countries can best be taken into account.

Enterprise Development

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those countries in which her Department is currently providing support for enterprise development. [30201]

Clare Short: The countries in which Department for International Development is currently providing support for enterprise development, through the Bilateral Country Programmes, the Joint Funding Scheme or the Enterprise Development Fund, include:

Kenya
Swaziland and Lesotho
Tanzania

Eritrea
Uganda
Namibia
Ghana
Sierra Leone
Zimbabwe
Sudan
Zambia
India
Malawi
Bangladesh
South Africa
Pakistan
Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos
Sri Lanka
Philippines
West Bank and Gaza
Russia
Ukraine and Belarus
Bulgaria
Czech Republic
Former Yugoslavia Republics
Hungary
Poland
Romania
Slovakia.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the advertising contracts her Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30720]

Clare Short: No advertising contracts have been awarded by my Department since 1 May.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she has taken to assist refugees fleeing from conflict in Sierra Leone; and if she will make a statement. [30763]

Clare Short: We have provided £217,000 through Concern Universal to refugees in Guinea and £35,000 through CARE International for refugees in the Gambia.

We are also contributing to assistance to refugees being provided by the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO).

Along with other agencies, we are assessing if further assistance to refugees is required following the recent military action taken by ECOMOG in Sierra Leone.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations on human rights she has made to the Government of Sierra Leone. [30198]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The democratically elected authorities of Sierra Leone are only now beginning to return to Freetown. Our High Commissioner to Freetown, temporarily based in Conakry with President Kabbah, regularly discusses with him the need for his government to be inclusive and broadly based and the need to respect human rights.

The essential requirement at this stage is the restoration of law and order and the immediate input of humanitarian relief.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the properties and land owned by her Department which she has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30327]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development owns no properties or land which are surplus to requirements.

Cash Limits

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes have been made to the 1997–98 cash and running costs limits for expenditure by her Department. [30969]

Clare Short: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class II, Vote 5 will be increased by £30,934,000 from £1,564,280,000 to £1,595,214,000 and the DFID running cost limit by £1,137,000 from £56,379,000 to £57,516,000.

Rollover of underspend of 1995 EC attributed aid provision	13,955,000
Rollover of underspend of 1996–97 voted provision on Class II, Vote 5	16,742,000
Inward PES transfer from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class VI, Vote 1) in respect of transfer of responsibility to DFID for the United Nations Commission for Human Settlements	100,000
Inward PES transfer from FCO (Class II, Vote 1) following transfer of full responsibility to DFID for administering the Know How Fund	137,000
Increase in Vote cash limit	30,934,000

The increase on the running cost limit is in respect of the inward PES transfer of £137,000 as mentioned above and transfer of resources of £1,000,000 from programme costs.The increases will be offset by transfers and a claim on the Reserve and therefore will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to change the 1997–98 External Finance Limit for the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [30679]

Clare Short: The External Finance Limit for CDC for 1997–98 will be increased by £20,000,000 from minus £37,700,000. The change is in order to allow CDC to manage a temporary liquidity constraint. This year, CDC have been very successful in developing a new pipeline of projects to meet their growth targets but have had a bunching of investments in the first quarter 1998 which has led to a liquidity constraint at the end of the financial year. Over the course of calendar year 1998, they will have evened out the flows. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Council House Rents

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 30 English local authorities with the (a) worst and (b) best council house rent collection rates, (i) as a percentage of rent due net of benefit, (ii) as a percentage of gross rent due and (iii) as cash due, for the latest available year. [28254]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 6 February 1998]: Information on rent arrears and rent collection is collected from local authorities in England on Housing Subsidy Forms. This information includes data on rent due (full rent available on all dwellings less rent reductions/refunds and rent lost on vacant dwellings) and the part of this rent that is outstanding at the end of the year. Not all authorities are able to provide the latter items, which requires dissaggregation of rent arrears for the current year from those for previous years. This means that collection rates for 1996–97 are not available for around 50 authorities.

The details requested for collection rates for gross rent are set out in percentage and cash terms. These data are as issued by News Release on 9 February 1998 and, as the footnote indicates, Islington has subsequently submitted revised figures.

No data are collected centrally on arrears of rent net of benefit.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that the stretch of the Thames Path between Greenwich and the site of the Millennium Dome is tidied up and lit more effectively. [28485]

Mr. Caborn: The London Borough of Greenwich, in co-operation with other partners, are progressing plans to complete and upgrade the Thames Path to enable cyclist and pedestrian access to the Millennium Experience. They are considering the results of a feasibility study and will be negotiating with owners and developers as necessary to pursue the project.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 617, how much contaminated material has been buried beneath the Millennium Experience site; on which parts of the site this material has been buried; if contaminated material has been buried beneath the Millennium Dome; and what the contaminated material is composed of. [30388]

Angela Eagle: The remediation of contaminated soils on the Greenwich Peninsula, in accordance with current legislation and government policy, includes both the treatment and reuse of soils on-site and removal of wastes off-site. Contaminated soils have also been left in situ where they do not pose a risk to groundwater, and are capped using multi-layered engineered clean soils. This contaminated material is likely to exist over much of the peninsula including the area leased by the New Millennium Experience Company. However, site users are effectively isolated from it by the capping layers.

The contamination within these soils which have been left in situ and capped includes wastes from the production of gas and its by-products as well as carboniferous materials.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 617, concerning re-use of material on the Millennium Experience site, what material has been re-used and in what way. [30389]

Angela Eagle: The materials which have been treated and re-used on the Greenwich Peninsula site, including the site to be used for the Millennium Experience, are principally the excavated soils.

Following wet and dry sieving to remove the more highly contaminated fine material, the coarser fraction is replaced and compacted for use as general fill. This reduces the need to import material from off-site, thus reducing cost and minimising environmental impact. In addition, trials are being undertaken to use the moderately contaminated materials for road construction by adding cement and lime.

Oil Spills

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the dangers of oil spills, during the summer months, on the coastline of Pembrokeshire. [29684]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Emergency Towing Study by Captain C.P.R. Belton published in 1995 included a year-round environmental and risk analysis of oil spills at sea. For the analysis, the UK coastline was divided into sixteen regions and ranked according to various environmental and risk factors. The Pembrokeshire coastline was contained within the region of West and North Wales which was ranked sixth overall and therefore was not designated a Primary or Secondary danger area. The West Country, where an Emergency Towing Vessel is stationed for the winter months and ranked third overall in the Study, was designated a Primary danger area. As a result of tug trials carried out during the winter months, I announced on 10 February 1998, Official Report, columns 131–32, that three tugs would continue to be sited in the Dover Strait, the Minches and the Western Approaches between October and March.

Motorways

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of motorway there are per 1,000 square kilometres (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other EU countries. [29809]

Ms Glenda Jackson: These figures are shown in the table.

Driving Licences

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people currently hold driving licences in the United Kingdom; and what estimate he has made of the number of people eligible to hold a driving licence. [29810]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of car licence holders in Great Britain is currently estimated to be 33.1 million, including 3 million with provisional licences. In addition, 0.2 million people are estimated to hold a full licence to drive a motorcycle or moped. Data are not available for Northern Ireland.

The number of people aged 17 plus resident in Great Britain is estimated to be 44.7 million. Some of these will not be eligible to drive on medical grounds. There are no records of those who have passed their driving test, but do not currently hold a licence.

Waste Recovery

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the volume and value of (a) plastic, (b) paper, (c) glass and (d) other materials transported from waste recovery plants to the end user by (i) rail, (ii) road and (iii) sea in the last available year. [29862]

Angela Eagle: No such estimates have been made. However, as part of the review of the national waste strategy announced last month, we will want to consider how waste can be managed to encourage integrated and sustainable transport use. The Government are keen to improve the environmental sustainability of waste management, in particular through higher levels of recycling.

Air Traffic Control

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure safety standards are maintained in the light of delays with the new Air Traffic Control Centre at Swanwick. [29960]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The management of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. has assured me that safety in the air will not be compromised by the delay in the opening of the new en-route air traffic control centre at Swanwick. They have ensured that the existing centre at West Drayton will be able to cope with the volume of air traffic until the new centre opens.

Aircraft Fuel

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made on introducing an international tax on aircraft fuel. [29987]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government support, in principle, the introduction of a tax on aviation fuel at an international level. My Department is participating in a study by the International Civil Aviation Organisation on the effects of a range of environmental levies including aviation fuel tax. This report is expected to be presented to the ICAO Assembly in September. In addition, the European Commission is supporting a study of the environmental and competitive effects on the EU of an aviation fuel tax. This is due to be completed in August. We will consider how to take forward policy after we know the results of these studies.

Toxic Chemicals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) road and (b) rail accidents have been reported during the past five years in which toxic chemicals have been part of the cargo; and what assessment he has made of the environmental effects of these accidents. [29820]

Angela Eagle: Statistics relating to road accidents involving dangerous substances are held by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). From these statistics, it is not possible to disaggregate those involving chemicals which are environmentally toxic.

Two types of dangerous occurrences involving the carriage of dangerous substances by road are required to be reported to HSE under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 (RIDDOR). They are specified in sections 16 and 17 of Schedule 2 of RIDDOR 95. These relate to incidents where road tankers or tank containers overturn or are seriously damaged, where there is an uncontrolled release or escape of the dangerous substance, or where there is a fire involving the dangerous substance.

Accidents involving road vehicles other than road tankers or tank containers are also required to be reported if they result in an uncontrolled release or escape of the dangerous substance in such a quantity as to have the potential to cause the death of, or major injury to, any person. Accidents involving these vehicles are also reportable where they lead to a fire involving the dangerous substance.

Similarly, figures for rail accidents are not available in the form requested. Figures for railway accidents reported to the HSE involving trains carrying dangerous goods whether there was any release or not for the last five years in Great Britain are shown in Table 2.

HSE's Railway Inspectorate does not record information relating to the type of freight conveyed. Therefore the figures represent all railway accidents involving trains carrying dangerous goods for the past five years, some of which many not have involved toxic chemicals as part of the cargo.

The potential for harm from accidents involving transport of dangerous goods was fully examined by the Health and Safety Commission's Advisory Committee on Dangerous Substances in 1991 ('Major Hazard Aspects of the Transport of Dangerous Substances' (ISBN 0 11 885699 5)).

Cash Limits

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running cost limits for 1997–98. [30281]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, my Department's cash limits will change as follows:

(i) the cash limit for class V, vote 1—Highways Agency—will be reduced by £5,645,000 from £1,572,558,000 to £1,566,913,000. This reflects a transfer to the DOT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit to provide assistance to the South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority in respect of certain liabilities associated with the South Yorkshire Supertram.

(ii) the cash limit for class V, vote 2—Department of Transport: administration and transport services—will be increased by £1,000 from £161,700,000 to £161,701,000. The increase reflects an inter-vote transfer from class V, vote 4 of £336,000 running cost and £154,000 programme provision for Central Transport Group and Government Office administration expenditure and an inter-vote transfer from this vote to class II, vote 2 of £51,000 in respect of costs associated with the United Nations Convention on the law of the sea. In addition provision has been made for a receipt of £650,000 from the European Community in respect of the cost of the return visit to the wreck of the tanker Derbyshire and associated payments of £651,000. Provision of £1,000 has also been made for Government Office administration receipts and there is a net increase in other voted receipts of £438,000, reflecting expected outturn. Running cost provision for this vote will be increased by £336,000 from £86,521,000 to £86,857,000.

(iii) the cash limit on class V, vote 4—Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency—will be increased by £416,000 from £154,825,000. The increase involves a £2,900,000 claim on the Reserve for higher business volumes under the terms of DVLA's demand financing regime. The cash limit is also increased by £16,000 as a result of transfers of £8,000 from the Scottish Office (class XIII, Vote 5) and £8,000 from the Home Office (class VII, vote 1). These increases are offset by transfers of: £490,000 to class V, vote 2 (£336,000 of which is running costs); £504,000 to class V, vote 6; £160,000 to class VI, vote 5; and £1,346,000 to the DOT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit to provide assistance to the South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority. Running cost provision for this vote will be increased by £2,766,000 from £178,546,000 to £181,312,000.

(iv) the cash limit for class V, vote 5—Roads and Local Transport—will be increased by £850,000 from £315,538,000 to £316,388,000. The increase reflects the take-up of £650,000 capital end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50, and an inter-vote transfer from class VI, vote 2 of £200,000 for the Rural Transport Development Fund.

(v) the DOT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £22,603,000 from £356,343,000 to £378,946,000. The increase reflects transfers of £5,646,000 from the class V, vote 1 cash limit; £1,346,000 from the class V, vote 4 cash limit; £8,008,000 from the class VI, vote 1 cash limit; £5,000,000 from the DETR/NT non-voted cash limit; and £2,603,000 from the DETR/ERDF non-voted cash limit. £20,000,000 will be used to provide assistance to the South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority in respect of certain liabilities associated with South Yorkshire Supertram, and £2,603,000 for the development of Conway Park railway station.

(vi) the cash limit for class V, vote 6—other transport agencies—will be increased by £505,000 from £97,408,000 to £97,913,000. The increase reflects the inter-vote transfer from: class V, vote 4 of £504,000 towards the costs of voluntary early retirement; and class IV, vote 1 of £125,000 of running cost provision for the Marine Safety Agency to undertake work on ship radio matters. The increase in running cost provision will be offset by appropriations in aid of £124,000. The running cost provision for this vote will be increased by £629,000 from £38,800,000 to £39,429,000.

(vii) the cash limit for class V, vote 7—Passenger rail services—will be reduced by £21,092,000 from £1,465,385,000 to £1,444,293,000. The reduction reflects a £16,000,000 inter-vote transfer from this vote to class V, vote 3, section J for Metropolitan Railway Passenger Services Grant, a £4,652,000 reduction in respect of reduced expenditure on consultants, and a reduction in running costs of £440,000 which has been transferred to class VI, vote 5. The OPRAF gross running cost limit will accordingly be reduced by £440,000 from £7,367,000 to £6,927,000.

As a result of the changes in class V, votes 2, 4 and 6 the former Department of Transport's gross running cost limit will be increased by £3,731,000 from £373,359,000 to £377,090,000.

(viii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 1—Housing and construction, England—covering Sections A, D to G, I, J and L of that vote, will be reduced by £54,197,000 from £596,383,000 to £542,186,000. The principal change is a transfer of £42,153,000 to the DETR/HC (Housing Corporation) non-voted cash limit so that some Estates Renewal Challenge Fund grants can be paid by the Housing Corporation. In addition £8,008,000 will be transferred from various social housing programmes to the DOT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit in respect of South Yorkshire Supertram costs; £1,686,000 to the DETR/LGR (Local Government Reorganisation) non-voted cash limit; and £2,350,000 of Rent Assessment Panel running cost provision to the cash limit for class VI, vote 5—Department of the Environment: administration.

(ix) the DETR/HC (Housing Corporation) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £43,422,000 from £676,485,000 to £719,907,000, reflecting the transfer of £42,153,000 from the class VI, vote 1 cash limit described above and £1,269,000 take-up of end-year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50.

(x) The cash limit for class VI, vote 2—Regeneration and countryside and wildlife, England—will be reduced by £211,000 from £1,516,284,000 to £1,516,073,000 to reflect a transfer of £200,000 to the Rural Development Commission's spending on local transport (class V, vote 5) and a transfer of £11,000 to Environmental Research (class VI, vote 3).

(xi) The DOE/ERDF (European Regional Development Fund) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £2,603,000 from £138,322,000 to £135,719,000. This reflects a transfer to the DOT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit.

(xii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 3—Environmental protection and water—will be increased by £397,000 from £341,630,000 to £342,027,000. This increase reflects a transfer of £477,000 from the DETR/OES cash limit for remedial work on contaminated land and £60,000 from class III, vote 2 for preparatory costs associated with the EU nitrates directive, both to be carried out by the Environment Agency; an increase of £11,000 in provision for environmental protection research and monitoring, offset by a corresponding reduction in the cash limit for class VI, vote 2; a transfer of £100,000 to class II, vote 5 for the UK's annual contribution to the UN Habitat Fund; and a transfer of £51,000 to class II, vote 2 towards the UK's contribution to the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea.

(xiii) the DETR/OES (Other Environmental Services) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £250,000 from £21,042,000 to £20,792,000. The decrease reflects the transfer of £477,000 to the cash limit for class VI, vote 3 and the take up of £227,000 of capital end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns, 245–50.

(xiv) the cash limit for class VI, vote 4—Local government and planning, England—will be reduced by £2,000 from £30,987,636,000 to £30,987,634,000. This reduction reflects savings on planning and minerals research in Section D (Planning and minerals research) which will be used within vote 4, to cover an ex gratia payment from Section I (Other grants and payments) in connection with a decision to commute certain grant payments in 1984. Section I is outside the cash limit on the vote.

(xv) the DETR/LGR (Local government reorganisation) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £1,686,000 from £155,314,000 to £157,000,000 due to greater than forecast demand for Commutation Supplementary Credit Approvals (SCAs). This increase will be offset by a reduction of the same amount in the cash limit for class VI, vote 1.

(xvi) the cash limit for class VI, vote 5—Department of the Environment: administration—will be increased by £22,856,000 from £394,601,000 to £417,457,000. The increase reflects the take up £5,200,000 by the Health and Safety Executive and £12,050,000 by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions of running cost end year flexibility and £2,656,000 of capital end year flexibility, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50. In addition, inter-vote running cost transfers from class V, vote 7 of £440,000 and class VI, vote 1 of £2,350,000 have been made to central administration running costs, together with a transfer to the Health and Safety Executive from class V, vote 4 of £160,000 in respect of the Channel Tunnel Safety Unit.

(xvii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 7—Office of Water Services—will be increased by £500,000, from £10,300,000 to £10,800,000. An increase of £400,000 is required for work relating to the preparation for the Periodic Review in 1999 and £100,000 is required to upgrade computers to be year 2000 compliant. The increase will be met by a call on the reserve of £500,000.

(xviii) the DETR/NT (New Towns) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £5,000,000 from -£105,000,000 to -£110,000,000 to reflect a transfer to the DOT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit.

As a result of the changes shown on class VI, vote 5 the gross running cost limit for the Health and Safety Executive will be increased by £5,360,000 from £154,572,000 to £159,932,000 and the gross running cost limit for the former Department of the Environment will be increased by £12,490,000 from £210,396,000 to £222,886,000. As a result of changes shown on class VI, vote 7 the gross running cost limit for the Office of Water Services will be increased by £400,000 from £10,000,000 to £10,400,000.

The overall increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Roundabouts

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue guidance to local authorities concerning the use of advertising signs to acknowledge sponsorship of the maintenance of roundabouts. [30291]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are considering whether there is a need for such guidance, and if so, what form it should take.

Housing

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of empty housing units in the districts of (a) York and (b) Selby, in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997, (1) in total and (2) by sector. [30292]

Mr. Raynsford: The numbers of vacant local authority and housing associations dwellings in York and Selby on 1 April are as set out alongside the local authority's estimates of private and other public sector vacant dwellings. The figures for all three years are based on the current boundaries for the authorities (ie as amended from 1 April 1996).

Deaf Travellers

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the proposed Public Service Vehicle Accessibility Regulations will include provisions relating to visual information inside and outside buses and coaches to ensure that deaf and hard of hearing people can travel in safety and without unreasonable difficulty. [30285]

Ms Glenda Jackson: On 19 December 1997 we published our consultation on proposals for buses and coaches under the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1995. Copies of that document have been placed in the House Library.

The consultation document recognises the importance of visual information and proposes that in the main the subject will be covered through the guidance based on established good practice. We will look again at this and the wide range of other issues covered in the consultation document in the light of comments received both from the industry and from disabled people, particularly on whether there are demonstrable issues of safety.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each approval under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1995 for releases relating to trials for national seed listing or common seed listing, giving the names of the companies applying, the crop plant and variety names and reference numbers, the genetically modified traits of the varieties, the location of trial sites and the date when the approvals were granted. [30393]

Angela Eagle: The following applications have been granted consent under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 and 1995 to release genetically modified crops for the purposes of National List Trials:

97/R13/6—Maize with herbicide tolerance

97/R13/7—Oilseed rape with herbicide tolerance

97/R15/19—Oilseed rape hybrid system with herbicide tolerance

97/R15/20—Oilseed rape hybrid system with herbicide tolerance

97/R19/13—Sugar beet with herbicide tolerance

96/R21/4—Sugar beet with herbicide tolerance

96/R22/6—Oilseed rape with herbicide tolerance

96/R22/8—Fodder beet with herbicide tolerance

96/R27/1—Oilseed rape with herbicide tolerance

Full details of the companies, crop plants, varieties, the genetically modified traits, the location of the trial sites and the date consents were granted are available on the Department's Public Register and at the regional offices of the Environment Agency. The Public Register also includes a copy of the risk assessment and the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment's advice for each application.

Water Conservation

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what measures he is taking to ensure that new homes make full use of water-efficient devices; [30599]

(2) what measures the Government are taking to encourage water conservation in single-occupied homes; [30592]

(3) what measures he is taking to give occupiers of new homes adequate incentives to ensure the efficient use of water. [30600]

Angela Eagle: It is the duty of the water companies to promote the efficient use of water by all their customers, including those in single-occupied homes. The companies have published water efficiency plans and offer such services as free water audits and cistern displacement devices to reduce inefficient water use.

The Government are currently considering the content of the new Water Regulations, which will replace the Water Byelaws. Our intention is that these will include requirements for the installation of water efficient sanitary and other appliances. These provisions will apply to any new or refurbished property and to replacement appliances installed after the Regulations come into force.

Regulatory requirement and other measures to promote the efficient and sustainable use of water are directed at all water users.

Water Resources

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines the Government issues concerning the use of water-saving devices in delivering timed and measured supplies of water to gardens. [30593]

Angela Eagle: The Government have not produced such guidelines. However, water companies are under a duty to promote the efficient use of water by their customers, and this includes the external use of water. Most companies have produced information for their customers about the efficient use of water in gardens.

Many companies require customers who use garden watering devices delivering a high volume of water to be metered.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with water companies and their representatives concerning the availability of water resources in determining future housing need; [30594]

(2) what discussions have taken place between his Department and local authority planning officers concerning the consideration of water resources in local planning issues; [30595]

(3) how his Department differentiates between areas within the United Kingdom which have adequate water resources and those areas with least water resources in determining housing need. [30596]

Angela Eagle: I discussed the water resource position with the Water Services Association in December. The water companies have the duty to maintain and develop water supplies to meet the needs of their areas. In accordance with guidelines issued last August by the Environment Agency, all water companies are currently preparing water resource plans to maintain a balance between demand and supply over the next 25 years. These plans will have to address projected demands such as housing need and will need to be agreed with the Environment Agency, which has the duty to secure the proper use of water resources in England and Wales.

Local Authorities consult with infrastructure providers, such as water supply companies, when planning new developments and preparing their development plans. Planning Policy Guidance Note 12 (PPG12) draws attention to the need for this consultation to take place. This issue will be considered further in the proposals for revision to PPG12 currently being prepared.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Fourth Annual Report of the Government Panel on Sustainable Development. [30602]

Angela Eagle: The Government welcome the Fourth Annual Report of the Government Panel on Sustainable Development. The Panel's recommendations are currently being considered and the Government aim to publish their response in about three months.

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government's response to the United Kingdom Round Table on Sustainable Development's Second Annual Report will be published. [31036]

Mr. Prescott: The Government's response to the UK Round Table on Sustainable Development's Second Annual Report has been published today. I am pleased to say that the Government have been able to respond positively to many of the Round Table's recommendations and that action has already been taken in a number of areas, for example:

the Government have announced a 10-point plan to help secure reliable, efficient and environmentally sustainable water supplies; draft guidelines have been issued to local authorities on meeting their obligations under the Road Traffic Reduction Act 1997;

the Government have consulted widely on proposals to develop an integrated transport policy and will issue a White Paper in the Spring;

the Government have published a statement on their strategy for modernising the planning system, and a consultation paper on reform of regional planning guidance; legislation has been proposed to establish Regional Development Agencies;

the Government have established a review of renewable energy policy.

The Government value the Round Table's important contribution to the achievement of sustainable development. I am placing copies of the response in the Library.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many heavy goods vehicle drivers were stopped for a vehicle inspection during 1997. [30698]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency, Mr. Ron Oliver, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 23 February 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question on how many heavy goods vehicle drivers were stopped for a vehicle inspection during 1997.

The Vehicle Inspectorate (VI) does not gather any figures on the actual number of drivers it stops for inspection, only the number of vehicles, some of which have more than one driver.

VI maintains its records by financial year. During the period April to September 1997, the Inspectorate conducted 98,025 inspections of heavy goods vehicles (HGVs) for traffic enforcement (which includes, among other items, a specific check upon the driver for licensing and tachograph rules compliance). Roadworthiness enforcement checks (looking at the mechanical state of the vehicle) were carried out on 54,714 HGVs but there will be overlap in that some vehicles would have been subjected to both traffic and roadworthiness inspections.

For the financial year April 1996 to March 1997, traffic enforcement checks were carried out on 214,924 heavy goods vehicles and roadworthiness inspections were carried out on 107,601 HGVs; it is not possible to disaggregate the figures for the 3 months January to March 1997.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, columns 604–05, what account he took of the studies quoted on (a) the influence of cannabis on car handling judgment and (b) instances where cannabis consumption made drivers more alert and cautious. [30796]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is aware of the studies to which my hon. Friend refers, as well as a number of other studies of the influence of cannabis on driving ability which reached different conclusions.

Pavement Cleaning

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue targets to local authorities on the cleaning of pavements. [30776]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to set targets for cleaning of pavements. However, local authorities are under a duty to keep specified public land, including pavements, clear of litter and refuse as far as is practicable. My Department issued a Code of Practice in 1991 to provide practical guidance on the discharge of this duty. In addition, the Audit Commission requires local authorities to publish performance indicators in relation to their street cleaning duty.

Clean Vehicle Technology

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of alternative fuels in promoting clean vehicle technology. [30579]

Dr. Strang: Conventional petrol and diesel vehicles are becoming increasingly cleaner as a result of a progressive tightening of emissions standards and are expected to provide the primary motive sources for the foreseeable future. Nevertheless, in well-engineered applications, alternative fuelled vehicles do have a role to play, especially in urban areas. In these circumstances the current limitations on their range and refuelling might not be too disadvantageous and they can bring worthwhile reductions in emissions, especially of particulates and NOx.

Road Fatalities and Injuries

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) fatalities and (b) injuries on the roads in England and Wales broken down by (i) motorways, (ii) dual carriageways, (iii) town and city centres, (iv) other rural areas and (v) other residential areas in the last year for which figures are available. [30409]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 19 February 1998]: Data are not held in the exact form requested. The available information is shown in the table.

Number of fatalities and injuries on motorways, dual carriageways and on rural/residential roads in England and Wales: 1996

Road type	Fatal	Casualties injured
Motorways	162	11,995
Dual carriageways	472	33,038
Rural	1,667	78,205
Suburban/residential	1,059	158,033

Road Accidents (Children)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (i) fatalities and (ii) injuries of school children walking to and from school in Essex occurred in (a) residential areas and (b) rural areas, in the last year for which figures are available. [30311]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of school children killed or injured walking to and from school in rural and residential areas: Essex 1996

Residential	1	102

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the impact on employment levels in (a) housing and (b) power generation, if the sulphur dioxide emissions target of 1.2 per cent. is to be met. [30495]

Angela Eagle: The Environmental Agency is currently consulting on proposals for reducing polluting emissions from existing coal- and oil-fired power stations. The Agency's consultation paper contains a proposal to require that all coal-fired power stations which operate without flue gas desulphurisation equipment (FGD) should be required to use coal with a sulphur content of less than 1.2 per cent. from 1999. The closing date for responses is 10 March and I am sure that the Agency will reflect very carefully on the representations which it receives.

It would not be right for me to comment on the Agency's proposals, since the generators would have a right of appeal to the Secretary of State against any decision to vary their authorisations in line with the consultation paper. Nevertheless, I can say that the Secretary of State has not estimated the impact of the 1.2 per cent. limit on employment levels either in power generation or housing. It seems particularly unlikely that there could be much of a direct effect on the housing market.

Gilberts Animal By-Products

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 728, on Gilberts Animal By-Products, if the Environment Agency has completed its investigations into waste disposal activities by the company. [29587]

Angela Eagle: I understand that the Environment Agency is awaiting an opinion from Counsel before taking a decision on whether to initiate a prosecution in relation to the spreading of condensate from the rendering plant operated by John Pointon and Sons, formerly Gilberts Animal By-products Ltd.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30323]

Angela Eagle: The following land and properties are surplus and in the process of being sold or marketed:

208 Grove Rd, Hounslow.
Site at Cardington, Bedfordshire.
Driving Test Centres at:
- Wealdstone.
- Redhill.
- Gillingham.
- Bilston.
- Bishops Stortford.
- Upton (part only).

Coastguard property at:
- 1 Gordon Rd, Lowerstoft.

Vehicle Inspectorate property at:
- Middleton Rd, Heywood, Lancashire.
- Redhouse Rd, Croydon, Surrey.

The estimated value of an individual property for sale is not disclosed since it may affect the sale price. Overall, the properties have an estimated value of £2.6 million.

Departmental Pay

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people employed by (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which his Department is responsible earn (i) less than £3.20 per hour, (ii) between £3.20 and £3.60 per hour, (iii) between £3.60 and £4.00 per hour and (iv) between £4.00 and £4.62 per hour. [30750]

Angela Eagle: The number of staff earning hourly rates is as follows:

	(i) less than £3.20	(ii) £3.20 to £3.60	(iii) £3.60 to £4.00	(iv) £4.00 to £4.62

The figures include both permanent and casual employees. Hourly rates were calculated from net hours worked (ie. excluding lunch breaks).

Canals

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy on the use of canals and navigable rivers for the carrying of freight traffic; and if he will make a statement. [30686]

Angela Eagle: The Government are committed to encouraging the use of water for carrying freight as an alternative to road transport where this is a practical and economic option. Freight Facilities Grants are also available to support the transfer of freight from roads to inland waterways or rail. The Department is considering the scope for encouraging greater use of inland waterways and estuarial rivers as part of the development of an integrated transport strategy. The White Paper on the strategy, setting out a strategic framework for sustainable transport policy, will be published in the Spring.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the average (a) construction and (b) maintenance costs for a mile of (i) canal, (ii) road and (iii) railway. [30691]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following tables show the costs for construction and maintenance of canals and roads. The corresponding figures for railways are not available.

Japanese Cars

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the checks proposed under the new single vehicle approval system will ensure that all cars manufactured and used in Japan and subsequently imported into the United Kingdom as second-hand cars will meet EU type approved regulations; and if such cars comply with United Kingdom safety standards. [30722]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The proposed Single Vehicle Approval (SVA) standards are broadly based on EU type approval requirements. The standards cannot be as stringent in every respect because of practical considerations; for example, SVA cannot apply the same standards for crashworthiness. The SVA scheme is under review, but the intention is that the majority of non-type approved cars entering Britain will be inspected before they can be licensed and registered here. The proposed exceptions are: any vehicle over 10 years old; and those vehicles over 3 years old being imported by individuals who have lived abroad for at least 12 months and used the vehicle abroad for at least 6 months. Cars manufactured to Japanese standards would normally require at least the following modifications to pass the proposed SVA inspection: the inclusion of an mph display on the speedometer; the addition of a rear fog light; and alteration of the fuel filler nozzle.

Ecolabelling

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses he has received on the review of the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board; and how many were in favour and how many against a United Kingdom scheme. [30978]

Angela Eagle: My Department has invited views from over a hundred organisations and individuals as part of the review of the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board, which is still in progress. As well as a written consultation exercise, the review includes detailed interviews with over 30 interested organisations and individuals. The review addresses a number of important issues connected with ecolabelling—including the question of whether the United Kingdom should have its own award scheme, which is attracting interest from those responding to consultation. The Government should be in a position to announce the outcome of the review in April. A copy of the report, and of the written responses to the consultation exercise, will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement regarding the latest European Commission proposals to revise ecolabelling regulations. [30787]

Angela Eagle: The European Commission's Proposals for revising the Regulation on the EU ecolabelling award scheme has been discussed over the last year in meetings of competent bodies and national experts from the member states. It is currently being considered by the Committee of the European Parliament. Last week the Proposal was tabled by the UK Presidency for consideration by the Environment Working Group. These processes have revealed several aspects of the Proposal which would need substantial review before agreement on a new Regulation could be reached.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will appoint representatives of the Environment Agency to serve on regional development agencies; and if he will make a statement. [30266]

Mr. Caborn: Members of Regional Development Agencies will not be appointed as representatives of particular groups or bodies. We will be looking for candidates that can bring a range of experience to the board, particularly those that combine experience across a number of sectoral interests.

We expect the board to include members who have experience relevant to the achievement of sustainable development and will be consulting the Environment Agency, among others, about suitable candidates for board membership.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cash Limits

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals and underlying reasons there are to change the 1997–98 cash limit for the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner and Health Service Commissioner. [30434]

Dr. David Clark: The cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 4 will be reduced by £356,000 from £15,000,000 to £14,644,000.

Consultants engaged by the Department of Health originally estimated that the Health Service Commissioners (Amendment) Act 1996 would lead to a 150% increase in the caseload of the Health Service Commissioner. This estimate was used as the basis for a transfer between Health Departments and the Health Service Commissioner of £6,444,000. Only £3,000,000 of this amount was taken by the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner and Health Service Commissioners as part of the total supply for 1997–98 Class XVIII Vote 4 with the balance of £3,444,000 treated as retained PES.

As the Health Service Commissioners (Amendment) Act 1996 has so far generated less casework than expected, £3,800,000 will be transferred back to the Health Departments, subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates: £3,257,000 to Department of Health (England) Class XIII Vote 4; £347,000 to Department of Health (Scotland) Class XI Vote 1; and £196,000 to Department of Health (Wales) Class XIV Vote 4. Of the total transfer, £3,444,000 is funded from retained PES. The balance of the transfer is effected by reducing the existing cash limit of £15,000,000 by £356,000 to £14,644,000.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals there are to change the 1997–98 cash limit or running costs for the Office of Public Service. [30435]

Dr. David Clark: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the Office of Public Service (Class XVII, Vote 1) will be reduced by £2,030,000 from £158,821,000 to £156,791,000 and the gross running cost limit will be decreased by £606,000 from £80,423,000 to £79,817,000.

The changes reflect the transfer of £100,000 to HM Treasury (Class XVI, Vote 1) reflecting the transfer of responsibility for PFI IT advice; and transfers from PACE of £292,000 to DOE (Class VI, Vote 1), and £34,000 to LCD (Class VIII, Vote 1), for the transfers of ownership of Windsor House, and Sovereign House respectively. Additionally, the running cost limit will be reduced by £506,000, and the cash limit by £1,604,000, reflecting the offset of increased expenditure on Cabinet Office (Class XVIII, Vote 1).

Freedom of Information

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if his Department has concluded the inquiry into the premature leaking of the contents of the White Paper on freedom of information; [30789]

(2) if his Department has identified the source of the premature leak of the contents of the White Paper on freedom of information. [30788]

Dr. David Clark: I told the House on 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 811, that there appeared to have been a premature disclosure of some features of the Freedom of Information White Paper, and that I had set in train the task of looking further into the circumstances. The established procedures were followed and have been concluded, but yielded no evidence to identify the source of the apparent disclosure.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which he has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23750]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 19 January 1998]: On the occasion of the Royal Garden Party on 24 July 1997, I was accompanied by my wife and daughter, at no additional expense to public funds.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome (Contents)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he will announce further details of the contents of the Millennium Dome. [31203]

Mr. Mandelson: The Prime Minister will address sponsors and other interested parties on 24 February at an event at which models of a number of the zones of the Millennium Experience will be on display. Copies of the Prime Minister's speech, and of associated material on the Millennium Dome and its contents, will be placed in the Libraries of the House when it opens on 24 February.

Millennium Dome (Faith Communities)

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) what steps he will take to encourage the commissioning of original works of art, for the Millennium Dome, by faith communities; [29696]

(2) what plans he has to assist faith communities in financing their contributions to the Millennium Dome interior, with particular reference to those which will not use National Lottery funding. [29695]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 18 February 1998]: The New Millennium Experience company (NMEC) is working closely with faith communities through the Lambeth Group—which brings together representatives of the faith communities to contribute to planning of the Millennium—to ensure that the Dome includes exhibits which reflect the contribution of, and are relevant to, faith communities. A member of the Group is being financed by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport to advise the NMEC on handling faith issues within the Dome. The Lambeth Group has also discussed finance issues. I am attending the meeting of the Group on 23 February and will be interested to hear from the faith communities how these discussions might develop further.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what statutory basis he has set aside the proportion of money payable to good causes from the National Lottery since 14 October 1997 for the New Opportunities Fund. [31207]

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his oral answer of 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 750, if he will make a statement on the means by which the National Lottery Bill [Lords] represents a statutory authority for the shadow accounts for the new opportunities fund. [30856]

Mr. Chris Smith: Neither the distributing bodies nor my department need any specific statutory authority to maintain shadow accounts. They are for indicative planning purposes reflecting the basis of the Government's policy as announced, and will enable the smooth and straightforward implementation of the Bill if it becomes law. No actual funds will pass from existing distributors to the New Opportunities Fund, unless and until the Lottery Bill receives Royal Assent. Meanwhile, the proceeds for good causes continue to be allocated between existing distributors' accounts in the National Lottery Distribution Fund exactly in line with the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 and Orders made under it.

Television Licences

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will review the current system for the provision of subsidy for television licences for pensioners. [30580]

Mr. Fisher: The Government's Agreement with the BBC provides for a review of future funding arrangements prior to March 2002. We shall conduct that review in good time to allow decisions to be taken before then. It will include a detailed consideration of licence fee concessions.

East Midlands Arts

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to meet the Chair and Chief Executive of East Midlands Arts. [30927]

Mr. Fisher: I met the Chairman and Chief Executive of the East Midlands Arts Board during my visit to the East Midlands in early January, when I was pleased to learn of the vibrant artistic activity in the area.

National Lottery

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which conditions of Camelot's licence govern the frequency of the National Lottery draws. [29833]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 17 February 1998]: Under section 11 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the Secretary of State has directed the Director-General not to license games that encourage excessive participation. I have asked the Acting Director-General to write to my hon. Friend about any particular conditions in the licence dealing with frequency of draws and copies of his response will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish details of the (a) consultations and (b) meetings which led to the awarding of the licence to run the National Lottery to Camelot. [28599]

Mr. Chris Smith: The award of the licence to Camelot to operate the National Lottery is a matter for the Director-General of the Office of the National Lottery. The Acting Director-General will write to my hon. Friend and copies of his response will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will arrange for information to be published on the number of lottery tickets purchased each year in each constituency and district council area. [29680]

Mr. Tom Clarke: Figures on ticket sales are not held by the Department and are an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked the Acting Director-General of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the Lottery, to write to my hon. Friend and copies of his response will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Tower (Portsmouth Harbour)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make the viability study for the Millennium Tower in Portsmouth Harbour available to local hon. Members; and if he will make a statement. [30245]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 February 1998]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) applications have been put forward for and (b) discussions held concerning receiving European Union moneys for informing United Kingdom nationals about the European Union since 1 May 1997. [27418]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 4 February 1998]: The Treasury last year applied to the Commission for financial assistance towards the cost of producing and distributing their booklet "EMU: Practical Information for Business". Discussions with the Commission about further funding for practical information material on EMU are ongoing. No other Department has applied for EU money to support information activities.

Cash Limits

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's cash limits and running cost limits for 1997–98. [30280]

Mr. Fatchett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for Class II, Vote 2 (Other External Relations) will be increased by £17,945,000 from £229,815,000 to £247,760,000. The increase is required to cover UK contributions to certain OSCE, United Nations and WEU Missions of £26,429,000. This will be partly offset by recoveries of £5,000,000 from the United Nations. There is a reduction of £3,788,000 because of a negative Overseas Price Movement. This will be partly offset by transfers in of £304,000. A total of £204,000 from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class V, Vote 2 and Class VI, Vote 3), Department of Trade and Industry (Class IV, Vote 1) and the Ministry of Defence (Class I, Vote 1) in respect of their contributions to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea following UK accession and a further £100,000 from the Ministry of Defence (Class I, Vote 1) in respect of their contribution to the grant-in-aid to the Atlantic Council of the UK.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 1 (Overseas Representation) will be reduced by £16,850,000 from £628,876,000 to £612,026,000. This reduction takes account of negative Overseas Price Movements of £20,742,000 (£10,095,000 running costs, £10,417,000 other current and £230,000 capital) which has offset a £4,000,000 running cost claim to cover major international conferences. There have also been three transfers to other Government Departments: £10,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVIII, Vote 2) for information work; £137,000 to the Department for International Development (Class II, Vote 5) for Know How Fund staff and £4,000 to the Privy Council Office (Class XVIII, Vote 3) to help fund the new UK Anti Drugs Co-ordinator and his Deputy. These have been partially offset by two transfers in: £25,000 from the Ministry of Defence (Class I, Vote 1) and £18,000 from the Northern Ireland Office (Class XV, Vote 1) for the Whitehall District Heating System.

The gross running costs limit on Class II, Vote 1 will be reduced by £6,701,000 from £534,813,000 to £528,112,000. The Wilton Park section of the Vote has been increased by £498,000 gross running costs, £29,000 other current, £65,000 capital and £351,000 appropriations in aid. These increases have been fully offset by reductions in the Overseas Representation section of the Vote.

The net running cost limit for Wilton Park has been increased by £149,000 from £638,000 to £787,000.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 4 (The British Council) will be reduced by £1,637,000 from £97,884,000 to £96,247,000 because of negative Overseas Price Movements of £1,637,000.

The net decrease to the Vote will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Embassies (Furniture)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines exist for the purchase of furniture in embassies and high commissions overseas; whether they include price ranges; and whether there is specific guidance on the purchase of beds. [30233]

Mr. Fatchett: Posts overseas are provided with written guidance on purchasing procedures, based on best practice, as well as illustrated catalogues which cover ranges of suitable furniture and other products meeting British Standards. The catalogues are accompanied by a price list, which is based on contracts let competitively and negotiated centrally by the Department. Beds are included in the catalogues. The only specific guidance on purchasing of beds relates to safety standards for bunk beds and children's cots. Posts can opt to purchase through the Departmental Procurement Unit, or locally, using the price list as a benchmark for local products.

China

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise human rights issues in his discussions with the Chinese authorities on 20 February. [30262]

Mr. Fatchett: The current situation in the Gulf has led me to postpone my forthcoming visit to China. However, we will continue to express our concerns about human rights to the Chinese authorities at every suitable opportunity. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did this most recently when he met Chinese leaders in Peking in January 1998.

Russia

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representation he intends to make to the Russian government about the number of cases pending under the legislation on religious freedom and the severity of the draft regulations. [30288]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are not aware of any cases pending under the law on freedom of conscience and religious association, and understand that formal regulations designed to assist provincial officials to implement the complex law are still under discussion in Moscow. In the meantime, the Russian Ministry of Justice has issued informal guidelines which seem to be generally less restrictive.

The Russian authorities assure us that implementation of the law on freedom of conscience and religious association will not contravene Russia's international human rights obligations. Flexible application will be the key. If we receive evidence that the law is restricting religious freedom then I will consider raising the matter under the broad umbrella of human rights issues.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Africa. [30226]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary plans to visit sub-Saharan Africa but no firm dates have yet been fixed.

Iraq

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each currently relevant United Nations resolution concerning Iraq and indicate the present state of compliance of the Iraqi Government with each of them. [29796]

Mr. Fatchett: In the aftermath of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990, 39 resolutions have been adopted. The cost of determining and setting out the exact state of Iraqi compliance with each one of these would be disproportionately high.

In relation to the present crisis over the work of UNSCOM, Iraq has failed to comply with UNSCRs 687, 707, 715, 1060, 1115, 1134 and 1137, and with demands from the Security Council in numerous Presidential statements.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current condition of Kurdish people in northern Iraq. [30228]

Mr. Fatchett: A Foreign Office official visited northern Iraq in January. He reported some improvements in the implementation of the "oil for food" scheme. There had been almost full food baskets since August 1997 and medicines had been distributed in larger quantities since November 1997. A major resettlement programme was underway, with some roads and schools completed and work on one village completed.

Several UK NGOs are working in northern Iraq. Most are funded by the Government.

We continue our efforts to encourage the KDP and the PUK to resolve their differences through dialogue and reconciliation. Members of the senior leadership of both parties met in Shaqlawah on 12 February to discuss inter-party co-operation on humanitarian issues and other confidence building measures.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Iraqi claims to possess biologically armed intermediate range missiles. [30248]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Iraq denies that it retains any biological weapons or missiles with a range over 150 kilometres, both of which are prohibited under UN Security Council Resolution 687. But the UN Special Commission (UNSCOM) has reported that serious gaps still remain in Iraq's declarations relating to all of its proscribed activities. Without full, unhindered access to all sites of Mass Destruction programmes, UNSCOM cannot be sure that Iraq does not retain operational SCUD-type missiles, or chemical or biological warheads for these.

Mr. Azil Nadir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had, and with whom, on the case of Mr. Azil Nadir; and if he will make a statement. [30601]

Mr. Doug Henderson: When Mr. Nadir was in Turkey, we made repeated representations to the Turkish authorities through our Embassy in Ankara to seek his arrest pending extradition proceedings, and to remind the Turkish authorities that an Interpol "Red Notice" in respect of Mr. Nadir had been issued. We would do so again if Mr. Nadir returned to Turkey from northern Cyprus.

Correspondence

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the languages into which the Baroness Symons' letter to hon. Members of 14 January was translated and the cost of the translations. [30681]

Mr. Fatchett: The languages were: Hindi, Punjabi, Tamil, Gujarati, Urdu, Bengali and Sinhalese. The cost of the translations was £349.09. This amount did not include the staff costs involved in processing and dispatching the translation to all Members.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many explanatory statements following refusal of applications by entry clearance offices in British Missions overseas have been (a) received and (b) dispatched to the Independent Appellate Authority for listing of appeals; and if he will make a statement. [30741]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1996, following refusal by entry clearance officers in British Posts overseas, 8,829 settlement and 1,369 non-settlement appeals were received. 8,317 settlement and 878 non-settlement appeal explanatory statements were dispatched by 31 December 1996 to the appellate authorities.

Figures for 1997 will be available by the end of April.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30319]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department is reviewing the use of all its assets, including identifying assets which are surplus to requirements, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review which will be completed this summer. Two former wireless stations in Buckinghamshire and a number of overseas properties have already been identified as surplus to requirements and put on the market. It is not possible to give an estimate of the value of these assets, as this will depend on the circumstances of their disposal. For accounting purposes, surplus assets will be valued in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Resource Accounting Manual.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30716]

Mr. Fatchett: Three contracts have been awarded. All were to advertise Consular services and were subject to single tender in line with the circumstances outlined in the written answer of 27 March 1996, Official Report, column 627, given by the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Mr. Jeremy Hanley.

Advertisement in RADAR (A guide for disabled people): £1,800

TV fillers shown by Wrenvision at the Passport Office for queueing applicants (3 year contract): £48,000

Advertisement in the Destinations '98 travel fair showguide: £4,200

This Department also advertises indirectly recruitment opportunities through call-off contracts with recruitment specialists. The information sought is not readily available with regard to these contracts and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic effort his Department has undertaken to bring a halt to armed conflict in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [30761]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have consistently worked for a peaceful settlement of the crisis in Sierra Leone. We are now consulting member states of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) on the situation. I discussed it with President Kabbah of Sierra Leone on 20 February. We are considering urgently the need for rapid UN engagement, which we are discussing with the UN Secretariat and with Security Council members. The need now is for the restoration of the legitimate President and the establishment of a broadly-based Government and for all parties to move to a process of disarmament and demobilisation.

The most immediate requirement is for a humanitarian relief effort, to which we are ready to make a major contribution. The Department for International Development (DFID) has sent an expert to the region to liaise with the UN and NGOs over the quickest and most effective way to achieve this.

Ethical Foreign Policy

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason he did not discuss the ethical foreign policy objective of Her Majesty's Government with the President of the European Commission on the occasion of the latter's recent visit. [30502]

Mr. Doug Henderson: President Santer is fully aware of our Presidency priorities, including on human rights. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's recent brief discussions with President Santer focused on other issues.

DEFENCE

Iraq

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the potential environmental consequences of an air strike on stockpiles held in Iraq of chemical and biological materials; and if he will make a statement. [30607]

Mr. George Robertson: I am not prepared to discuss hypothetical target options. Firstly, of course, I sincerely hope that there will be no need to take any military action; we wait to see the terms of the agreement that the UN Secretary-General has brought back from Baghdad. We hope this will indeed prove acceptable. Secondly, even if we yet find ourselves having to resort to military force, we would obviously not wish to give potential early warning to Saddam of possible targets. If force had to be used, we would look very carefully at all relevant options and take into account potential hazards, before deciding whether to target a particular location.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost per day of United Kingdom forces presently deployed in the Gulf. [30569]

Mr. George Robertson: The extra costs incurred from the beginning of the operation in the Gulf up to 2 February 1998 amounted to £2.5m. Costs relate mainly to the transportation of forces to the area, and consequently are not a consistent daily amount.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total extra cost to public funds since 1 October 1997 of the preparations made to deal with the situation in Iraq. [30606]

Mr. George Robertson: The total extra cost to the MOD of the United Kingdom forces currently deployed in the Gulf amounted to £2.5m up to 2 February 1998. Costs incurred since then are not yet available.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30713]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD's main advertising needs arise in connection with Services recruiting campaigns, and are arranged through agreements with the Central Office of Information. No new contracts have been awarded on our behalf since 1 May 1997. Some other Services' recruitment advertising is arranged locally, on a Single Service basis, but the information is not held centrally, and could be provided only with disproportionate cost.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on changes to the Class 1 cash limits and the defence operating costs limit for 1997–98. [30412]

Dr. Reid: The Government have decided that, subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, an addition should be made to the Defence budget to cover the additional costs of operations by UK forces in Bosnia in the current financial year. These costs are estimated to be £189 million. Some £11 million will be met from technical adjustments leaving £178 million which will be met from the Reserve.

A Spring Supplementary Estimate is, therefore, to be presented to the House to take on to Vote the additional provision of £178 million. The Supplementary Estimate will also make adjustments between the Defence operating costs programme (mostly Votes 1 and 2) and the Defence equipment programme (Vote 3) to reflect the expected pattern of expenditure on the Defence programme generally.

Because of the adjustment between operating costs and the equipment programme, the additional funding will be drawn on to Class 1, Vote 3 and token increases of £1k will be taken on Votes 1 and 2. The cash limits on Votes 1 and 2 will, however, be reduced and that on Vote 3 increased by more than the amount of the additional funding to reflect the realignment. The cash limit changes will be as follows:

Class 1 Vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,096,130	–3,786	10,092,344
2	4,754,337	–59,263	4,695,074
3	6,112,530	241,068	6,353,598
Total	20,962,997	178,019	21,141,016

The impact of these changes on the Ministry of Defence Operating Cost limit is as follows:

£000

Class 1 Vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,090,598	−3,786	10,086,812
2	4,754,337	−59,263	4,695,074
3	735,976	−1,720	734,256
Total	15,580,911	−64,769	15,516,142

Because the increase on the Defence budget cash limit will be met from the Reserve, which is part of the Government Control total, it will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of total annual savings resulting from spend to save decisions being delayed due to the Strategic Defence Review. [28324]

Mr. George Robertson: The delay in decisions on the construction of a new building planned at Abbey Wood, which I referred to in a previous answer on 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 196, is the only spend to save decision identified as having been deferred by the Strategic Defence Review. Since final decisions on the Review have yet to be taken, I cannot give details of future efficiency savings or the impact of the review on previously planned savings. I am, however, confident that the outcome of the Review will result in improved efficiency throughout my Department.

Low Flying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flying accidents have been recorded during low-altitude training in the last 10 years; and what measures are being taken to reduce the number of accidents. [29358]

Mr. Spellar: In the years 1988–97 the number of accidents involving MOD aircraft engaged in low flying training were as follows:

1989—4
1990—6
1991—5
1992—3
1993—6
1994—7
1995—2

Studies suggest that there are certain conspicuity measures that could further increase the effectiveness of the "see and avoid" principle. We have initiated a programme to paint the majority of training aircraft black including the Hawk, Tucano, Dominie and Jetstream; training helicopters and the Firefly aircraft are painted in a combination of yellow and black. In addition, the majority of military aircraft are being fitted with high intensity strobe lights, and RAF aircraft with high power light assemblies where installation is not cost prohibitive. The procurement of a Collision Warning System is under consideration as part of the Strategic Defence Review.

Flight safety is a key priority and we continue to pursue initiatives that promise further improvements in that area.

Departmental Pay

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people employed by (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which his Department is responsible earn (i) less than £3.20 per hour, (ii) between £3.20 and £3.60 per hour, (iii) between £3.60 and £4.00 per hour and (iv) between £4.00 and £4.62 per hour. [30760]

Mr. Spellar: It is not possible to show the information precisely as requested. The tables show MOD civilian staff, including juveniles and apprentices, with hourly pay rates in the specified bands. Table 1 covers the whole department, including the smaller agencies but excluding the Meteorological Office, the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the Hydrographic Office which have delegated pay arrangements. These three agencies are shown in table 2.

Table 1: MOD civilian staff with hourly pay rates in the following bands (excluding Meteorological Office, DERA and Hydrographic Office)

£	Number of staff
Below 3.20	289
3.20—3.59	2,614
3.60—3.99	1,609
4.00—4.62	17,467

Table 2: MOD civilian staff in Meteorological Office, DERA and Hydrographic Office with hourly pay rates in the following bands

£	Number of staff
Below 3.20	12
3.20—3.59	12
4.00—4.62	375

In the case of the Armed Forces, pay is based on recommendations made by the independent Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB) and published annually. The 1998 AFPRB Report (Cmnd 3834) is in the Library of the House. The pay of the Armed Forces is based on daily, not hourly, rates.

Firing Ranges

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the advertised usage of (a) Merrivale Range, (b) Okehampton Range and (c) Willsworthy Range in the Dartmoor National Park for live firing in the year ended December 1997 expressed in number of days; and how many days' firing took place. [27509]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Tomahawks

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures were taken to verify claims made by the Tomahawk land attack missiles manufacturers and the United States Department of Defense about its accuracy before procuring the missile. [30170]

Mr. Spellar: The US Department of Defense has provided detailed information on the results of Tomahawk operations and missile test firings. This information was assessed fully before a decision was taken to procure the weapon system. Manufacturers' claims did not influence the decision.

Furniture Purchases

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines exist for the purchase of furniture for service accommodation; whether price ranges are provided; and whether there is specific advice with regard to the purchase of beds. [30235]

Dr. Reid: Levels of individual entitlement and agreed standards for the provision of furniture and furnishings for all Service accommodation are promulgated in the relevant Joint Service Publications. Such items are routinely purchased using centrally negotiated tri-service, fixed-priced, enabling arrangements. Where contract cover is not provided quotations are used. There is a specialist advisory service which provides advice about all items procured under these arrangements including beds.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location and running costs in the last year for which figures are available of each of his Department's buildings. [30071]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 18 February 1998]: The information sought is not held centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Indian Ocean

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current level of the British armed forces presence in the Indian Ocean. [30227]

Dr. Reid: The current British Armed Forces presence in the Indian Ocean consists of the Naval establishment at Diego Garcia, with a complement of 42 people.

Service Personnel (Asbestos Exposure)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes in Government policy have taken place since 1 May 1997 in relation to compensation claims for exposure to asbestos from former service personnel; how many claims have been received in each of the last five years; what plans he has to extend the range of former employees eligible for compensation; and if he will make a statement. [30737]

Mr. Spellar: Former Service personnel who unfortunately contract asbestos-related diseases as a result of their service in the Armed Forces can claim a war pension. No policy changes have been introduced affecting this group since 1 May 1997. However, my Department is sympathetic to concerns that compensation arrangements for former Service personnel suffering from asbestos-related diseases may not be as favourable as those for former MOD civilian employees. This issue is being examined and we hope to reach a conclusion within the next few months.

The number of compensation claims received by my Department in each of the last five years from former Service personnel in respect of asbestos-related disease was:

1997: 7

Widows' Pensions

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will alter the payment of pensions to service widows who were widowed before 1973 to bring such pension policy into line with that for service widows widowed after 1973. [30740]

Mr. Spellar: The Government have no plans to alter the rules of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme which apply to Service widows whose husbands retired before 31 March 1993.

Exercise Senator 97

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 628, how many press releases were issued before, during and after Exercise Senator 97; what information was given to local residents; how many members of the media were invited to attend the exercise; and how many of his Department's staff took part. [30501]

Dr. Reid: Exercise SENATOR 97, a grade B nuclear accident response exercise, was held between 22–25 September 1997 at Prince William of Gloucester Barracks and Lincolnshire Fire Brigade Headquarters in the Grantham area of Lincolnshire. This was a table top exercise that focused on the response at the local strategic level. No press releases were issued before, during or after Exercise SENATOR 97. No information on the exercise was provided to local residents, although local MPs were informed in advance by letter, as is normal departmental practice. No members of the media were invited to attend the exercise. Two hundred and fifty members of my Department participated in this exercise.

Defence Council Instructions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of the titles and subject matter of each of the unclassified Defence Council Instructions which have been issued since 1 December 1997. [30469]

Dr. Reid: Yes. I am placing a list today.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30318]

Mr. Spellar: My Department currently has some 235 properties and land which are surplus to requirement and in the process of disposal. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with a listing and place a copy in the Library of the House. The number of properties in disposal inevitably changes as disposals are completed.

The financial information sought is commercially sensitive and could, if released, be prejudicial to the conduct of my Department's business. I am therefore withholding this under Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Vermin Control

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 428, if he (a) permits and (b) encourages the use of rifles as a means of vermin control in areas of his Department's estate which are being used for military training at that time; and if he will make a statement. [30610]

Mr. Spellar: Access, for whatever reason, to areas of the Defence estate where military training is taking place is restricted for obvious safety reasons and would be permitted only in line with these restrictions. Access in these circumstances would not be encouraged.

Casualties

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British soldiers have been injured or killed on active duty in each of the last five years and to date in the current year. [30975]

Dr. Reid: The number of British soldiers killed or injured while on active duty from 1993 to the current day is as follows:

Year	Deaths	Injuries
1993	7	17
1994	7	28
1995	0	18
1996	4	5
1998 to date	0	0

Explosives Theft (Brecon)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiry he is currently conducting into the circumstances surrounding the theft of explosives from Dering Lines, Brecon, Infantry Training Centre during 1997. [30923]

Dr. Reid: A Board of Inquiry is underway to investigate the theft of explosives from the Army Training Area, Sennybridge, following the conviction of a soldier serving at the Infantry Training Centre, Brecon. I understand that the Board has already established that no explosives were stolen from the Infantry Training Centre in Brecon itself.

Second Division

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects Second Division will have an expeditionary force capability. [30509]

Dr. Reid: The Second Division is for the most part an administrative formation responsible for units stationed in the Eastern counties from Northumberland in the north to Northamptonshire, Cambridgeshire and Suffolk in the south. The Division therefore has no expeditionary force capability; but many of the units for which it has administrative responsibility do have such a capability, including notably 19 Mechanised Infantry Brigade in Catterick.

RAF Coltishall

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are his plans for the future use of RAF Coltishall; [30935]

(2) if RAF Coltishall is planned to be an operational base for Jaguars beyond 2002. [30934]

Dr. Reid: In common with many other bases, the future of RAF Coltishall is being considered in the context of our wide-ranging work on the Strategic Defence Review. Once all work on the review has been considered by Ministers, we will publish a White Paper setting out our overall conclusions. It is too soon to comment on what those conclusions may be and the implications that they may have.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the costs of upgrading RAF Coltishall for Jaguar aircraft. [30933]

Dr. Reid: As part of routine maintenance, the runway at RAF Coltishall has recently been refurbished at a cost of £5.24 million. There have been no other significant improvements to the Station, which has been a Jaguar base for 24 years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Cash Limits

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1997–98 cash and running cost limits within his responsibilities. [30247]

Mr. Straw: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary token Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class VII, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) will be reduced by £4,538,000 from £4,728,661,000 to £4,724,123,000, the cash limit for Class VII, Vote 2 (Prisons, England and Wales) will be reduced by £1,014,000 from £1,756,845 to £1,755,831 and the gross running costs limit will be reduced by £4,552,000 from £1,892,931,000 to £1,888,379,000.

The changes in the cash limits are the net effect of the following transfers: between Vote 1 and 2 in respect of information technology provision, training and criminal justice initiatives, £44,000 to the Privy Council Office, Class XVIII, Vote 3, as a contribution towards the costs of United Kingdom Anti Drugs Co-ordinator, £8,000 to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Class V, Vote 4, in respect of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 and £5,500,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service, Class VIII, Vote 4, in respect of criminal justice initiatives.

There is a £1,000,000 increase in running costs with a corresponding increase in receipts due to the increased demand for passports.

The increases will be offset by transfers and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ID Cards

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) representations he has received and (b) assessment he has made of the cost in respect of the possible introduction of smart ID cards; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of the introduction of such cards. [30194]

Mr. George Howarth: Hon. Members, members of the public and other interest groups contact me on a regular basis with proposals for and against the introduction of identity cards in the United Kingdom; however, there is no consensus on what form this should take. We are considering the options, including the likely cost, but have no current plans to introduce a national identity card scheme.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is separately looking at the scope for smart cards to facilitate electronic government transactions. Such cards would not function as national identity cards.

Police Road Blocks

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 343, in what circumstances a police road block can be used in conjunction with other agencies investigating (a) benefit fraud and (b) illegal immigration; on how many occasions these operations have taken place; and if he will make a statement. [29773]

Mr. Michael: Police officers commonly carry out road checks on commercial vehicles to detect those which are being driven in a dangerous condition, are overloaded, unlicensed or committing other road traffic offences. Such checks may be carried out using the power to stop vehicles in section 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 (as amended). Where such checks are arranged, forces may invite other agencies to attend in case the police's inquiries reveal potential offences relevant to those agencies' responsibilities. Such multi-agency checks may include representatives from the Benefits Agency and the Immigration Service. No information is held centrally on the number of multi-agency checks which have taken place.

Farmers (Devon and Cornwall)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost to Devon and Cornwall police of recent operations involving protests by farmers. [30287]

Mr. Michael: The decision as to how resources are used within a police force area is a matter for the Chief Constable. The Chief Constable must deploy resources according to operational priorities and objectives, whilst trying to take account of local views whenever possible. Every force will, from time to time, face unexpected demands on its resources, such as major inquiries, sports events, pop concerts or demonstrations. Protests by farmers fall within this category.

Prisoners (Prescriptions)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prescriptions were issued per 100 (a) male and (b) female prisoners for (i) tranquillisers and (ii) other medicinal drugs in each of the last five years. [30224]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to him on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 350. The further breakdown which he seeks could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Learning Difficulties (Crime Victims)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what directions he (a) has given and (b) intends to give to police forces on interviewing victims of crime with learning difficulties for the purpose of gathering evidence. [30282]

Mr. Michael: The inter-departmental review of Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses, announced by my right hon. Friend on 13 June 1997, and which includes representatives from the Association of Chief Police Officers, is considering whether special guidance could helpfully be given to the police to assist them in identifying and interviewing victims of crime and witnesses with learning disabilities. How any guidance is implemented will be an operational matter for chief officers of police.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial attacks were reported in each police area in January 1998. [29493]

Mr. Michael: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. Individual forces submit their racial incidents figures to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary at the end of each financial year. These are incidents recorded under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident:

"any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

This definition is wider than simply attacks. The last available figure for the number of racial incidents reported to the police in England and Wales is 13,151 in 1996–97.

A breakdown of the number of incidents reported to the police by each police area in 1996–97 is given in the following table:

Forces	1996–97
Avon and Somerset	310
Bedfordshire	77
Cambridgeshire	141
Cheshire	92
City of London	10
Cleveland	68
Cumbria	37

Warwickshire	66
West Mercia	64
West Midlands	725
West Yorkshire	623
Wiltshire	35
England and Wales Total	13,151
Provincial Total	7,530

Under data collection requirements agreed by member states within Europe, figures giving the number of serious racial incidents have been submitted to the European Union for 1994–95 and 1995–96. The 1994–95 figures showed that, of the 11,878 racial incidents recorded by the police, 508 were in respect of serious crime. Of these, four were murders; three were attempted murders; 161 were attacks involving explosives/arson; and 340 were serious assaults. In 1995–96, of the 12,222 racial incidents recorded by the police, 440 were in respect of serious crime. Of these, two were murders; 163 were attacks involving explosives/arson; and 275 were serious assaults.

Electoral Procedures

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will assess the advantages of setting up an Electoral Commission to recommend reforms in the conduct of elections; [30700]

(2) what plans he has to encourage a higher turn out of voters in elections; [30703]

(3) what plans he has to use technology to improve the registration of voters. [30697]

Mr. George Howarth: These are matters which will be considered by my Working Party on Electoral Procedures during the course of its review.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the law relating to election (a) candidates, (b) agents, (c) expenses and (d) offences. [30701]

Mr. George Howarth: I am considering the extent to which issues relating to candidates at elections should be considered by my Working Party on Electoral Procedures during the course of its review.

Death Penalty

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of his decision not to abolish the death penalty for treason and piracy on the prospects of other countries being persuaded to sign the Strasbourg Declaration. [30611]

Mr. Michael: The Government believe that the issue of capital punishment for murder and the question of the abolition of the death penalty for those offences for which it is still available (such as piracy with violence and treason) are matters for Parliament to decide on a free vote. We do not believe it is right to deny Parliament the opportunity to consider the issue in future by signing any international instrument which requires the abolition of the death penalty. We can, and do, support international calls for the abolition of the death penalty, because Parliament has consistently voted against the re-introduction of capital punishment for murder, and in the current Parliament anticipate that any motion to re-introduce it would be defeated by a substantial majority. On 11 October 1997, at the Summit of the Council of Europe, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister therefore signed the Council of Europe Declaration calling for the abolition of the death penalty.

It is a matter for individual countries to decide whether or not to sign any international declaration.

Prison Service

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in relation to his written answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 402, on the Prison Service, what additional amount of money he has allocated to prisons expenditure in 1998–99; what amount of this is to be allocated from the contingency reserve; and if he will make a statement. [30510]

Ms Quin: We must examine the scope for savings elsewhere in the programme in the course of the coming year before any claim on the Reserve is considered.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30717]

Mr. Michael: There have been no new advertising contracts awarded by the Home Office since May 1997 and therefore no tendering has taken place.

Prisoner Releases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the decision to release John Haase and Paul Bennett from gaol; and if he will make a statement; [30447]

(2) what protection has been provided from public funds to John Haase and Paul Bennett following their convictions for heroin smuggling and their release from gaol; [30451]

(3) what arrests and convictions resulted from information supplied to the Customs or police by John Haase and Paul Bennett after their convictions for heroin smuggling. [30448]

Mr. Michael: I understand that the former Home Secretary recommended to Her Majesty the exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy in this case, following an initiative of the judge who had passed sentence. It is not for me to comment on that decision.

Information provided to assist the police and customs with their investigations is sensitive and is handled confidentially. I am unable to say whether arrests and convictions resulted from the assistance provided by these two men. They have not been provided with protection paid for from public funds.

Security Industry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new proposals he has to discourage the employment of convicted criminals in the security industry. [30450]

Mr. Michael: We intend to introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry as soon as possible. We will not be able to bring forward early legislation, as we warned before the election, but we have recently completed a consultation exercise with the industry and others on the best way to provide a comprehensive, effective and streamlined system. We want to look beyond the narrow proposals put forward by the previous Government, which focused only on criminal record checks for the contract guarding sector of the industry, and to put in place regulations which will protect the public by ensuring basic standards of probity, training, supervision and good practice within all sectors of the industry.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the guidelines for courts dealing with child victims of crimes of sexual abuse; and if he will make a statement. [30464]

Mr. Michael: The Government want children to be able to give their best evidence in court with the minimum of distress, and for court practices to be adapted to meet their needs. Ways to improve the treatment of child witnesses are currently being considered as part of the review of vulnerable and intimated witnesses announced on 13 June 1997 by my right hon. Friend. This work is now nearing completion. In addition, Home Office commissioned research into the admissibility and sufficiency of evidence in child abuse prosecutions is due to be completed in the spring. This will provide important information on which to decide how to improve further the child evidence provisions.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the sentencing guidelines are for juveniles convicted of sexual offences against children. [30463]

Mr. Michael: Sentencing guidelines for juveniles convicted of sexual offences against children are a matter for the Court of Appeal which provides guidance on the appropriate sentencing range for criminal offences through its judgments in individual cases. Guidance is contained in the cases of R v Hancock (1986) R v Wright, (1987) and R v Orriss (1993) for example.

The Crime and Disorder Bill also contains provisions to build on and improve the current system of sentencing guidelines. Provisions in the Bill place a statutory duty on the Court of Appeal to consider producing sentencing guidelines. There will also be a new sentencing advisory panel established by the Bill, which will give advice to the Court of Appeal on sentencing.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria determine whether a case of sex abuse of a child by another juvenile is heard in a magistrates' court or a crown court; and when these criteria last changed. [30462]

Mr. Michael: Under section 46 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 there is a presumption that cases involving juvenile defendants will be tried summarily by the youth courts. Section 24 of the Magistrates' Court Act 1980 provides that, except for an offence of homicide, a juvenile may be tried on indictment only where:

the court considers that, if found guilty, it may be necessary to sentence the juvenile to long term detention under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933; or the juvenile has been jointly accused with an adult of an indictable offence and the court considers it necessary in the interests of justice to commit them both to the Crown Court for trial.

"In Excelsis" Manuscript

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 176, on what date the notebook containing the manuscript "In Excelsis" by Lord Alfred Douglas was released to the Public Record Office at Kew. [30785]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office file of which the notebook forms a part was opened on 27 November 1997. Although the file had previously been held at the Public Record Office, it was not open for public inspection before that date.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons and on what authority the notebook containing the manuscript "In Excelsis" was released for public inspection before the expiration of the 100 year limit. [30786]

Mr. Michael: The notebook containing the manuscript of the poem "In Excelsis" forms part of a Home Office file, H0144/21591. The decision to open the file, which had previously been marked for closure until 2043, was taken in the interests of open government, following a request from a member of the public. The authority for the opening of the file is contained in a Lord Chancellor's Instrument made under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958.

Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many meetings (a) Home Office lawyers, (b) Home Office civil servants and (c) Home Office Ministers, have had with the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) to discuss the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill; [30505]

(2) if he intends to put forward new clauses to replace the defective clauses of the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill before the Bill leaves Standing Committee; [30503]

(3) when the Government decided that there were defective clauses in the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill which needed redrafting. [30504]

Mr. George Howarth: Home Office lawyers advised that there were defects in the Bill on 20 January 1998 and leave was given to instruct Parliamentary Counsel to improve the technical competence of this Private Member's Bill. A responsible Government have a duty to ensure that a defective Bill does not pass into law.

The first amendments, drafted by Parliamentary Counsel, were laid on 9 February by the sponsor of the Bill. Further amendments have been laid and prepared during Committee Stage.

The Government's position in relation to the Bill remains neutral. It neither supports nor opposes the Bill. As a member of the Standing Committee, therefore, I looked to the Committee to make improvements to the Private Member's Bill. When defects were not addressed, the Government sought to provide drafting expertise.

Following informal contacts, I met formally with my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) on 9 and 16 February to discuss the technical deficiencies in his Bill. Civil servants, including Home Office lawyers, were present at both meetings.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester also met with me and my noble Friend the Lord Williams of Mostyn on 19 November 1997. Civil servants were present on this occasion too. My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester was informed at that meeting that the Government would not lay amendments to his Bill during Committee Stage and I explained this to the Committee on 17 December.

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the last occasion on which his Department redrafted a Private Member's Bill, which was not Government-drafted, before the Bill left Committee. [30506]

Mr. George Howarth: The Dangerous Dogs (Amendment) Bill, a Private Member's Bill which had been first introduced in Another Place and which received Royal Assent on 21 March 1997, was the subject of extensive Government amendment during its Committee stage in the House of Commons on 12 March 1997.

The British Nationality (Hong Kong) Bill, another Private Member's Bill which had been first introduced into Another Place and which received Royal Assent on 19 March 1997, was also the subject of extensive Government amendment at its Committee stage on 26 February 1997. These amendments were prepared at much the same time as those for the Dangerous Dogs (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes dated 31 December 1997 concerning Tom Neil, a school teacher at Rudolf Steiner School, Totnes, relating to his visa extension. [30792]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I replied to the hon. Member on 18 February.

Market Research

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure has been incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies (a) in 1996–97 and (b) since 1 May 1997 on (i) opinion polling, (ii) focus groups and (iii) other forms of market research; if he will list the surveys commissioned and the purpose of each; and if he will make a statement. [26674]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Purposes for which surveys involving public consultation were undertaken by the Home Office in the financial year 1996–97 are as summarised.

(i) Opinion polls—none.

(ii) Focus groups.

To canvas public attitudes about the police service they expect and the priorities for police service delivery—£28,880.

To test the 'Gap Analysis' methodology for assessing public expectations of policing. Gap analysis shows levels of dissatisfaction with a service by measuring the level of service the public expects from a particular organisation, and what level of service they perceive is actually delivered. It indicates where effort can best be focused to improve public satisfaction—£5,816.

To develop fire safety advertising campaign—£3,525.

To develop radio advertising for Special Constable recruitment campaign—£6,580.

(iii) Other forms of market research.

To find out about public attitudes to CS gas—£7,500.

Pre-campaign awareness tracking—electoral registration campaign—£4,230.

To measure ownership and maintenance of smoke alarms prior to advertising campaign—£9,067.

Post-campaign awareness tracing—Special Constables recruitment campaign—£20,872.

The Office for National Statistics conducted for the Home Office a survey of public attitudes to drug-related crime, as part of their Omnibus Survey—£15,000.

The surveys involving public consultation undertaken by the Home Office since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

(i) Opinion polls—none.

(ii) Focus groups.

To canvas public attitudes about the police service they expect and their priorities for police service delivery—£10,674.

The development of fire safety advertising campaign—£17,962.

(iii) Other forms of market research.

Victim survey and public perceptions of environmental change—£26,261.

Post campaign awareness tracking—annual electoral registration campaign—£9,684.

Forensic Science Service staff survey—£12,000.

Immigration staff survey—£12,513.

Home Office staff survey—£26,795.

Survey to provide a benchmark study for customer perception of forensic service delivery. (Requirement of Forensic Science Service framework document)—£11,166.

In addition, the British Crime Survey, which is primarily used to measure crime against households through interviews with the general public, includes questions about attitudes. The current sweep asks respondents about their attitudes to punishment, the police and victim support.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30325]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has identified the following properties as being surplus to requirement:

Former Brentwood County Court

Former Dudley County Court Offices

Former Home Office Creche

Former Kettering County Court

Former Oldham County Court

Former Reading Crown Court

Former Sheffield Combined Court

Former Sheffield Crown Court

Former Swansea County Court.

In addition, there is a small amount of surplus space in one of the Departmental Headquarters buildings in Tufton Street. It is not possible to give an estimate of the value of these properties as this will depend on the circumstances of their disposal and could prejudice ongoing negotiations. For accounting purposes, surplus assets will be valued in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Resource Accounting Manual.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30718]

Mr. Hoon: Since 1 May 1997, the Department's only expenditure on advertising has been on recruitment campaigns for judicial and other appointments. Only one advertising contract has required a tender exercise. The total value of the contract was £58,305.85, of which £7,191 was for advertising costs. Four companies tendered for this contract.

County Courts

Mr. Reed: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what volume of work was undertaken in Loughborough County Court in each year since 1980; and what was the national average for county courts with a similar catchment area in each year. [30928]

Mr. Hoon: The information for Loughborough County Court for 1980 to 1997 is set out in the table. Information on the national average for county courts with a similar catchment area is not held centrally and could be calculated only at a disproportionate cost.

Cash Limits

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes are proposed to the cash and running cost limits of the Lord Chancellor's Department Votes for 1997–98. [30380]

Mr. Hoon: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash and running cost limits for Class VIII Votes 1 and 3 will be increased.

Class VIII, Vote 1 Lord Chancellor's Department

The cash limit will be increased by £3,941,000 from £629,555,000 to £633,496,000. The running cost limit will be increased by £7,214,000 from £427,681,000 to £434,895,000.

The increase in the running cost limit of £7,214,000 is made up of: £7,000,000 increase in Court Service gross running costs to cover additional sittings in the civil courts; £170,000 Court Service non-running costs reclassified as running costs to reduce delays in immigration appeals hearings; £10,000 increase in Headquarters' running costs from Cabinet Office to meet the consultancy costs for a report on Misuse of Public Office proposals; and £34,000 running costs transfer from Cabinet Office to the Court Service for the transfer of responsibility of Sovereign House, Sheffield.

The increase in non-running costs of £3,737,000 is made up of a £4,013,000 transfer from Department of Social Security Class XII for the transfer of responsibility for civil means assessment; less £170,000 Court Service non-running costs reclassified as running costs; £6,000 transfer to Department of Social Security Class XII for research on pensions on divorce; and £100,000 transfer to the Department of Social Security to cover the salary costs of seconded staff.

The increase in the cash limit relates to £7,214,000 increase in running costs, £3,737,000 increase in non-running costs, offset by £7,010,000 increase in the appropriation in aid.

There will also be a reduction in the non-cash limited legal aid expenditure of £7,000,000. This reduction has been made to offset extra provision required by Northern Ireland Court Service, Class VIII, Vote 2 for legal aid.

Class VIII, Vote 3 Public Record Office

The cash limit has been increased by £2,550,000 from £23,286,000 to £25,836,000. The running cost limit has been increased by £900,000 from £23,536,000 to £24,436,000. £350,000 of the running costs increase related to expenditure on a project to microfilm WWI soldiers' documents, which is offset by a lottery grant of £350,000. The additional running costs provision of £550,000 is covered by end year flexibility arrangements. The additional capital provision of £2 million relates to the take up of capital end year flexibility arrangements.

TREASURY

Cash Limits

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limit of Her Majesty's Treasury in 1997–98. [30275]

Mr. Darling: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the running costs limit for Class XVI, Vote 1 will be increased by £5,487,000 from £56,560,000 to £62,047,000 and the cash limit will be increased by £1,900,000 from £63,187,000 to £65,087,000. The increases are necessary to provide for a machinery of Government change transferring responsibility for the regulation and supervision of the insurance industry from the Department of Trade and Industry, Class IV, Vote 1, to HM Treasury, fully offset by a reduction in their cash limit; the transferring of responsibility for the Private Finance Initiative information technology project from the Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service, Class XVII, Vote 1, to the Private Finance Taskforce, fully offset by a reduction in their cash limit; and an increase in grant of £1.8 million to the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund, equivalent to the VAT paid on "Candle in the Wind". This brings the total grant to £2.8 million.

The net increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash limit and running costs limit for the Office for National Statistics for 1997–98. [30276]

Mrs. Liddell: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash and running cost limits for Class XVI, Vote 11 (Office for National Statistics) will be increased by £3,279,000 from £93,804,000 to £97,083,000 and from £101,735,000 to £105,014,000, respectively.

The increase in running costs provision reflects (a) the carry forward of £3,391,000 under the end year flexibility schemes as announced in the House of Commons by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50, and (b) the transfer of £112,000 running costs to the Department of Health, Class XI, Vote 1 for the responsibility of Notification of Infectious Diseases Statistics.

The net increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the cash limit and running costs limit in 1997–98 for the Inland Revenue and Valuation Office Agency. [30278]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 4 will be increased by £48,297,000 from £1,627,009,000 to £1,675,306,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £44,200,000 from £1,675,515,000 to £1,719,715,000. The cast limit for Class XVI, Vote 5 will be increased by a token £1,000 from £1,000 to £2,000 and the net running costs limit will be increased from -£6,619,000 to -£3,619,000.

Class XVI, Vote 4 is eligible for a cash limit increase of £47,000,000 running costs and £4,597,000 capital in respect of end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50.

In addition there is a transfer of £200,000 running costs from the Scottish Office, Class XIII, Vote 6 for development work on income tax in Scotland offset by a reduction of £500,000 transferred to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, Class IX, Vote 1, in respect of a contribution to the grant being made to that department to Somerset House Limited for the upkeep and restoration of Somerset House. There is a £3,000,000 reduction on Class XVI, Vote 4 and a corresponding increase on Class XVI, Vote 5 for reduced payments from the Inland Revenue to the Valuation Office Agency in respect of a lower than expected level of valuation work for tax purposes, and the Valuation Office's operational target for this work for 1997–98 will be adjusted accordingly reducing Inland Revenue cases from 57,000 to 45,000.

The increases will be offset by transfers and charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the cash limit and running cost limit in 1997–98 for HM Customs and Excise. [30279]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 3 will be increased by £12,955,000 from £842,003,000 to £854,958,000 and the running cost limit for Customs and Excise by £11,737,000 from £748,986,000 to £760,723,000.

The increase in the running cost limit arises from the take up of £11,752,000 of the end-year flexibility entitlement, offset by a £15,000 running costs contribution to the funding of the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator and Deputy. The adjustment to the cash limit also reflects the take up of £1,248,000 of the Capital end-year flexibility entitlement, and the provision of an additional £30,000 in appropriations in aid for Marine Fuel Relief. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Amusement Machines

Mr. Faber: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of revenue, inclusive of value added tax, was received by his Department as a result of amusement with prizes machines in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [30000]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 February 1998]: The level of revenue in 1997 from Amusement Machine Licence duty was £133 million. A separate figure for amusement with prizes machines cannot be calculated. The amount of VAT collected is not separately available.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by English county and by unitary authority in Wales and Scotland the number of landowners who receive conditional exemption from inheritance tax by virtue of an agreement to allow public access. [26523]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 January 1998]: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of owners[1]
England
Cornwall	12
Cumbria	31
Devon	25
Dorset	27
Gloucestershire	36
Hampshire	7
Herefordshire	9
Kent	14
Lancashire	11
Norfolk	7
North Yorkshire	11
Northamptonshire	25
Northumberland	12
Oxfordshire	13
Shropshire	11
Suffolk	18

	Number of owners[1]
Wiltshire	22
Wales[2]
Gwynedd	5
Powys	14
Scotland[2]
Argyll	7
Dumfries and Galloway	10
East Lothian	17

[1] These figures reflect conditional exemptions from inheritance tax and capital transfer tax. Some properties are owned by more than one person. To protect taxpayer confidentiality, information is only given by counties where there are five or more conditional exemption designations. There is a total of 154 owners in counties where there are less than five designations.

[2] The information is not held by new local government boundaries.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many landowners who have received conditional exemption from inheritance tax by virtue of public access to land have withdrawn from the scheme since its inception. [26490]

Dawn Primarolo: Conditional exemption ceases to apply when the owner of an exempt asset fails to observe the relevant undertakings in a material respect. The failure could be due to a number of reasons including, for example, an owner voluntarily withdrawing from the scheme. Since 1983 (the earliest year for which information is available), there have been 23 cases where land has ceased to be conditionally exempt from inheritance tax, or its predecessor, capital transfer tax.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to public funds of mortgage tax relief for each of the nations of the UK in (a) the current and (b) the next five years in 1998 prices. [30160]

Dawn Primarolo: [holding answer 18 February 1998]: Country and regional estimates of the cost of mortgage interest relief for the years 1993–94 to 1996–97 are published in Table 5.3 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1997", a copy of which is in the Library. The estimates for the years 1993–94 to 1995–96 are based on analyses of family expenditure surveys up to 1995–96. The estimates for 1996–97 are projections based on applying the same country and regional distribution as in 1995–96 to the total figure for 1996–97. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates below United Kingdom level for 1997–98 and beyond.

Child Benefit

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households would pay extra tax in excess of (a) £90, (b) £100, (c) £180 and (d) £400 if child benefit were taxed as income of the principal earner in a household. [29190]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 12 February 1998]: The table gives estimates for 1998–99 assuming child benefit is taxed as income of the lone parent or the person with the higher income in a couple.

Tax increase (£ per year)	Number of lone parents and persons with the higher income in a couple (millions)
over 90	5.5
over 100	5.4
over 180	3.7
over 400	0.8

The estimated total number of lone parents and couples with children who would see an increase in their tax liabilities is about 5.8 million.

Lost and Stolen Items

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from his Department since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [27728]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information for the Treasury, Customs and Excise, and Inland Revenue is as listed, with costs:

HM Treasury	£
3 Personal computers	6,000
Foreign currency	150
2 Laptop computers	8,000
2 Telephone answer machines	115
	14,265

Customs and Excise	£
9 Laptop computers	16,085
2 Personal computers	2,263
Cables and ethernet card	500
Ford transit van	8,300
Radio cassette	150
	27,298

Inland Revenue	£
8 Laptop computers	12,000
7 Printers	2,965
4 Personal computers	5,730
2 Visual display units	400
4 Dictaphones	120
Television/camera equipment	1,961
Telephone equipment	4,100
Miscellaneous items	1,127
	28,403

Counter measures adopted by the Treasury include, as appropriate, the installation of intruder detection systems, security marking, spot checks and searches, together with other physical deterrents such as alarms. These measures have resulted in a significant reduction in the number of thefts over the past two years. Further measures are being considered where appropriate.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30315]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury owns no properties or land that are surplus to its requirements.

Spending Review

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what date he has instructed that the departmental comprehensive spending reviews will be made available to Her Majesty's Treasury; and if he will make a statement. [30614]

Mr. Darling: Reports by departments on their individual spending reviews within the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) are made to the Ministerial Committee on Public Expenditure. The results of the CSR will be reported to Parliament in the Summer as I said when I announced the Review on 11 June last year, Official Report, columns 1143-57.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the need to co-ordinate decisions on the outcome of the comprehensive spending review, in respect of (a) housing spending, (b) mortgage interest tax relief, (c) stamp duty, (d) housing benefit, (e) income support, (f) capital gains and (g) council tax; and if he will make a statement. [29546]

Mr. Darling: The Comprehensive Spending review covers public expenditure across the board. It will produce a coherent and coordinated set of plans for directing expenditure across Government to areas where we believe it is most needed. Mechanisms are in place to ensure that individual reviews take account of relevant proposals in other areas.

VAT (House Renovations)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a VAT concession for renovations on houses similar to the VAT concession applied to the building of new houses; and if he will make a statement. [30312]

Dawn Primarolo: Our agreements with other member states do not allow us to introduce any new zero rates.

Workless Households

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children live in workless households headed by an adult who is (a) a lone parent, (b) in full-time education, (c) retired, (d) unemployed and (e) sick or disabled. [29476]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 23 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question on the numbers of children in households where no-one works.

The ONS bases analyses of households with no-one in employment on working age households, that is households where there is at least one person of working age (i.e. a man aged 16–64 or a woman aged 16–59).

The attached table shows estimates from the latest Labour Force Survey results.

The economic status of the head of the household has been used to define the categories. Those who are unemployed under the ILO definition count as people who are: (a) without a paid job; (b) available to start work within the next two weeks and (c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained. The other categories have been assigned according to the head of household's stated main reason for being economically inactive. The categories you specified do not cover all dependent children living in households with no-one in employment. An 'others' category has been included for information. This includes; the temporarily sick, discouraged workers, those awaiting the results of a job application, people looking after family and home (other than lone parents), and others with unspecified reasons.

[1] Dependent children are those aged 0–15 and 16–18 in full-time education.

Fast Food Companies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding the imposition of a pollution tax on fast food companies. [29699]

Dawn Primarolo: I am not aware of any such representations on the subject of a pollution tax on fast food companies during the Pre-Budget Report consultation period.

Valuation Office

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the appointment of Mr. Michael Johns as Chief Executive of the Valuation Office Agency. [30230]

Dawn Primarolo: With the approval of the Prime Minister, Mr. Michael Johns was appointed Chief Executive of the Valuation Office Agency following the resignation of Mrs. Veronica Lowe, his predecessor, with effect from 31 December 1997.

VAT (Energy Use)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the VAT rules charged (a) on energy-saving items in each Northern EU country and (b) domestic energy consumption. [29923]

Dawn Primarolo: In the United Kingdom we have the lowest rate of VAT on domestic fuel of any Northern EU country. We are committed to extending that rate to the installation of energy saving materials, as announced in the Pre-Budget Report.

Table 1 shows the VAT rates applied to domestic fuel in Northern EU countries.

No other Northern EU Country has a specific relief for energy saving materials comparable to the measure we expect to introduce in the Budget.

Some Northern EU countries have a limited relief for the renovation and alteration of social housing which may allow relief for energy saving materials installed as part of such work, as well as applying their standard rate to renovation and alteration of housing. Other Northern EU countries apply their standard rate to all such supplies. Table 2 lists Northern EU countries and the rates they apply to such work.

Table 1: VAT rates applied to domestic fuel

Working Families Tax Credit Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how his proposals for the Working Families Tax Credit scheme will be applied to employees who work for more than one employer; [30458]

(2) what consultations he has had with representatives of small businesses concerning the implication for their cash flow of his proposals for the Working Families Tax Credit scheme; and if he will make a statement. [30457]

Dawn Primarolo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is currently looking in detail at the introduction of a Working Families Tax Credit in preparing his Budget Statement.

Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made on the payment of guaranteed minimum pension increases to retired teachers and other categories of public sector pensioners who are in receipt of invalidity or incapacity benefit beyond state retiring age; and if he will make a statement. [30424]

Mr. Darling: I understand that arrangements are in hand for the teachers' and other public services' pensions schemes to check payments to such pensioners and make adjustments where there has been an underpayment, assisted by information provided by the Benefits Agency. However, the actual arrangements are a matter for the individual pension schemes.

Public Corporations (Borrowing)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer where the net borrowing of public corporations is accounted for in (a) returns made to the EU Commission regarding the measure of fiscal deficit required by the Maastricht Treaty and (b) the public accounts. [30551]

Mrs. Liddell: The Maastricht deficit measure is the general government financial deficit (GGFD), which covers only central government and local authorities and excludes public corporations. The net borrowing of public corporations is included in the public sector borrowing requirement (PSBR), which is the sum of the central government borrowing requirement on own account, the local authority borrowing requirement and the public corporations borrowing requirement.

IMF (Nicaragua)

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will raise with the IMF the percentage of Nicaraguan families headed by unwaged women in respect of the negotiations of the Structural Adjustment Fund. [28117]

Mrs. Liddell: IMF Staff and the Nicaraguan authorities have negotiated an adjustment programme which could by supported by the IMF's Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, though this has not yet been approved by the IMF Executive Board. The UK will have an opportunity to comment on the proposal at the discussion.

Hairdressers

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of hairdressers in the United Kingdom; and what proportion of the working population they represented in (a) 1979 and (b) 1997. [30406]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Wilshire, dated 23 February 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on hairdressers in the labour market.

Information from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) shows that there were 185,000 employees and self-employed in hairdressing and other beauty treatment in the United Kingdom at Spring 1982, and 174,000 at Summer 1997. Both of these totals represent 0.7 per cent. of the total number of employees and self-employed.

Comparison over a long time period can be made by focusing on the number of employees only. Figures from the employer surveys show that the proportion of employees in hairdressing and other beauty treatment in Great Britain has stayed constant at 0.4 per cent. between June 1978 (the closest available to the 1979 date requested) and September 1996.

Freeholders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it a requirement that all persons holding the freehold title of land should inform the Land Registry of their nationality. [29859]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

There is no present intention to make it a requirement for any person holding the freehold title of land to inform the Land Registry of their nationality.

Official Residence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list by item the furniture, fittings and decorations purchased since 1 May with public funds for his official flat in Downing Street indicating the cost of each item not subjected to a formal competitive tendering process; if he will list for each item the reasons it was not subjected to competitive tendering, if more than one quotation was sought; whether the lowest price was accepted; what was the lowest quotation submitted; and what factors led to more than one quotation not being sought in respect of certain items; [26064]

(2) if he will list by item all furniture, fittings and decorations purchased with public funds since 1 May for his official flat in Downing Street indicating the cost of each item subjected to a formal competitive process; and what was the lowest tender price submitted for each item; [26066]

(3) if he will list the country of origin of each item of furniture, fittings and decorations purchased with public funds since 1 May for his official flat in Downing Street; and what factors led to the purchase of items whose country of origin was not the United Kingdom; [26061]

(4) if he will list the date and time of delivery to Downing Street of each item of furniture, fittings and decorations purchased with public funds since 1 May for his official flat in Downing Street; and what factors governed the delivery time of each item delivered outside normal working hours. [26062]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 30 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Prime Minister's answer to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 66.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Personal Protection Weapons

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) off-duty members and (b) retired members of the Ulster Defence Regiment/Royal Irish Regiment have been murdered by terrorists since 1 April 1970; and what account she will take of these statistics in respect of personal protection weapons in her review of the Firearms (NI) Order 1981. [22775]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1 April 1970, 159 off-duty members and 53 retired members of the UDR/RIR have died as a result of the security situation.

The Secretary of State is fully aware of the history of terrorist attacks on members of the security forces. She has taken full account of this in her review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, which included consideration of handgun controls.

Summonses

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have received a summons in respect of the (a) painting of kerbs and (b) flying of flags and emblems from (i) 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1997 and (ii) 1 April to 31 December 1997. [24844]

Mr. Ingram: The requested information is not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

Maze Prison Inquiry

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will instigate an independent external inquiry into the Maze Prison. [29395]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already instigated both an inquiry and an inspection independent of and external to the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects the Maze Prison inquiry will be concluded. [29394]

Mr. Ingram: The inquiry has been concluded and I expect to receive the report very shortly.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish in full the findings of the Maze Prison inquiry. [29393]

Mr. Ingram: Yes.

Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs in Northern Ireland she estimates are (a) directly and (b) indirectly dependent on the oil and gas industry. [29851]

Mr. Ingram: The information which is available groups together the oil and gas industry and wholesale dealing in coal. The latest figures, from the 1995 Census of Employment, show 1,604 jobs directly associated with these activities. No estimate is available for jobs indirectly dependent on these industries.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the impact of past increases in taxation on the total number of oil and gas related jobs in Northern Ireland. [29797]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Police Authority

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which members of the Police Authority were (a) employees, (b) former employees, (c) directors and (d) shareholders of Rothmans International plc, its parent or subsidiary companies between 1983 and 1989. [29965]

Mr. Ingram: According to available records, only Mr. T. Rainey, Chairman of the Police Authority from January 1987 until June 1994, had a connection with Rothmans International plc, its parent or subsidiary companies. He was Managing Director of Rothmans International Tobacco (UK) Limited from 1978 until 1986.

Cash Limits

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the cash and running costs limits for the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departmental Services, the Independent Living Fund, the Social Fund, certain national agricultural schemes and discretionary rent allowance payments for 1997–98. [30271]

Marjorie Mowlam: Subject to Parliamentary Approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, it is proposed that the cash limit for Class XV Vote 1—the Northern Ireland Office—will be increased by £17,608,000 from £942,922,000 to £960,530,000. This reflects the take-up of end year flexibility on capital of £2,198,000 and departmental running costs of £5,549,000, additional expenditure on compensation of £13,600,000, additional expenditure to cover the costs of Political Talks administration and Forum staff of £4,900,000, reclassification of police pensions costs of £15,549,000 and other changes totalling £6,910,000.

The cash limit which covers most Northern Ireland departmental services will be increased by £90,533,000 from £4,132,783,000 to £4,223,316,000. This increase reflects changes in the Student Loan Book sale of £16,000,000, the take-up of end year flexibility on capital of £13,994,000, departmental running costs of £28,881,000, European structural funds of £7,275,000 and health programme of £37,479,000, additional resources for the Welfare to Work programme of £5,593,000 and Capital Receipts Initiative of £3,720,000, the transfer of £25,848,000 to the Northern Ireland Office cash limit on Class XV, Vote 1 and other technical changes £3,439,000.

The cash limit for the independent living fund—Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services Vote 6—has been reduced by £498,000 reflecting lower than expected demands on this fund.

The cash limit for the social fund—Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services Vote 6—has been reduced by £434,000 reflecting lower than expected demands on this fund.

The cash limit covering national agriculture capital grant schemes and certain assistance for production, marketing and processing and the fishing industry will increase by £442,000 from £30,274,000 to £30,716,000 as a result of the take-up of entitlement to end year flexibility on capital.

The cash limit for the discretionary rent allowance—Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services Vote 6—has been reduced by £439,000 reflecting lower than expected demands on this fund.

The combined gross running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland departments will be increased by £34,821,000 from £783,171,000 to £817,992,000. This reflects the take-up in 1997–98 of £34,430,000 of the end year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50, a net transfer of £130,000 from the Department of Social Security mainly in respect of agency services, a transfer of £292,000 from the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate in respect of accommodation costs and minor transfers out totalling £31,000. Of the revised gross running cost provision, £174,945,000 is for the Northern Ireland Office and £643,047,000 is for Northern Ireland departments. There is also a running costs limit of £2,145,000 for the Welfare to Work programme which is outside the Control Total.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Periodicals

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the expenditure of her Department on newspapers and magazines (a) in 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will list the newspapers and magazines purchased or subscribed to on a regular basis. [26608]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The Northern Ireland Departments and Northern Ireland Office purchase a range of newspapers and magazines. The overall cost of these publications is as follows:

1997–98: £366,094 (to date)

1997–98: £448,000 (full year)

Lost and Stolen Items

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from her Department since 1 May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [27743]

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her current estimate of the expenditure of her Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27745]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is £351,695 for the Department and £273,054 for its agencies. Information on non-departmental public bodies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Shootings (Forensic Evidence)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the RUC has established a forensic link between the gun used in the attempted murder of Mr. Jackie Mahood and a gun used in previous shootings; and if she will list the shootings and the organisation believed to be responsible. [28522]

Mr. Ingram: There is an on-going investigation into the attempted murder of Mr. Mahood and it would therefore not be appropriate to make public evidential material.

Publications

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list, by title, the publications produced by her Department between 1 May 1997 and 31 January 1998. [26320]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 9 February 1998]: A list of the publications produced by the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments between 1 May 1997 and 31 January 1998 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she is taking to establish equality of opportunity in the RUC in terms of sexual orientation; and if she will make a statement. [28952]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC's Community Affairs and Training Branches have been liaising with the Northern Ireland Gay Rights Association, members of which facilitate training sessions as part of the community awareness training for new recruits.

The RUC Equal Opportunities Unit includes sexual orientation in its briefings.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects the RUC's working party on the implications of sexual orientation in the RUC to report its work; and if she will make a statement. [28950]

Mr. Ingram: It is expected that the RUC's working party dealing with issues relating to sexual orientation will report during 1998.

A final decision regarding the release of the working party findings will be made after completion of the final report and in consultation with senior officers.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the equal opportunities policy statement of the RUC contains an explicit reference to sexual orientation; and if she will make a statement. [28951]

Mr. Ingram: The current RUC policy statement regarding equal opportunities does not contain a reference to sexual orientation. However, this is one of the issues which the new working party will consider as part of its brief.

The RUC is committed to the principles of equality of opportunity for all its officers.

WALES

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the GDP of each county in Wales since 1977. [29483]

Mr. Hain: The information requested in respect of the old counties of Wales is given in the table, for those years available since 1977. A single figure is given for the counties of Dyfed and Powys, because separate estimates cannot reliably be made.

These data are published by the Office for National Statistics; the estimates for 1993 and 1995 were published in the January 1996 edition of "Economic Trends" and the estimates back to 1977 are available in the Library of the House.

Blood Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on current blood stocks at the Welsh Blood Service. [27444]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Levels of blood stocks are a matter for the Welsh Blood Service in conjunction with NHS trusts which make use of blood products. However, I understand that their stocks are satisfactory at present following a good collection during January.

Music Industry

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to promote the Welsh music industry. [29819]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Government recognises that the music industry occupies an increasingly important role in the national economy and the Welsh Office is seeking to identify ways of maximising that economic impact through its membership of the Creative Industries Task Force.

Cash Limits

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes to make to the voted cash limits for his Department and the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales in 1997–98. [30379]

Mr. Ron Davies: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make the following changes:

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 2 will be reduced by £3,877,000 from £799,326,000 to £795,449,000 which mainly reflects a virement from cash limited resources into non-cash limited for the Further Education Funding Council to cover the increase in student numbers and

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 3 will be increased by £168,000 from £441,270,000 to £441,438,000 as the net result of an additional £200,000 from the Reserve towards the costs of providing for asylum seekers; a transfer of £7,000 to the Class XVIII, vote 3 for costs associated with the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator and a transfer of £25,000 to Class XI, vote 2 for the Review of Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors. The transfer of £25,000 to Class XI, vote 2 also reduces the Department's running costs provision by £25,000 from £73,897,000 to £73,872,000.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 4 has been decreased by £5,818,000 from £2,007,810,000 to £2,001,992,000 mainly as a net result of the take-up of £3,978,000 of end-year flexibility entitlements (£3,000,000 for NHS Trusts capital programme and £978,000 for hospital, community health and family health services), and the transfer of £10,000,000 from the cash limited general practitioner fundholder's drugs provision to the non-cash limited family health services provision. The external finance limit for NHS Trusts has been increased by £8,886,000 from £52,914,000 to £61,800,000.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 6 has been reduced by £300,000 from £9,705,000 to £9,405,000 as a result of lower than expected expenditure on training courses.

The non-voted cash limit for expenditure on the European Regional Development Fund (WO/ERDF) has been increased by £1,398,000 from £44,750,000 to £46,148,000 as a result of a transfer of resources from DETR/ERDF.

None of the above changes add to the overall level of public expenditure.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if a committee established under sections 3, 4 (1)(a) and 17 of the NHS Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 (S.I. 1990 No. 2024) prior to the establishment of a remuneration committee has powers (a) to appoint a chief executive and (b) to agree the terms and conditions of employment of the chief executive. [30931]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Sections 3, 4(1)(a) and 17 of the NHS Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 provide for a committee, comprised of the Chairman and Non-Executive Directors of a trust, whose function is to appoint the chief officer of a trust as a director of the trust and to agree on the terms and conditions of employment.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30320]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department is reviewing the use of all its assets, including identifying assets which are surplus to requirements, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review which will be completed this summer.

The following assets have already been identified as surplus to requirements:

In addition surplus land and buildings acquired by agreement or compulsory purchase in connection with Trunk Road improvement schemes are disposed of at the earliest opportunity.

It is not possible to give an estimate of the value of the surplus property as this will depend on the circumstances of their disposal. For accounting purposes surplus assets will be valued in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Resource Accounting Manual.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies who tendered for them. [30708]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department has not awarded any advertising contracts since 1 May 1997.

We have run the following campaigns under existing arrangements for advertising with the Central Office of Information:

SCOTLAND

Cancer Surgery

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland had been waiting over (a) one, (b) three, (c) six and (d) 12 months for cancer surgery on 1 November (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997. [20060]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The precise information requested is not held centrally since the waiting times data collected nationally do not explicitly identify patients waiting for cancer surgery.

Information is collected nationally on the number of patients who were admitted to hospital from the waiting list with a cancer-related diagnosis and who were later discharged following a surgical procedure. However, cancer-related diagnosis covers a very wide range of surgical treatments, not all of which are of a serious nature. The relevant information for the year ending 31 March 1996 and the latest available for the year ending 31 March 1997 is set out in the table. It should be noted that in the year to 31 March 1997, nearly 60 per cent. of patients who waited more than one month had minor surgical procedures for the bladder or for skin lesions.

Rural Watch

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of farm watch and rural watch schemes (a) in each area and (b) in total; what is the estimated average number of people involved in each scheme; what steps his Department takes to encourage individuals to join the schemes; and if he will make a statement. [29243]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 February 1998]: Information obtained from individual police forces on the number of rural watch schemes operating is set out in the table:

Further Education

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people applied to Scottish further and higher education institutions for entry in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998; and how many of these were from (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales, (iv) Northern Ireland, (v) other EU countries and (vi) the rest of the world. [29177]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 February 1998]: Figures for applicants to non-UCAS Scottish institutions of further and higher education are not held centrally. Figures on applicants for 1997 and 1998 entry to Scottish higher education institutions derived from applications received by UCAS on or before the closing date (15 December 1997 for 1998 entry, and equivalent date for the previous year) are provided in the table. Figures are not available on a consistent basis for 1996 entry.

The small drop between 1997 and 1998 was expected because of the increase in admissions that took place this session when Scottish institutions exceeded their targets, compared with previous shortfalls.

UCAS applicants to Scottish higher education, 1997 and 1998, entry by domicile of applicant

Domicile of applicant	1997	1998
Scotland	24,184	23,176
England	25,950	24,599
Wales	851	877
Northern Ireland	6,792	6,289
Rest European Union	5,842	4,662
Non-European Union	3,976	3,841
All applicants	67,595	63,444

This is still not the final picture; a fifth of applications normally arrive after the closing date. UCAS figures show a burst of late applications, reducing the overall drop in the UK to 2.9 per cent.

Epilepsy

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sudden deaths in epilepsy there have been in Scotland in each of the last 10 years, by health board area. [29947]

Mr. Galbraith: The tables show the numbers of deaths (a) where the underlying cause of death was epilepsy, and (b) where epilepsy was mentioned on the death certificate but not recorded as the underlying cause of death. In neither case is it possible to say how many of the deaths were sudden.

Soccer Facilities

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the current provision of soccer facilities for those under 12 years of age in Scotland; and if he will make a statement; [29941]

(2) what Lottery funding has been received by the Scottish Sports Council in each year since the inception of the National Lottery; what proportion of those funds were directed towards projects to develop football facilities for the under-12s; and if he will make a statement. [29967]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Sports Council has a range of information available on sports facilities in Scotland, including provision for youth football. It is not possible, however, to identify separately facilities for, or funding from the National Lottery or elsewhere directed to, under-12 football.

Since the inception of the National Lottery the Scottish Sports Council has been allocated the following Lottery funding:

£ million

	Funding
1994–95	5.201
1995–96	27.265
1996–97	28.165
1997–98 (to 31/1/98)	28.070

Since 1995, football projects have been awarded £8.136 million, of which £3.750 million was awarded to national facilities, £1.189 million to regional facilities and £3.197 million to local facilities.

Hill Farming

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the impact of the incidence of demonstrations at Stranraer on (a) the timing and (b) the scale of the additional financial support, announced in respect of Scottish hill farming on 22 December; and if he will make a statement. [29758]

Mr. Macdonald: The special aid announced on 22 December is in recognition of economic and other pressures affecting beef and sheep producers, particularly those in the hills and uplands.

Anti-knife Legislation

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects of anti-knife legislation; and if he will make a statement. [30049]

Mr. McLeish: The Government continue to be concerned about knife-related crime and, as an additional means of combating such crime, we implemented the main provisions of the Knives Act 1997 on 1 September 1997. These create an offence of marketing a knife in such a way as suggests it is suitable for combat, or which encourages violent behaviour. It is, as yet, too soon to establish what effect these provisions may have had on knife-related crime.

Student Awards Agency

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons the number of staff employed by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland has been reduced over the last four years. [29768]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Reductions in staff at the Agency, as elsewhere in the Civil Service, were made under the previous Government in accordance with their policies towards the public services.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that from 1998 all students applying to the Student Awards Agency for Scotland will have their applications processed within 21 days of receipt; and if he will make a statement. [29716]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 16 February 1998]: The immediate priority for the Agency is to regain its capacity to meet its current target of processing fully completed application forms within 28 calendar days of receipt. The work of the Review of the Agency which is currently underway is directed to that end.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of (a) male and (b) female students in each constituency in Scotland who are in receipt of an award from the Scottish Student Awards Agency. [29793]

Mr. Wilson: The data on student award holders in Scotland are not held by reference to parliamentary constituencies and could not readily be converted to that basis.

The total number of Scottish-domiciled students in full-time higher education who were in receipt of an award from the Student Awards Agency for Scotland in academic year 1996–97 (the most recent year for which complete figures are available) was 110,506. Of these, 53,173 were male and 57,333 were female.

Cash Limits

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate proposes any changes to the Crown Office cash and running costs. [30454]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 7 will be increased by £3,080,000 from £45,337,000 to £48,417,000.

Within this total the running cost limit will be increased from £43,565,000 to £44,824,000.

The Supplementary Estimate is required to meet the Department's ongoing commitment to the Law and Order programme in Scotland and additional expenditure required as a result of legislation relating to Devolution for Scotland. This will utilise the end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and running cost provision for 1997–98 within his responsibility. [30455]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, I intend to make changes to 7 voted cash limits, 2 non-voted cash blocks and 2 running costs limits.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 1, Agriculture, fisheries and environmental services, Scotland, will be increased by a total of £99,725,000 from £312,889,000 to £412,614,000. The changes include take-up of £4,725,000 capital end year flexibility entitlement. The increase reflects re-phasing of project expenditure and comprises £2,465,000 for the new Fishery Research vessel, £1,520,000 for Harbour Grants and various capital projects for the Fisheries Research Services, the Scottish Agricultural College, Scottish Agricultural Biological and Research Institute and the Royal Botanic Gardens totalling £740,000. The increase also takes account of payments to the Public Works Loan Board for the commutation of £95,000,000 of debt owed by the North of Scotland Water Authority (resulting in reduced provision in future years for the relevant External Finance Limit).

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 2, Local Government, Housing, Transport, Other Environmental Services and European Funds, Scotland will be increased by a net total of £80,985,000 from £5,483,876,000 to £5,564,861,000. The net increase reflects an increase of £312,000 in Housing Support Grant as a result of revised economic assumptions and a net increase of £38,400,000 in respect of grant to enable redemption of Scottish Homes debt. There has been an increase in capital expenditure of £10,295,000 for motorways and trunk roads due to higher than expected expenditure for land acquisition on completed road projects and an increase of £585,000 for grants to Caledonian MacBrayne for Piers and Harbours improvements. These are offset by a reduction of £2,968,000 for grants to Strathclyde Passenger Transport Executive, a reduction of £844,000 for grants for the Northern Isles Shipping Services with the balance of £7,068,000 met by a transfer from the non-voted cash limit, SO/LA1. There is also an increase in provision of £35,205,000 for Revenue Support Grant which is covered by a transfer of £33,300,000 from SO/LA1; £2,000,000 from the non-voted cash limit SO/LA2; £104,000 transferred from DSS and a reduction of £199,000 following a redetermination of Revenue Support Grant for 1992–93.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 3, Education, industry, arts and libraries, Scotland, will be increased by £3,824,000 from £1,671,708,000 to £1,675,532,000. The increased cash limit takes account of a £10,800,000 reduction following the rescheduling of a major inward investment project. There has been an increase of £3,000,000 in respect of the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council and £2,000,000 in respect of FE colleges to provide emergency assistance to institutions with cash flow problems as a result of the delay in the payment of fees, both amounts being offset by a corresponding reduction in SO/LA1. There has been an increase of £24,000 transferred from class XIII, vote 6 in respect of the continuation of a welfare service within the National Museums of Scotland. There has also been an increase of £50,000 in respect of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland to meet the demands of additional running costs pressures. This is offset by a corresponding reduction in class XIII, vote 6. Provision has also been increased as a result of the Government's Welfare to Work scheme. £8,900,000 has been provided for the New Deal for Schools as a capital resource and £650,000 to assist young people and long term unemployed adults wishing to take further education courses before the launch of the New deal.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 4, Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £31,428,000 from £3,707,049,000 to £3,738,477,000. The increase includes the cash limit increase of £16,907,000 announced on 14 October in respect of additional expenditure to reduce the effect of winter pressures on the NHS; a transfer of £373,000 from class XI, vote 2 for the cost of services provided by the Medical Devices Agency which were previously funded on a UK basis; a transfer of £80,000 to class XI, vote 2 for Scotland's contribution to the review of the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979 and to the National Screening Committee; a transfer of £347,000 from class XVIII, vote 4 due to reduced costs of the NHS complaints procedures; a transfer of £19,000 from class XI, vote 1 in respect of patients resident in England who attend a Scottish medical practice; a transfer of £6,000 to class XII, vote 3 for the setting up costs of the unit which will collect road traffic accident charges on behalf of NHS Trusts; and a transfer of £12,000 to class XVIII, vote 3 as a contribution towards the costs of the UK Anti-drugs Co-ordinator and Deputy. The NHS Trusts' External Financing Limit has also been decreased by £11,550,000 from -£28,037,000 to -£39,587,000.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 5 will be increased by £2,380,000 from £662,635,000 to £665,015,000. The increase takes account of additional expenditure of £2,408,000 on Social Work Services (of which access to the Reserve has been granted for £1,500,000 in respect of grants to Asylum Seekers) and a transfer of £300,000 to SO/LA1 in respect of an increase in the local authority capital allocation for the Highland and Islands Fire Board. The vote will underspend by £1,000,000 to meet the adjustment of Scottish Homes balance sheet. There will also be a number of minor inter and intra vote transfers.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 6, Scottish Office Administration, is being decreased by £274,000 from £150,074,000 to £149,800,000. Within this total running cost provision is being decreased by £50,000 from £136,142,000 to £136,092,000 as a result of a transfer to class XIII, vote 3. Provision for capital expenditure is being reduced by £224,000 to £13,082,000 reflecting transfers of £200,000 to class XVI, vote 4 and £24,000 to class XIII, vote 3 for the National Museums of Scotland.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 8, Scottish Record Office, is being increased by a token amount of £1,000 to £5,173,000. Provision for capital expenditure is being increased by £201,000 to £1,287,000 to allow for remedial work to be undertaken on the Moat development project. Appropriations-in-Aid are being increased by £200,000 to £979,000 due to the receipt of a compensation payment in respect of the Moat project from the building contractor.

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities is to be reduced by a net total of £54,968,000 from £411,440,830 to £356,472,830. The net decrease reflects transfers of £300,000 from class XIII, vote 5 in respect of Fire capital provision, £33,300,000 to class XIII, vote 2 reflecting provision for the Spend to Save Scheme, £7,068,000 to class XIII, vote 2 reflecting provision for Roads and Transport, £6,400,000 in respect of Scottish Homes balance sheet adjustment, £5,000,000 to class XIII, vote 3 for the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council and Further Education Colleges and £3,500,000 to the non-voted element of Caledonian MacBrayne's external financing limit.

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA2 which covers Housing capital expenditure by local authorities will be reduced by £2,000,000 from £184,226,000 to £182,226,000 wholly reflecting a transfer to class XIII, vote 2 in respect of the Spend to Save Scheme.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30715]

Mr. Dewar: Details of advertising contracts awarded by my Department are listed.

Faulds Advertising Limited, Edinburgh:

Children's Panel Recruitment

Continence Campaign

Crime Prevention

Electoral Registration

Fire Safety

Food Hygiene

Police Recruitment

Devolution Referendum

Road Safety

Total value £1,075,000

Barker Scotland:

Severe Weather Advice

Total value £46,000

It is the practice of my Department to appoint agencies under a framework agreement from which advertising services are provided. A review of the Scottish Office advertising account was held in 1997 according to the EC competitive tendering regulations when Barkers Scotland and Faulds Advertising Limited were appointed. Ten companies took part in the competition.

Hyundai Project

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial guarantees have been extended to the construction companies and their subcontractors in association with the Hyundai project in Dunfermline. [30685]

Mr. Wilson: This is a contractual matter for the companies concerned.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total public moneys expended in the Dunfermline area in association with the Hyundai project, separately identifying the costs of the provision of utility infrastructure for the development area and the reconfiguration of the M90 interchange at Halbeath. [30690]

Mr. Wilson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Morgan) on 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 505.

In addition to the sums expended by the Scottish Enterprise Network on the preparation of the site, the East of Scotland Water Authority has spent about £1.5 million on water and sewerage infrastructure related to the Hyundai project.

The upgrading of the M90/A92 Halbeath Interchange—a Design and Build contract valued at £8.4 million which will be opened in March—is designed to relieve congestion and improve traffic flow at the interchange and was included in the Trunk Road programme prior to Hyundai's decision to locate its new semiconductor facility at Dunfermline. The upgrading work was not associated with the Hyundai project.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to protect employment levels amongst the construction companies and their subcontractors during the suspension of work at the Hyundai project in Dunfermline. [30766]

Mr. Wilson: There is a strong demand for the specialist services offered by many of the companies involved. Employment levels within these companies are however a matter for decision by the companies themselves.

Lynebank Hospital

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated overall cost of closing Lynebank Hospital and transferring all patients to other sites; and what are the costs in respect of transferring (a) the elderly, (b) those with learning disabilities and (c) those with forensic and/or dual diagnosis. [29151]

Mr. Galbraith: Fife Health Board has indicated that the estimated overall cost of closing Lynebank Hospital and transferring all patients to other sites is being reviewed as part of the ongoing Lynebank Discharge Programme. The current breakdown of future funding for the various elements of the service has been estimated by the Health Board as follows:

	£ million
Reprovision of NHS Services:
Elderly Frail	1.3
Core and Community Health for Learning Disability	2.9
Community Placements and Social Care:
Resource Transfer to Fife Council	4.9

HEALTH

New Variant CJD

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occupations in each of the 10 years preceding death of those individuals who died from new variant CJD. [22725]

Ms Jowell: The details given in the list show the known occupations over the last 10 years for the 23 individuals who have died from new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease to date. Totals do not sum because some patients had more than one occupation.

Occupations

NHS Dentists

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the total number of NHS dentists in each NHS health authority area in England and Wales and (b) per head of population in each area, arranging the health authorities in order of the number per head of population. [28671]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Labour Party Donations

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings (a) he and (b) his officials, have held since 1 May with individuals, groups or their representatives who have donated more than £5,000 to the Labour Party. [29053]

Mr. Dobson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire (Sir B. Mawhinney) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 405.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement regarding the proposed powers of his Department over GPs who do not wish to relinquish control of their practice budgets, under the measures set out in his White Paper on the NHS. [29060]

Mr. Milburn: Subject to legislation, the general practitioner fundholding scheme will be wound up and replaced by a system of Primary Care Groups and Primary Care Trusts who will be accountable to health authorities for the way in which they discharge their functions within the locally agreed Health Improvement Programme. Groups rather than individual practices will reach service agreements with National Health Service trusts. Over time, we expect that groups will extend indicative budgets to individual practices for the full range of services, but no individual element will be artificially capped.

It will be open to the group to agree practice level incentive arrangements associated with those budgets, with the approval of the health authority, where this helps promote best use of resources. Initially, every practice will have a prescribing budget, as most do now.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are estimated to have died as a result of being infected with hepatitis C as a result of their NHS treatment; and over what period of time. [29026]

Ms Jowell: We are not able to provide the information requested as it is not collected centrally. Deaths related to hepatitis C infection result from chronic liver disease. There are many causes of chronic liver disease, and data from death certificates are not classified by particular cause.

I understand, however, that the Haemophilia Society assess that over 50 haemophiliacs have died (it is not clear over what period) as a result of hepatitis C infection. These figures are understood to be based on the number of haemophilia patients where the cause of death was shown as liver disease. Hepatitis C may not therefore have been the main cause of that disease.

We have no figures relating to the cause of death amongst those people who have been infected with hepatitis C through blood transfusion.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what professional advice he has taken on the minimum effective expenditure on an advertising campaign intended to reduce significantly the numbers of teenagers who start and continue to smoke cigarettes; from whom he has taken it; what changes in policy and spending he made as a result; and if he will make a statement. [29675]

Ms Jowell: In developing campaigns aimed at teenagers, the Department takes advice from the Health Education Authority and Brewer Blackler Limited, the agencies running the current teenage smoking campaigns. This advice ensures the most effective use of the available resources.

Future plans will be set out in the forthcoming Tobacco Control White Paper and consultations now taking place will inform future expenditure planning.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to reduce smoking among young people. [30574]

Ms Jowell: Our strategy on smoking, including plans to reduce smoking among young people, will be set out in detail in the Tobacco Control White Paper to be published later this year.

Currently we fund a campaign called "Respect" which is targeting approximately 3 million teenagers (11 to 15 year olds). The campaign addresses the reasons why young people start smoking and seeks to create a positive lifestyle as relevant to the two thirds of teenagers who do not smoke as to the third who do. The campaign is costing up to £1 million a year for 3 years (from July 1996).

Secure Mental Health Units

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on guidelines for security in secure mental health units. [29539]

Mr. Boateng: National Health Service Estates has produced a design guide for medium secure psychiatric units which provides general information for security in such units.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many escapes there were from secure mental health units in 1997. [29538]

Mr. Boateng: Information about escapes is not collected centrally as a matter of routine. It is for the commissioning authorities to monitor the security arrangements of medium secure units.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in respect of the Arnold Lodge secure mental health unit in Leicester since April 1997. [29542]

Mr. Boateng: The only representations received were from my hon. Friend.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to increase security at secure mental health units. [29540]

Mr. Boateng: It is an operational matter for individual trusts to satisfy themselves that adequate security measures exist relating to their own circumstances. Security at secure mental health units is achieved by a combination of staff operational procedures including risk assessment, physical design of the buildings and, where appropriate, fences together with locking and electronic security systems.

Health Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to increase spending on health education following the recent Green Paper. [29590]

Ms Jowell: We will consider our plans in the light of responses to the Green Paper.

Diabetes

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of National Health Service prescriptions relating to diabetes in 1997. [29536]

Mr. Milburn: Information for the whole of 1997 is not yet available. The net ingredient cost of drugs used in diabetes and dispensed in the community in England in 1996 was £123.7 million. In addition the net ingredient cost of hypodermic equipment was £8.1 million although this may include equipment used for conditions other than diabetes.

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into difficulties arising from the standardisation of insulin strengths; [29782]

(2) what assessment he has made of the benefits of standardising insulin strengths; [29775]

(3) what assessment he has made of the advantages of allowing doctors to prescribe insulin at different strengths and types; and what assessment he has made of practices in other EU countries relating to the standardisation of insulin strengths. [29777]

Ms Jowell: Insulin strengths were standardised in the United Kingdom in the 1980s in order to avoid confusion and administration of the wrong dose. The move was agreed by the medical professions and the British Diabetic Association and endorsed by the World Health Organisation and the International Diabetes Federation. All other member states of the European Union have agreed to standardise insulin strengths. The Department has neither commissioned nor evaluated any research into difficulties arising from the switch to a single strength insulin.

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has evaluated into the effect on the quality of life of patients who have reverted to animal insulin after using human insulin; and if he will make a statement. [29781]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) are responsible for the continuous monitoring of the safety of all licensed medicines. The safety of both human (genetically engineered) and animal insulin is therefore under continuous review. The MCA has not evaluated specific studies into the effect on the quality of life of patients who have reverted to animal insulin after using human insulin. The MCA and the CSM will continue to monitor closely the safety of insulins.

Cash Limits

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1997–98. [30433]

Mr. Dobson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class XI, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) will be increased by £203,554,000 (from £29,353,438,000 to £29,556,992,000). This allows for increases of £242,965,000 in respect of the take up of amounts under the end year flexibility scheme as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50; and £159,000,000 from the Reserve for that element of Department of Health's National Health Service winter pressures money allocated to cash limited lines. This increase is partially offset by a transfer of £232,882,000 following a re-appraisal of drugs budget requirements (£215,500,000) and for health centre rents (£17,382,000). In addition the following transfers will take place: £6,000,000 from Class XI Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) to contribute to additional NHS funding in 1997–98; £3,257,000 from Class XVIII, Vote 4 (Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner and Health Service Commissioners) as an offset for previously funded activity not now required; £373,000 from Class XII, Vote 1 (Central government administered social security benefits and other payments) for hearing aids for war pensioners and £25,000,000 from NHS Trusts non voted external finance, partially offset by transfers of £60,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security, administration) for start-up costs of the Compensation Recovery Unit; £19,000 to Class XIII, Vote, 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland) for General Practice Fundholders cross border flows, and £80,000 to Class XI, vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) for work on injury benefits recharging.

The cash limit for Class XI, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be increased by £86,828,000 (from £995,737,000 to £1,082,565,000). This increase allows for a claim on the Reserve of £86,600,000 to support the asylum seekers' accommodation grant and persons from abroad childrens' grant; £6,000,000 (running costs) in respect of the take up of amounts under the end year flexibility scheme as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50. The increase also allows for the following transfers, £300,000 (running costs) from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for law charges; £112,000 from Class XVI, Vote 11 (Office for National Statistics) for the transfer of responsibility of notification of infectious diseases statistics; £80,000 (into running costs) from Class XI, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) for injury benefits recharging; £80,000 (into running costs) from Class XIII, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland) for the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act (£50,000) and for the National Screening Committee (£30,000); £25,000 (into running costs) from Class XIV; Vote 3 (Roads and transport, housing, other environmental services, Cadw, arts and libraries, health and personal social services, European Regional Development Fund and Welsh Office administration, Wales) for the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act; £15,000 (into running costs) from Class XIV, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health and other health services (part), Wales) for the National Screening Committee; £33,000 (into running costs) from the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland for the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act (£25,000) and for the National Screening Committee (£8,000). The overall increase is partially offset by transfers of £6,000,000 (running costs) to Class XI, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) towards additional funding for the National Health Service; £373,000 to Class XIII, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland) for the Medical Devices Agency Evaluation Service; and £44,000 (running costs) to Class XVIII, Vote 3 (Privy Council Office) for the Central Drugs Co-ordinating Unit.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be reduced by £4,494,000 from £260,129,000 to £255,635,000 made up of a net increase of £489,000 reflecting the transfer to and from running costs mentioned above and a reduction of £4,983,000 to meet increased capital spending and a shortfall in receipts.

All increases will either be offset by savings, increased receipts, or transfers to or from other Votes and non voted provision, or charged to the Reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Overall the External Financing Limit for NHS Trusts is decreased by £142,835,000 from £309,950,000 to £167,115,000.

Care in the Community

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the public safety implications of Care in the Community. [30204]

Mr. Boateng: Care in the community has failed to deliver effective services for some people. We have to build a new basis of confidence and trust. We want to ensure that mentally ill people receive appropriate care and treatment, while safeguarding the public.

In recognition of the priority we accord to mental health services, we have established an Independent Reference Group to advise us on mental health issues; and have asked the Group, as its first priority, to consider the issue of the closure of the remaining long-stay mental hospitals to ensure that proper and credible alternative services are in place before closures take place.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many murders have been committed by people treated under the Care in the Community policy; and if he will make a statement. [30205]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not available in the form requested.

Aricept

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities which currently make Aricept available on National Health Service prescription. [30782]

Mr. Milburn: Information about the prescribing of Aricept within the National Health Service is available only for prescriptions dispensed in the community in England. In many health authorities these will have been prescribed in hospitals. Data available show that prescriptions have been dispensed in 99 out of the 100 health authorities in England. However, I understand that many health authorities are reluctant to commit resources to the drug because published data currently suggest that it has limited clinical effectiveness.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30324]

Ms Jowell: The Department is reviewing the use of all its assets, including identifying assets which are surplus to requirements, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review which will be completed this summer. Of the buildings occupied by the Department, St. Charles School, Brentwood, has already been identified as surplus to requirements. It is not possible to give an estimate of its value as this will depend on the circumstances of its disposal. For accounting purposes surplus assets will be valued in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Resource Accounting Manual.

Dental Services

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations he has made of the level of provision of dental care in each of the towns in the South Hams; and if he will make a statement. [30793]

Mr. Milburn: There were 213 general dental practitioners whose main contract was with the South and West Devon Health Authority in December 1997. Six dentists are currently accepting various categories of National Health Service patients in South Hams.

I understand that the health authority is currently preparing proposals under the Investing in Dentistry initiative which will, if successful, improve the provision of dental care in South Hams.

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the rates of absenteeism in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if he will make a statement. [26600]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The average number of working days sickness absence per staff-year in the Department in 1995 was 9.8. In 1996, the figure was 7.1.

The only agency for which separate figures are available is the National Health Service Estates Agency. In 1995, the average number of working days sickness absence per staff-year was 5.4. In 1996, the figure was 5.3.

Sickness absence information for 1997 is not yet available. Absence information for the non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to ensure the continuity of production and supply of essential drugs currently manufactured outside the United Kingdom in the years covered by millennium computer compliance problems; [29506]

(2) what discussions he has had with non-UK based companies who provide essential drugs and services to the National Health Service about their millennium compliance status. [29507]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 13 February 1998]: The responsibility for ensuring the continuity of supply of essential drugs and services to National Health Service organisations over the millennium date change rests with the chief executive of each organisation, who will be seeking assurances of continuity of supply from suppliers. Where those assurances are inadequate, alternative suppliers will be used or other contingency plans used.

To avoid unnecessary duplication of effort in liaising with suppliers, central organisations such as NHS Supplies will be contacting major suppliers and making the results known to all NHS organisations. Furthermore, a central contingency stock plan is being developed by NHS Supplies in conjunction with regional offices.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Waste Materials

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to regulate waste materials spread on UK farmland. [30193]

Mr. Morley: There are regulations to control environmental and public health risks from spreading of waste material on agricultural land. The use of sewage sludge on agricultural land is controlled by the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 and spreading of other non-agricultural waste is controlled by the waste management licensing system in force under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and by the associated Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994. These controls are the responsibility of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and are enforced by the Environment Agency in England and Wales.

The Department complements these Regulations by providing farmers with free written guidance, e.g. the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Air, Soil and Water.

Certified Herd Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific matters affecting the export certified herd scheme in Northern Ireland were considered by the relevant EU Working Group meeting on 29 January. [27340]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The EU Working Group met on 29 January and examined in detail each article of the Commission's proposals.

Beef on the Bone

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests will be applied by environmental health inspectors to differentiate foreign beef bones from those coming from United Kingdom animals. [27336]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The Beef Bones Regulations 1997 require the deboning of all beef, whether from home supplies or imported, coming from cattle over 6 months old before it is sold to the consumer.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many letters his Department has received since he announced the ban on beef on the bone objecting to that ban and the Government's policy relating to it. [29732]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Since the announcement on 3 December 1997, this Department has received approximately 3,100 such letters.

Brazilian Mahogany

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of Brazilian mahogany has been (a) acquired and (b) specified by his Department in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997; and for what purpose. [28381]

Dr. John Cunningham: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. However, the Department has not knowingly acquired or specified Brazilian mahogany in any central purchasing or construction contracts in 1996 and 1997 and has a policy of giving preference to renewable natural resources wherever possible.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the average net annual income for farmers in England from 1989–90 to date. [28283]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 February 1998]: Long term trends in net farm income are normally presented as indices because of the changing sample of the Farm Business Survey. However, set out are the equivalent monetary values.

Milk Quotas (Italy)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has requested the EU Commission to undertake following the Italian Government's recent report on further fraud in the administration of milk quotas in Italy; and if he will make a statement. [28854]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 10 February 1998]: None. The situation in Italy is kept under close scrutiny by the EU Commission, which has recently instigated infraction proceedings against the Italian Authorities for their failure to collect super-levy from over-quota producers.

Food Safety

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent the calculation of risk of mortality governs his approval of food for human consumption. [28856]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 10 February 1998]: Protection of human health is always the primary consideration of the Government in their food risk management decisions. The Government seek to achieve protection of the public with a proportionate response that takes account of the size of any risk and the measures that may be available to remove or reduce such a risk.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to reply to the letter of 22 December from the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire. [28734]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 10 February 1998]: I replied to the letter of 22 December 1997 from the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire on 10 February 1998.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which rural areas in Wales he has visited in the last six months; and what plans he has to visit rural areas in the future. [29681]

Dr. John Cunningham: I have not made any visits to rural Wales in the past six months. I regularly visit rural areas, and shall continue to do so.

Flood Defences (Sussex)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason Environmental Agency flood defence work to sea defences at Shoreham and Lancing has been discontinued; and when the programme will be resumed. [30688]

Mr. Morley: The Department has advised the Environment Agency's Sussex Flood Defence Committee that it will provide grant to support a programme of capital defence works of £3.9 million in 1998–99 (an increase over the provision for 1997–98). Within this total, it is for the Committee to decide which projects should be promoted and their timing. I understand that substantial works have already been completed at Shoreham/Lancing and that the current phase, estimated to cost £1.6 million, is likely to be completed by the end of March 1998. The Committee has determined that the next phase should be promoted in 1999–2000 in the light of its urgency in comparison to works elsewhere in the area.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into alternatives to synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips and ivermectin injectables. [29726]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Since 1992, the Department has funded research on alternatives to chemotherapeutics such as the synthetic pyrethroids and organophosphates used in sheep dips, and ivermectin injection, that are used for the treatment of ecto and endo parasitic infestations.

The Department's current research programme is costing £1.6 million over about 5 years and is focused on two main areas of improving control:

(a) the development of ways of modulating the immune response such as by vaccination, and

(b) by the use of insect attractants to lure nuisance flies away from livestock to baited traps.

Most of this work is relatively strategic. However the work on insect attractants is more applied and will be evaluated shortly for its practical value.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department gives to farmers on the disposal of synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips. [29737]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Advice on the disposal of sheep dips is given on the label of every product and in the leaflet, Sheep dipping, published jointly by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Health and Safety Executive and the former Department of the Environment. A new edition of the leaflet is in preparation and will be sent to all known sheep farmers in Great Britain. Advice is also contained in the code of Good Practice for the Protection of Water, published by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Welsh Office.

The National Proficiency Tests Council organises a test leading to the issue of a Certificate of Competence which includes the disposal of all types of sheep dip.

A certificate is currently required for the purchase of OP dips but the Government have accepted the advice of the Veterinary Products Committee that the requirement should be extended to cover the purchase of non-OP dips including those containing synthetic pyrethroids. We are currently consulting on a change in legislation which would take effect on 1 August 1998.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the results of tests on ivermectin injectable products to replace synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips will be available; and if they will be published. [29736]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Three injectable veterinary medicinal products have been authorised and are available for the treatment and control of sheep scab. Two contain ivermectin as their active ingredient. Details of all sheep ectoparasiticides are published every six months by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and a copy of the January 1998 leaflets is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what testing was carried out before synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips were introduced with regard to its impact on (a) the aquatic environment, (b) the soil environment and (c) fisheries. [29727]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Applications for marketing authorisations for veterinary medicinal products must be supported by data, including the results of relevant tests, to satisfy the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes the safety of the environment.

Herbicide-tolerant Crops

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issue a moratorium on the introduction of genetically modified herbicide-tolerant crops. [30420]

Mr. Rooker: We are considering the introduction and management of genetically modified herbicide tolerant crops on the farm and shall be announcing our decision shortly.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from his statutory advisers on herbicide-tolerant crops. [30421]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) is the Government's statutory adviser on applications to release or market genetically modified crops.

In the case of herbicide-tolerant crops, ACRE has advised that the evidence suggests there is unlikely to be a risk from the release of glufosinate ammonium tolerant oilseed rape and that it is content that this crop can be placed on the market. ACRE has also given similar advice for the marketing of maize tolerant to glyphosate or glufosinate ammonium herbicides and glyphosate tolerant fodder beet.

Experimental releases of glyphosate tolerant oilseed rape are also taking place in Great Britain, and in this case ACRE has advised that an isolation distance of 50m be imposed as a condition to consents until further information is provided to support the removal of the isolation distance. Glyphosate tolerant sugar beet has also been released for trials, but with the condition that all "bolters" are removed before they flower.

ACRE has also issued general advice that all bags of genetically modified seed are clearly labelled as herbicide tolerant, stating the herbicide to which they are tolerant.

Food Labelling

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures the Government are taking to reduce the number of single ingredient foods exempted from listing. [30482]

Mr. Rooker: The Food Labelling Regulations 1996 will be amended on 1 July this year to make clear that this exemption applies only to those single ingredient foods the name of which is identical to that of the name of the ingredient, or where the name enables the nature of the ingredient to be identified clearly. These changes—which we have supported—are as a result of new EC requirements which will become compulsory with effect from 14 February 2000.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures the Government are taking to harmonise European terminology used on food labels. [30485]

Mr. Rooker: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to new requirements for quantitative ingredient declarations which become compulsory on 14 February 2000. The UK has taken the lead in the EC on guidelines to explain these requirements so that consumers are given consistent and uniform information on food labels.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that ingredients containing starch and modified starch indicate their specific vegetable origin if they are likely to contain gluten. [30483]

Mr. Rooker: Yes. The Food Labelling Regulations 1996 will be amended on 1 July this year to introduce this new requirement, which will become compulsory with effect from 14 February 2000.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures the Government will take to implement the new EC directive on food labelling by 2000. [30484]

Mr. Rooker: The Food Labelling Regulations 1996 will be amended on 1 July this year to implement directive 97/4/EC. The new requirements will become compulsory with effect from 14 February 2000.

Milk Products

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on competition within the British dairy industry of the Codex proposals on bio-yoghurt products. [30705]

Mr. Rooker: A detailed assessment has not been made. However, around 60 per cent. of the UK yoghurt market would be affected by the new requirement to re-label as "fermented milks" products sold legally in the UK as yoghurt.

Poultry Meat

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what volume of poultry meat has been imported from (a) Thailand and (b) Brazil, in each of the last three years. [30942]

Mr. Rooker: The volumes (tonnes) of poultry meat dispatched to the UK from Thailand and Brazil, as recorded in the Overseas Trade Statistics, are shown in the table.

Volume in tonnes

Cash Limits

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to his Department's Cash Limit for Class III Vote 1, Intervention Board Executive Agency, for 1997–98. [30378]

Dr. John Cunningham: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class III, Vote 1 (Intervention Board—Executive Agency: CAP market support and administration) will be increased by £10,890,000 from £118,865,000 to £129,755,000. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the total public expenditure. The Vote 1 supplementary will give effect to full take up of the running costs end-year flexibility of £4,062,000 and the capital end year flexibility of £842,000 announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50. The supplementary estimate also reflects an increase of the running costs limit by £7,063,000 from £55,085,000 to £62,148,000.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to his Department's Cash Limit for Class III Vote 2, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for 1997–98. [30377]

Dr. John Cunningham: Subject to Spring Supplementary Estimate being agreed by Parliament, the cash limit for Class III, Vote 2 (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) for 1997–98 will be reduced by £15,746,000 from £739,802,000 to £724,056,000. This reduction is accounted for by a net cash limit reduction of £14,000,000 in BSE-related provision, transfers of £983,000 to OST Class IV Vote 2 for staff restructuring at Horticulture Research International and £60,000 to DETR Class VI Vote 3 for enforcing the Nitrate Action Programme, a reduction of £933,000 arising from transfers within the Vote, and a transfer of £230,000 from WOAD Class XIV Vote 3 for Veterinary Field Service accommodation in Wales. The net effect on our gross running cost limit is a reduction of £8,566,000 from £339,292,000 to £330,726,000 which reflects a switch of £8,796,000 BSE-related provision from running costs to programme expenditure, and the transfer in of £230,000 running costs from WOAD.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Second-hand Cars

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many second-hand cars, manufactured and used in Japan, were imported into the United Kingdom in 1997; and what is her estimate of the number in 1998. [30724]

Mr. Battle: The latest figures available from Customs and Excise show that between January and October 1997, 1,654 used motor vehicles were imported into the UK directly from Japan. It is not possible from the figures to identify separately those which were manufactured in Japan, or to include those which came to the UK from Japan via a third country. This trade is a difficult one to predict and it is not possible to provide an estimate for 1998.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the importation of second-hand cars manufactured and used in Japan on the United Kingdom manufacturing and retail motor industry; and if she will make a statement. [30723]

Mr. Battle: My noble Friend the Minister for Roads is currently reviewing the impact of the new Single Vehicle Approval scheme, in consultation with me. As part of this process we will take into account any effect on UK industry of imports into the UK under the scheme.

Hawk Jets (Indonesia)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been committed by the ECGD since 1 May 1997 for (a) loan and (b) cover for deliveries of Hawk jets to Indonesia. [30534]

Mrs. Beckett: ECGD has not supported any new facilities for Hawk jets to Indonesia since 1 May 1997 or given any commitments since that date to do so.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Hawk jets remained to be delivered to Indonesia on 1 May 1997. [30444]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 February 1998]: Sixteen aircraft remained to be delivered on 1 May 1997.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the final detailed agreement was signed for the cover and the loan from ECGD for the most recent batch of Hawk jets to Indonesia. [30443]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The ECGD supported loan agreement in respect of the most recent Hawk contract was signed on 28 March 1996.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the ECGD total cover value and the total loan for Hawk jets supplied to Indonesia. [30442]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 February 1998]: ECGD has guaranteed two loans valued at US$530m and £13.4m for a contract for Hawk aircraft made with the Indonesian Government in 1993 and one loan valued at £280m in respect of a further contract made in 1996.

The total value of ECGD's guarantees, which cover interest as well as the principal value of the loans, is £467m in respect of the loans relating to the 1993 contract and £362m in respect of the loan relating to the 1996 contract.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she is proposing to help exporters and manufacturers in respect of the current sterling exchange rate. [30612]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) on 5 February 1998, Official Report, column 1215.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many receptions have been held in her Department since she took office; how many people have attended; and what was the total cost of these events. [25165]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Since I took office the Hospitality Section in the Department of Trade and Industry has been involved in arrangements for twenty-two receptions. The estimated number of people attending these receptions is 2,300. The DTI has been responsible for funding or part-funding seventeen of them. Not all the bills have been received yet but so far the cost to the department has been £16,250.

Details are contained in the table.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many safeguards visits, involving how many person hours, were made respectively by safeguards inspectors from (a) Euratom and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency to plants operated by (i) British Nuclear Fuels plc and (ii) the UK Atomic Energy Authority in 1997. [28497]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 19 December 1997, Official Report, column 342.

Reports on the operation of Euratom safeguards, including information on typical Euratom safeguards inspection effort both by country and by type of installation, are published periodically by the European Commission. The most recent information available is for 1996. This information is available in the paper "Euratom Safeguards—An update on Present Developments", which has been placed in the library of the House.

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) do not routinely publish similar figures, but the information they have provided to us, which is subject to validation within the IAEA, shows that the inspection effort in the United Kingdom in 1997 fell within the range indicated in my previous answer. The facilities inspected included parts of BNFL's Sellafield site, but at present no UKAEA facilities are designated for inspection by the IAEA.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to reply to the questions, tabled on 14 January, from the hon. Member for Ribble Valley, relating to the oil industry. [29248]

Mr. Battle: These questions were answered today. The delay in answering, for which I apologise, was caused by the need to discuss the question within the DTI and with other Government Departments.

Mr. Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what powers her Department has in relation to the seismic exploration for oil on the mainland where environmental damage has occurred, but where the exploration licence has expired; [23837]

(2) if she will list the occasions when her Department has used its powers against companies which have caused environmental damage during the seismic exploration for oil. [23835]

Mr. Battle: Petroleum licences are granted under the Petroleum (Production) Act 1934. Neither this Act nor the Regulations made under it provide for the criminal prosecution or taking by the Secretary of State of civil action against a licence holder where environmental damage has been caused in the course of petroleum exploration, whether or not that licence is still in force. Where environmental damage on land results from activity which contravenes any environmental legislation, then it is for the appropriate body such as the Environment Agency or relevant local authority to take action.

However, where a licence is still in force, breaches of the terms and conditions may lead to its revocation. The President of the Board of Trade may also take any lack of efficiency and responsibility in operations under a licence into account in decisions about future petroleum licence awards.

Television Broadcasting

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to regulate the bundling of satellite television channels carried by cable television systems. [30405]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The Office of Fair Trading has twice reviewed the position of BSkyB in the wholesale programme supply market to cable, most recently in a review carried out in 1996. As a result of those reviews BSkyB have given certain undertakings to meet the Director General of Fair Trading's concerns. He continues to keep this market under review. In addition, the Independent Television Commission is currently investigating the practice of "bundling".

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to announce a determination relating to the application by BT to be allowed to carry television signals over BT telephone lines. [30404]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The Government are considering carefully the options available for fulfilling their manifesto commitments on lifting the broadcast restrictions which affect BT amongst others. We are determined to maximise the benefit to the consumer, by encouraging investment and competition in all areas of the market; both infrastructure and services. I expect to publish our conclusions shortly.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what basis the defence forces have been categorised as exempt from the minimum wage. [30521]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the right hon. Member to the explanation given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State which is reported in the Official Report, of the thirteenth sitting of Standing Committee D on 5 February 1998, in particular column 777.

Export Licences

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average time taken in handling export licences. [30429]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 February 1998]: As I stated in my earlier answer, on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 416, the Export Control Organisation of my Department does not record the average length of time it takes for an export licence application to be issued. However, it does monitor its performance against published targets which are fully detailed in my previous answer.

Tractor Production and Exports

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the current decline in farming incomes upon the United Kingdom tractor production and export market; and if she will make a statement. [30567]

Mr. Battle: Despite relatively weak demand in the home market, strong export sales allowed UK based manufacturers of agricultural tractors to increase production volumes by around 6 per cent. last year to over 75,000 units (a seven year high).

Cash Limits

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to the cash and running cost limits for her Department, the Office of Gas Supply and the Office of Electricity Regulation for 1997–98 and to the external financing limits of the British Coal Corporation and British Shipbuilders for 1997–98. [30413]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 1—programmes and administration—will be increased by £3,949,000 from £1,349,066,000 to £1,353,015,000. This net increase results from:

(i) additional provision amounting to £9,000,000 for the settlement of nuclear liabilities;

offset by:

(ii) the transfer of £100,000 from the non-voted provision of the Northern Ireland Department for Economic Development to the Sectoral Support budget;

(iii) a net reduction of £3,000,000 in the provision for Privatisation Expenses;

(iv) a net reduction of £2,100,000 in the provisions for the Local Competitiveness and Telecommunications and Posts budgets;

(v) the transfer of £51,000 to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Class II Vote 2) in respect of the UK's subscription to the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Within this total, the gross running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry is being reduced by £74,000 from £371,937,000 to £371,863,000. This change results from the machinery of government change involving the transfer of responsibility for insurance matters to the Treasury.

The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 2—science—will be increased by £7,693,000 from £1,330,543,000 to £1,338,236,000. This net increase results from:

(i) the take up of capital end-year flexibility (£6,747,000) as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50.

(ii) the transfer of £983,000 from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Class III, Vote 2) in respect of further redundancies at Horticulture Research International;

offset by:

(iii) the transfer of £37,000 to the Department for Education and Employment (Class IX Vote 1) to reflect the transfer of responsibility for the Advisory Group on Computer Graphics from the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council to the Joint Information Systems Committee of the Higher Education Funding Council for England.

The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Also, subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 9—Office of Gas Supply—will be increased by £100,000 from £11,128,000 to £11,228,000. This change reflects the extra resources required for infrastructure servicing and associated health and safety work on the Leicester estate. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Additionally, subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 10—Office of Electricity Regulation—will be increased by £350,000 from £15,950,000 to £16,300,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £300,000 from £16,635,000 to £16,935,000. Also an increase in receipts to the consolidated fund of £1,000,000 is provided for in the Estimate. These changes reflect the extra resources required for new work concerning the preparation for a fundamental review of the electricity trading arrangements and give effect to the end-year flexibility carry forward of £50,000 on capital announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

In addition to these changes, the External Financing Limits of British Coal and British Shipbuilders have been adjusted. British Coal's External Financing Limit has been reduced from £71,000,000 to £58,800,000 to reflect a transfer of responsibility for residual property liabilities to the Coal Authority. British Shipbuilders' External Financing Limit has been adjusted from £–1,300,000 to £–25,564,000 to reflect a payment from GEC in respect of deferred consideration following the sale of VSEL. The payment had been expected in 1998–99 but has been made in this financial year.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the preparedness of the nuclear power industry in dealing with the millennium computer date problem. [26263]

Mr. Battle: The nuclear power industry is well aware of the implications of the millennium computer date problem. Action is being taken to assess the scale of the problem and take remedial action as follows:

Magnox Electric is working in collaboration with other nuclear operators. Following an inventory and assessment phase, remedial work has been planned with the aim of completing work on their own systems by the end of 1998.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. has instigated plans to implement its compliance strategy and achieve compliance by March 1999.

British Energy in co-operation with other nuclear operators and the Electricity Association has a comprehensive and well established Year 2000 programme. Following an inventory and assessment phase, work on essential and safety systems is on schedule to be completed by the end of 1998.

The UK Atomic Energy Authority is following a plan designed to ensure that key systems achieve compliance by the end of March 1999.

Chief Executives of these organisations are responsible for ensuring that their plans are successfully achieved. The DTI has been assured that the projects are currently on schedule.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors govern the publications recommended by the Millennium Hotline; and what mechanism determines what new titles are added. [26381]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: I understand from Action 2000 that they selected the sources of good practice based on advice from a team of experts, taking into account the size of businesses seeking help and the stage they have reached in tackling the problem. Action 2000 is keeping the selection under review so that it can be improved as more material becomes available.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish a list of all makes of PCs sold in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years which will need modifying to work in 2000. [26392]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: We have no plans to publish such a list, but Action 2000 has already published a list of sources of information about many manufacturers' systems. I understand it also plans to make available information about some of the most popular commercial software.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice the Millennium Hotline is able to offer other than recommended publications. [26388]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: I understand from Action 2000 that the Hotline was set up initially to help disseminate the Millennium Bug Campaign information pack. Inquiries requesting specific information on tools, skills, training, and sources of advice on best practice can be referred to specialist help on these topics. As more information becomes available, the Hotline will be used to disseminate it.

Industrial Development Advisory Board

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in each of the last five years she has received (a) advice and (b) representations from the Industrial Development Advisory Board in respect of her Department's activities in Scotland. [30206]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 18 February 1998]: On no occasion in the last five years has the Industrial Development Advisory Board submitted advice or made representations about my Department's activities in Scotland.

Trade Missions

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the trade missions undertaken by Ministers in her Department since 1 May 1997 and the British companies which were represented on each trade mission. [24250]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Since 1 May 1997 my Ministerial colleagues at the DTI and I have undertaken the following trade missions abroad, accompanied by British companies.

President of the Board of Trade

16–18 November 1997—India

10–21 January 1998—China and Pakistan

Minister for Trade

10–16 September 1997—Argentina and Chile

15 October 1997—Paris

Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry

7–11 February 1998—Egypt.

The hon. Member will know that such missions usually feature in Press Notices beforehand and, as such, are a matter of public record. A full list of those companies participating will be placed in the Library.

The hon. Member will also know from my response to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 572, that Ministers undertake many other visits overseas for trade purposes.

Export Credit Guarantees (Far East)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when ECGD last raised rates for cover to (a) Indonesia, (b) South Korea, (c) Malaysia, (d) Hong Kong and (e) China; and by how much. [26383]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 February 1998, Official Report, columns 484–85.

British Investments

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current level of British investment in (a) Bosnia and Herzegovina and (b) Croatia. [28703]

Mrs. Roche: The latest available information, from the Overseas Direct Investment inquiries conducted by the Office for National Statistics, is for 1996. At the end of 1996 there was no reported investment by British companies in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Information on British investment in Croatia is not available because of commercial confidentiality.

Brazilian Mahogany

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount of Brazilian mahogany has been (a) acquired and (b) specified by her Department in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997; and for what purpose. [28376]

Mrs. Roche: The Department has not used Brazilian mahogany in the period specified.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy that she and her Ministers personally read the letters sent to them by hon. Members on constituency matters. [27674]

Mrs. Beckett: Yes.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has received from (a) senators in the United States of America and (b) other sources within the United States of America about barriers to free trade in the context of proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements; what was the nature of these representations; and what response she has made. [26357]

Mrs. Roche: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received a letter from US Senators Harkin and Hatch about the compatibility of proposed new controls on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements with international trade rules. My right hon. Friend replied, confirming that the Government are fully committed to meeting their World Trade Organisation (WTO) and European Community obligations which require that any national measures taken to protect human health must be non-discriminatory, proportionate to the risk posed and based on scientific evidence. My right hon. Friend has received no other representations from the US.

Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to encourage the oil and gas industry to invest in recommissioning offshore platforms. [29305]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 13 February 1998]: Innovative new development and production techniques are constantly under appraisal by the industry and many installations now being installed on the UK Continental Shelf are designed specifically to be re-used.

As more fields reach the end of their lives there will clearly be a need to deal with facilities which have served their purpose offshore. The majority of North Sea facilities will be brought to shore for re-use or recycling.

Mumbai Airport

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on British Government support for the new Mumbai airport project; which British companies are involved in the project; and what discussions have taken place with the Indian authorities. [29422]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department provided financial support from the Overseas Projects Fund to a UK consortium to enable them to undertake the pre-feasibility study for the proposed new international airport for Mumbai. Discussions with the Indian authorities on the project are continuing but details of those discussions and the companies involved are treated as confidential.

Transco

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations officials from her Department have had with representatives of Transco over the reorganisation of the operational structure of Transco East Midlands. [30188]

Mr. Battle: Transco has kept my officials informed about its general restructuring plans. However, there has been no formal consultation as this restructuring is a commercial matter for the company, subject to conforming with its licence conditions, set by the Regulator.

Overhead Power Line (Lune Valley)

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to announce her decision on the application submitted by Norweb to erect an overhead power line in the Lune Valley; and if she will make a statement. [30438]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will reach her decision on this application as soon as she properly and practically can, taking into account all the representations received.

Social Dialogue

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the EU budget for 1997–98 for consultation, conferences, training and education as part of the social dialogue in the United Kingdom. [30437]

Mrs. Beckett: The EU budget line for social dialogue is not broken down by member states.

Wealth Warnings

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received about the removal of wealth warnings from radio advertisements relating to financial services products and consumer credit; and if she will make a statement. [27107]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1998, c. 817]: I should inform the hon. Gentleman that we have in fact received 10 letters and 5 PQs asking for the requirement for wealth warnings on radio to be removed. I apologise unreservedly for this omission.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Cash Limits

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes he plans to announce to cash limits and running cost limits within his responsibility for 1997–98. [30274]

Dr. Howells: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1, Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services, and Class IX, Vote 3, Employment Service will be amended as follows:

Class	Vote	Existing cash limit	Change	New cash limit
IX	1	9,505,077,000	34,653,000	9,539,730,000

The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment) will be increased by £34,653,000 from £9,505,077,000 to £9,539,730,000. This is a result of machinery of government changes whereby provision for disability issues is being transferred from the Department of Social Security (Class XII, Vote 1) and the Scottish Office (Class XIII, Vote 3); and provision for Women's issues is being transferred to the Department of Social Security (Class XII, Vote 1). The Employment Service (Class IX, Vote 3) are to transfer £25,000,000 to finance additional expenditure on section A, £175,000 for work in connection with the New Deal for Young People to be done by Government Offices, and £40,000 for Employment Zones. Transfers to that Vote comprise £500,000 for a Challenge Fund publicity campaign, £1,600,000 for restructuring costs, and £90,000 for Central Dispatch. Section W will increase by £6,050,000 for funding on the further education element of the Welfare to Work programme and £125,000 for additional running costs on that programme. Net provision on Section B will be increased by £521,000,000 as a result of fewer than expected appropriations in aid, financed through a claim on the Reserve. Transfers to the Department of Social Security (Class XII, Vote 1) comprise £150,000 in connection with the single school leaving date and £1,700,000 in connection with Severe Hardship Allowances. £89,000 will be transferred from that Vote for Lone Parents. Section O will increase by £1,600,000 in respect of consultancy costs in connection with the sale of the student loans debt. £37,000 will be transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry (Class III, Vote 2) in connection with the Advisory Group on Computer Graphics. £6,000,000 for European Social Fund projects will be funded in advance of receipts from the European Commission from two new sections of the Vote. £15,000 will be transferred to the Cabinet Office (Class XVIII, Vote 3) for the Drugs Tsar. In addition, £408,000 will be vired to section P from section D and £8,000,000 to section R from section B.

The cash limit on Class IX, Vote 3 will be decreased by £15,657,000 from £1,235,477,000 to £1,219,820,000. The running cost provision (within the control total) on this Vote will be increased as a result of the following changes: a net transfer of £4,498,000 in running cost provision from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) due to the recalculation of the cost of the implementation of the jobseeker's allowance; transfers from Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) of £1,600,000 in relation to restructuring costs and £90,000 for Central Dispatch work now undertaken by the Employment Service (ES); the transfer of £40,000 in running costs provision to that Vote to cover work Government Offices will undertake on Employment Zones; and the transfer of £170,000 in running costs provision from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration), £140,000 of which is to cover the cost of work undertaken by ES in preparation for New Deal for Lone Parents and £30,000 for Decision Making Advice in connection with Adjudication work. In addition, "other current expenditure" will be reduced as a result of: a transfer of £25,000,000 to Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) for additional spending on section A of that Vote, offset by a transfer of £500,000 from Class IX, Vote 1 to the Challenge Fund publicity campaign.

The running cost provision for the Welfare to Work programme (outside the control total) on this Vote has been increased as a result of the following changes: expenditure of £2,700,000 required for the preparation for the New Deal for Lone Parents which will be funded from the Windfall Tax; and a transfer of £175,000 from the New Deal running costs provision (outside the control total) to Class IX, Vote 1 to cover Government Offices costs on the implementation of New Deal for Young People.

As a result of these changes, the running costs provision within the Control Total for Class IX, Vote 1 (DfEE) will be increased by £277,000 from £251,987,000 to £252,264,000. The running costs provision within the Control Total for Class IX, Vote 3 (Employment Service) will be increased by £6,318,000 from £805,231,000 to £811,549,000. The overall running costs limit for the DfEE is therefore increased by £6,595,000 from £1,057,218,000 to £1,063,813,000.

As a result of changes to provision relating to the Welfare to Work programme, running costs provision outside of the control total on Vote 1 has increased by £300,000 from £1,330,000 to £1,630,000 and on Vote 3 by £2,525,000 from £48,000,000 to £50,525,000. The revised non-control total running costs limit is therefore £52,155,000.

The control total elements of the increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Salaries

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the total expenditure on the salaries and other emoluments of the chief executives and the chairmen of all non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department, for the financial year 1996–97. [30819]

Dr. Howells: The Department sponsored fifteen executive non-departmental public bodies in 1996–97. Using the spot date of 1 September 1996 for the salaries and other emoluments of Chairmen, the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1996" shows expenditure of £333,676. The salaries and other emoluments of chief executives for that financial year totalled £1,206,202.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the names, current salaries and other emoluments of the (i) Chief Executive and (ii) Chairman of the (a) National Council for Vocational Qualifications, (b) National Council for Education Technology, (c) Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research, (d) Education Assets Board, (e) School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, (f) Further Education Funding Council, (g) Higher Education Funding Council for England, (h) Funding Agency for Schools, (i) Teacher Training Agency and (j) Office for Standards in Education. Advertising and Publicity

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the principal expenditure items and the outturn expenditure for his Department and its predecessors on advertising and publicity in the year 1996–97. [30847]

Dr. Howells: The principle expenditure items and the outturn expenditure for the Department and its predecessors on advertising and publicity in the year 1996–97 are listed as follows:

Corporate Publicity
Employment and Lifelong Learning
Schools
Strategy, International and Analytical Services
Further and Higher Education and Youth Training Employment Service.

Gross Total Outturn Expenditure for all of the above principal expenditure items is £17.6 million.

Non-teaching Staff

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many non-teaching staff were employed by local education authorities in 1997. [30817]

Ms Estelle Morris: At June 1997, there were 271,000 full-time equivalent non-teaching staff employed by local education authorities in England.

Non-teaching staff includes educational support, clerical, school meals and premises related staff employed in schools and colleges, together with central services and administration within the education service. Both manual and non-manual staff are included. Staff employed in grant-maintained schools are excluded. This information comes from the Joint Staffing Watch Survey carried out by the Local Government Management Board.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30321]

Dr. Howells: The DfEE is reviewing the use of all its assets, including identifying assets which are surplus to requirements, as part of its Departmental Spending Review which will be completed this summer. The properties in the following table have already been identified as surplus to requirements. It is not possible to give an estimate of their value as this will depend on the circumstances of their disposal. For accounting purposes, surplus assets will be valued in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Resource Accounting Manual.

National Child Care Strategy

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he has taken towards developing a national child care strategy. [29094]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has consulted widely, and co-hosted a conference on 19 January with the Minister for Women, my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock), at which we met with child care experts to hear their views on key aspects of the Strategy. My right hon. Friend Secretary of State has set up a child care unit within the Department to draw up, in liaison with Departments across Whitehall, a national child care strategy consultation document which we plan to issue after the spring budget. After consultation on the document we plan to launch the final strategy later in the year.

We have also developed plans to spend the first tranches of the £300 million child care package announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer last November, and we look forward to early benefits on the ground as some of the funding becomes available in 1998–99. In 1998–99 the £25 million receipts from the Windfall Tax for England will enable us to:

help support new child care provision for children who are four years old and in full time education; boost the provision of child care in FE colleges with a new grant to the Further Education Funding Council; and support activities such as training and information services which will help to develop the infrastructure and capacity of the child care sector to meet the challenge of the huge expansion of out of school child care when lottery funding comes on stream in 1999.

We have made £50 million available to the Out of School Child Care Initiative over the next five years. For 1998–99, this means that funding has more than doubled (from £4.1 million to £10.1 million) and will create 20,000 new places.

Health and Safety

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what responsibilities (a) Ofsted, (b) the Health and Safety Executive, (c) the local education authority and (d) the Secretary of State for Education have to ensure a safe environment for teachers and pupils in nursery schools. [30814]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under health and safety legislation, the employer, which for maintained nursery schools is the local education authority, is legally responsible for health and safety and must ensure that the school has policies and procedures in place. Ofsted inspectors evaluate and report on schools' policy and procedures, including health and safety. Ofsted's inspectors also evaluate and report on the extent to which the arrangements for the induction, appraisal and professional development of staff in schools contribute to their effectiveness. The Health and Safety Executive are responsible for enforcing the legislation. The Department provides health and safety guidance to schools and LEAs where necessary and has statutory responsibility for regulations on building safety standards.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the guidelines governing safety of children at nursery schools. [30812]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department is responsible for the maintained nursery school sector. We have issued guidelines on recommended adult: child supervision in maintained nursery schools. We have also issued health and safety guidance on a range of issues to schools and local education authorities. Although this is not aimed specifically at nursery schools, they may adopt the guidance, as the same safety principles often apply. We have not assessed the take up by nursery schools.

The Department and the Department of Health will be consulting shortly on the regulation of early education and day care with the aim of creating a more uniform regime.

Questions on private and voluntary nursery providers are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve training in health and safety best practice for nursery teachers and administrators. [30813]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under health and safety legislation, the employer has responsibility for ensuring that employees are aware of health and safety issues and are trained to carry out their health and safety responsibilities effectively. In all primary Initial Teacher Training courses, trainee teachers must demonstrate that they understand health and safety legislation, are familiar with subject specific health and safety requirements and can plan lessons to avoid potential hazards.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the penalties available to courts for breach of Health and Safety regulations in nursery schools. [30815]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State and I have been discussing with the Health and Safety Commission what more can be done to secure a more realistic level of penalties for health and safety offences, including any breaches which occur in nursery schools. The Deputy Prime Minister is in correspondence with the Home Secretary and the Lord Chancellor to explore this matter further.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

21. Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency staff in Preston are engaged in administering the family credit scheme. [29096]

Mr. Keith Bradley: On 2 February there were 1,614 staff employed at the Family Credit Unit in Preston. A further 213 Family Credit staff are located at sites in Blackpool.

Lone Parents

22. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what age group of lone parents the new deal for lone parents is targeted at. [29097]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The New Deal for Lone Parents is available to all lone parents of working age, irrespective of age.

Lone parents are one of the key groups the Government aim to help with the welfare to work programme, because they have previously been excluded from the opportunity to work. The New Deal for Lone Parents is designed specifically for lone parents' needs: to tackle the barriers that prevent them from working.

The Government seek to ensure that all people of working age, including lone parents, are not excluded from society as a result of poverty or lack of opportunity for employment. The New Deal for Lone Parents aims to tackle social exclusion by providing lone parents with the same opportunities as everyone else.

26. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents had obtained employment through the new deal for lone parents by 31 January. [29101]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The New Deal for Lone Parents service has been available in eight lead areas around the country since July last year and, up to 31 January, has already helped 1,113 lone parents obtain employment. From April, the service will be available nationwide to all lone parents making a new or repeat claim for Income Support, and it will be extended to all lone parents on Income Support from October.

These early results are very encouraging. There will be independent evaluation of the service, comparing the outcomes for lone parents in the New Deal for Lone Parents areas with those in control areas, which will be available in 1999.

Welfare Reform

23. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from trade unions about the Government's welfare reform proposals. [29098]

Mr. Field: We are committed to reforming the welfare system in consultation with the people. That is why we have announced that we will consult individuals, organisations, including trade unions, and others with an interest before any changes are introduced.

During the pensions review consultation exercise, we received representations from the TUC and 16 trade unions. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and Minister for Pensions has also met trade unions on several occasions as part of this consultation exercise.

We have also received a number of representations on various aspects of welfare reform from individual trade unions.

Absent Fathers

24. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to ensure absent fathers pay proper maintenance for their children. [29099]

31. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to ensure absent fathers support their children. [29106]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they may live. The receipt of regular maintenance is a key part of the Government's strategy for helping lone mothers off Income Support and into work. We are therefore looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made and we expect to bring forward a consultation document on our proposals by the Summer. In the meantime we are directing a further £15 million to the Agency in each of the next two financial years specifically aimed at increasing the amounts of maintenance that are paid.

Long-term Sick and Disabled

25. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's new deal for the long-term sick and disabled. [29100]

Mr. Denham: The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age, and are committed to improving opportunities and incentives for disabled people who want to work. Under the New Deal for people with a disability or long-term illness we have set aside £195 million to finance a range of measures to help those who want to move into or stay in work.

The first strand of the New Deal will involve funding a number of innovative schemes to test ways of helping people who want to work. The bidding process was launched on 9 December and will consist of two tranches.

We have sent over 2,500 bidding packs to interested organisations, and hope to award the first contracts in the Spring.

In developing proposals under the New Deal we are working in partnership with the Department for Education and Employment; with disabled people and the organisations that represent them; and with other interested parties. As a further example of this new approach, over 500 disability and other groups were invited earlier this month to a series of briefings to help bidders under the Innovative Schemes strand with their understanding of the guidance for preparing bids.

Disability Benefits

27. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the progress of the Government's review of disability benefits. [29102]

Mr. Denham: We continue to review sickness and disability benefits as part of our commitment to modernise the Social Security system. No decisions have yet been reached; we will consult disabled people, their organisations and others with an interest before making any changes.

Benefits (Information)

28. Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to ensure that citizens seeking information about benefits are given correct information in leaflets by staff at the offices of relevant agencies. [29103]

Mr. Field: We are building a modern Social Security system, which balances customer rights and responsibilities. That means customers need accurate information at the right time and the right place.

The Benefits Agency produces comprehensive benefits information for customers and their representatives. Leaflets and information are available from all Benefits Agency offices, where other Agencies are often co-located. Customer Representatives are given free access to information from the whole of the Department via the Benefits Agency Publicity Register, which has over 90,000 members.

Benefits Agency staff are fully trained to process, maintain and provide advice on benefits. Initial training is refreshed and updated as changes to both benefit rules and processes occur.

The Benefits Agency is to re-examine its information and publicity material, to ensure it continues to meet customers' information needs.

The Benefits Agency will look to simplify its programme of leaflets and other media, in order to provide better information and allow customers easier access to the benefits system.

The Benefits Agency is working closely with its sister agencies, other government departments, customer representatives and the public in making these improvements.

Teenagers and Pensioners

29. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the average (i) costs to and (ii) income from public funds of (a) a teenager and (b) a pensioner in a household. [29104]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. The average weekly Social Security benefit income for all benefit units (including those who receive no benefit) headed by a teenager is £10 per week, and by a pensioner is £101 per week.

Notes:

(i) A benefit unit headed by a teenager is defined as a single or couple living as married plus any dependent children where the head is aged 16 to 19 inclusive. A pensioner benefit unit is similarly defined and where the head is at least state pension age (65 for men, 60 for women).

(ii) Social Security benefit income includes all income and non-income related benefits and excludes Social Fund loans.

(iii) Figures are based on information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey. The 1995–96 survey is the latest for which data are available.

(iv) The estimates are based on sample counts which have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors which control for region, Council Tax Band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response.

Pension Sharing

30. Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's plans for pension sharing. [29105]

Mr. Denham: Pension sharing will allow for fairer overall financial settlements on divorce. Our Manifesto committed us to introducing pension sharing for divorcing couples and we aim to do so from April 2000. We are working through the detailed issues and implementation arrangements with a panel of representatives of the pensions industry, family lawyers and others, and plan to publish draft legislation for consultation during this Parliamentary session. This is an important first step in the modernisation of the pension system to enable more people, mainly women, to secure an adequate income in retirement.

Occupational Pensions

32. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she has taken to support and strengthen the framework for occupational pensions. [29108]

Mr. Denham: We fully recognise and support the important role that occupational pension schemes have and play.

As we made clear when we launched our wide ranging Pensions Review on the 17 July 1997, we will also build on the good quality second pensions that many employees enjoy by supporting and strengthening the existing framework of occupational pension provision where that is necessary. That is why we are consulting those who run and advise pension schemes about the effectiveness of the provisions introduced by the Pensions Act 1995. We will then consider what can be done to remove unnecessary burdens and complexity whilst making sure that the security of members rights is paramount. And we are working on our own plans for a Quality Award scheme to reward high standards and set a benchmark against which employers, employees and trustees could measure their own scheme.

The Pensions Review produced over 2,000 responses which we are currently considering. We have also made clear our intention to introduce stakeholder pensions, which will extend the opportunity for good funded pension provision to many people who cannot join an occupational pension scheme.

Housing Benefit

33. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment the social security review team has made of evidence on the interaction between housing benefit and incentives to work. [29109]

Mr. Field: The Government firmly believe that work is the best form of welfare. The Housing Comprehensive Spending Review is appraising the interaction between Housing Benefit and incentives to work and is considering a number of ideas. The Comprehensive Reviews will report in the Summer.

Taxation and Social Security Benefits

34. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions she has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer about the interaction of the taxation and social security benefit systems. [29110]

Mr. Field: My right hon Friend the Secretary of State and I meet regularly with my right hon Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss tax-benefit reform issues. We are working closely together on details of the proposed Working Family Tax Credit. The Chancellor will make an announcement in his Spring Budget.

Benefit Levels (London)

35. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment is made of the minimum level of weekly disposable income required by (a) a single adult resident in London aged between 25 and 50 years, (b) a married couple resident in London aged between 50 and 60 years and (c) a single pensioner living in London aged between 65 and 70 years, in determining benefit levels. [29111]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There is no objective way of deciding what are adequate benefit rates. Levels of benefit need to take account of the competing demands on public expenditure and work incentives. Premiums are added to Income Support payments to take account of the particular needs of specific groups. Income Support is not intended to replace a decent pension or a good job.

State Pensions

36. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to revise the basis of the calculation for the setting of state pension levels. [29112]

Mr. Denham: As we said in our manifesto the basic State pension will be retained as the foundation of pension provision in retirement and be increased at least in line with prices. We are considering the basic pension, including its value, as part of our pensions review.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people she estimates are fraudulently claiming disability living allowance; and if she will make a statement. [29075]

Mr. Denham: We are currently examining the estimates of fraud made by the previous Administration, in the light of further analysis of the findings of the on-going programme of benefits reviews.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to complete her review of the Child Support Agency. [29093]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We aim to bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals by the Summer.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many deductions from earnings orders issued by the CSA are currently in force; what is the number of accounts with live assessments with arrears; and if she will include this information in the CSA statistical information which is placed in the Library; [30119]

(2) how many deductions from earnings orders issued by the CSA have been appealed to the magistrates and sheriff courts; and how many of these appeals have been successful. [30120]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they may live.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 23 February 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency deductions from earnings orders and cases with arrears.

The imposition of a deduction from earnings order is considered when the absent parent defaults on an agreement or refuses to come to an agreement. This step is taken as a last resort and every effort is made to secure the compliance of the absent parent before a deduction from earnings order is issued. From April 1998 to 30 November 1997 the number of deduction from earnings orders issued are as follows:

1997–98 (to 30.11.97): 45,273.

We are increasingly becoming more effective in issuing deduction from earnings orders where the absent parent fails to make a maintenance payment or reach an agreement for repayment.

Information on the number of appeals against deductions from earnings orders is only available from April 1996, as are the number of successful appeals to Magistrate and Sheriff courts. From April 1996 to November 1997, of 103,171 deductions from earnings orders issued, 330 appeals were received 138 of which were successful.

You have also asked for details of accounts with live assessments with arrears and details are available from the Agency's Financial Management System. These can be split into those cases with full maintenance assessments and those with interim maintenance assessments. As at 31st January 1998, 286,437 cases with full maintenance assessments had arrears and 65,182 cases with interim maintenance assessments had arrears.

The House of Commons Library Report is intended to provide information on the performance of those activities which are considered key to the operation of the Agency. There are no plans at present to include further information.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number of cases awaiting periodical review, change of circumstances review and second tier review at (a) 31 March (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997 and (b) 30 December 1997. [30124]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the Chief Executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 20 February 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question about Child Support Agency assessment reviews.

The number of review cases outstanding at each of the points in time requested in your question are shown in the table attached. For each category I have also provided details of the number of cases cleared at each of the points in time.

Although the volume of work outstanding for review cases does not appear to have reduced significantly over the time period in question, the clearance figures show the improvement in the Agency's performance over the years, and we are now keeping abreast of new work.

The Agency's performance has improved considerably since 1994/5, but we still have some way to go before customer service is at an acceptable level. Furthermore, the Agency expects its liveload to more than doube to around 1.2 million by the end of 2003/2004. The Agency, therefore, needs to make the most of its resources to meet this challenge.

I hope this is helpful.

Family-friendly Employment Policies

37. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Ministers for Women have to promote family-friendly employment policies. [29113]

Ms Ruddock: The Ministers for Women are working closely with colleagues across Government to develop family-friendly employment policies in order to support family life, welfare to work objectives and social inclusion, fairness and equality of opportunity as well as to support competitiveness within industry.

The Government are looking at ways to encourage employers to consider the benefits of family friendly employment practices which will include flexible working practices, as well as part-time or flexible hours, job sharing, term-time working, working from home and career breaks. Such arrangements can help parents, particularly mothers, balance work and family commitments and directly affect their ability to take up offers of employment.

To take this forward the Government will be implementing various European Directives as well as working closely with all employers, large and small.

Cash Limits

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on changes in the (a) cash limits and (b) running costs limit of her Department for 1997–98. [30382]

Mr. Field: Subject to the Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for Class XII, Vote 2 will be decreased by £6,313,300 from £462,105,000 to £455,791,700. The cash limit of Class XII, Vote 3 will be increased by £314,536,000 from £2,035,828,000 to £2,350,364,000.

The main reason for the revision to Vote 2 is to provide for payments totalling £190 million to be made from the Social Fund in respect of the Winter Fuel Bonus announced by the Chancellor in his Pre-Budget statement of 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 779-80.

Smaller increases are also sought: £77,066,000 for payments into the National Insurance Fund due to an increase in the Government Actuary's assessment of expenditure on Statutory Sick Pay and Statutory Maternity Pay and amount owed in respect of the National Insurance Surcharge Account; £32,000,000 for Rent Rebate Subsidies due to higher costs than previously estimated on this one element of benefit expenditure; £270,000 for the grant in aid to Motability towards additional equipment fund costs; £1,700 for the grant in aid to the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association (BLESMA).

The Estimate also takes account of the improved performance of the economy which has resulted in falling unemployment, and which in turn has reduced the take up of benefits compared with what was expected at the time the Main Estimate provision was approved. The specific decreases are: £104,170,000 on sums payable to the National Insurance Fund due to a decrease in the Government Actuary's assessment of the expenditure on the National Insurance Contribution Holiday Scheme and Treasury Grant; £90,000,000 for Rent Allowance and £90,000,000 for Council Tax Benefit subsidies due to lower final claims and benefit costs than previously estimated; £8,000,000 for Rent Rebates subsidies payable to New Towns due to lower benefit costs than previously estimated; £3,000,000 on Social fund expenditure due to improved Social Fund loan recoveries which allows the planned level of gross funding to be delivered with a reduced net budget; £2,000,000 due to a reduction in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit administration costs and £1,000,000 for discretionary Rent Allowance to reflect the policy decision not to extend the Single Room Rent to those aged 25 to 59 and £585,000 being transferred to the Department of Social Security administration Vote, Class XII Vote 3.

Vote 3 revisions take account of increased requirements of (£13,264,000 running costs) under the Welfare to Work programme, an increase of £47,999,000 (running costs) towards early retirement costs, comprising £29,500,000 additional funding and £18,499,000 under the end year flexibility scheme as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50), an increase of £3,774,000 (capital) under the capital end year flexibility scheme and an increase of £20,600,000 (running costs) for the administration costs associated with the Winter Fuel Bonus.

Other changes result from a reduction of £4,498,000 (running costs) arising from the recalculation of JSA implementation costs, offset by a corresponding increase on Class IX Vote 3 (Education and Employment), an increase of £514,000 (running costs), offset by a corresponding reduction on Class IX, Vote 1 (Education and Employment), a reduction of £1,017,000 (running costs) for legal aid assessment work, offset by a corresponding increase on Class VIII, Vote 1 (Lord Chancellors' and Law Officers' Departments), a reduction of £300,000 (running costs) for expenses associated with the employment of agency solicitors, offset by a corresponding increase on Class XI, Vote 2 (Department of Health), a reduction of £170,000 (running costs), which represents an aggregate of a number of small transfers, offset by a corresponding increase on Class IX, Vote 3 (Education and Employment), an increase of £70,000 (running costs), offset by a corresponding reduction on Class XI, Vote 1, Class XIII, Vote 4 and Class XIV, Vote 4 and an increase of £585,000 (running costs) offset by a corresponding reduction on Class XII, Vote 2 (Department of Social Security). Further transfers arise from an increase of running cost cover of £160,000 for services provided to Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) and a net reduction of £7,808,000 in running cost provision arising from a higher recovery of deductible VAT on contracted out services.

Cash limit changes arise from a net reduction in capital provision of £1,952,000 and a reduction in Appropriations in Aid of £243,315,000. This arises mainly as a result of an anticipated receipt from the sale of assets now being due in 1998–99.

As a result of these changes the running cost limit of the Department of Social Security (within the control total) will be increased by £56,135,000 from £3,218,908,000 to £3,275,043,000 and the new running cost limit for the Welfare to Work programme (outside the control total) is £13,264,000.

Increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of Public Expenditure.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people, who have been subject to either (a) Benefit Integrity Project postal survey and (b) BIP interviews, have had their disability living allowance stopped; and how many of these have (i) had the decision reviewed, (ii) on review had their disability living allowance restored, (iii) on review had their disability living allowance restored to the previous rate, (iv) had their disability living allowance restored at a higher rate and (v) had their disability living allowance restored at a lower rate; [30003]

(2) what plans she has to institute a programme of sampling decisions taken as part of the Benefit Integrity Project; [30004]

(3) if she will take steps to encourage claimants of disability living allowance who are about to be included within the Benefit Integrity Project to gain access to their initial disability living allowance claim forms. [30002]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write shortly to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 18 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions regarding the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP).

The BIP is looking again at some awards of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) to collect up to date information about the care and mobility needs of some disabled people and to make sure that the correct amount of benefit is being paid.

The total number of enquiries carried out to date by post and interview is contained in the attached tables.

Entitlement to DLA is determined by independent Adjudication Officers (AOs). A statistically valid sample of AO decisions is checked by an independent discrete team who report their findings to Benefits Agency managers and to the Chief Adjudication Officer. This is part of an ongoing process designed to maintain adjudication standards.

Measures are in place for this team to check a statistically valid sample of decisions made by AOs working on BIP cases.

If customers wish to have sight of evidence used to decide entitlement in their current or previous claims they can have copies of this on request. Information about BIP has been publicised through disability organisations, the media and by appearances in the media by Ministers.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Mrs. Carol Preston

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what factors governed the timing of restoring the full disability benefit to Mrs. Carol Preston of Stockport; [30254]

(2) if disciplinary action is to be taken against officials responsible for the original decision to reduce the disability benefits for Mrs. Carol Preston of Stockport; [30255]

(3) what measures she will take to avoid the recurrence of situations similar to that in which Mrs. Carol Preston of Stockport had her benefit reduced. [30258]

Mr. Denham: The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Winnick, dated 19 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about Mrs. Preston of Stockport and her claim for Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

DLA decisions are largely made on the basis of self reporting by the disabled person, that is on the judgment of those best placed to know the practical effects of their disabilities. Entitlement depends not on the fact that a person has a particular disability but on the day to day effects of that condition and the care and mobility needs that arise.

Mrs. Preston's claim was looked at again as part of the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) which is a programme of postal enquiries and home visits to seek up to date information about the care and mobility needs of DLA customers receiving the Higher Rate Mobility Component with either the Middle or Highest Rate Care Component. This sort of enquiry is routine in most benefits. It does not necessarily mean an award will be changed.

As Mrs. Preston was in receipt of the highest rates of both components of DLA a visit was arranged and took place on 27 November 1997, where a questionnaire was completed. The information gathered from the visit was passed to an officer acting on behalf of the Secretary of State who felt that there may have been a relevant change in Mrs. Preston's night time needs which could affect entitlement. The case was subsequently passed to an Adjudication Officer (AO) who made a decision to reduce the entitlement on review.

It is the responsibility of AOs in each individual case to determine awards. Neither Ministers nor departmental officials can alter or influence an AO's decision. The correct procedures have been followed, therefore disciplinary action is inappropriate.

A request for a review of the decision to reduce Mrs. Preston's entitlement to DLA was received on 18 December 1997. In support of the review application, the local CAB provided more detailed information about Mrs. Preston's need for care at night. A different AO, from the one who had decided to reduce Mrs. Preston's benefit, took advice from a Benefits Agency Medical Officer who advised that it was unlikely that Mrs. Preston's needs would have decreased despite what was recorded in the questionnaire completed on 27 November 1997. The AO decided to re-instate benefit from 27 November 1997 on review. On 9 February 1998 Mrs. Preston was notified in person of the revised decision. This step was taken to minimise any delay and anxiety to Mrs. Preston following the further investigation into her case.

There are a number of measures in place to ensure that the decisions made by an AO are of a high standard. AOs can seek the advice of medically qualified personnel who can offer advice. A statistically valid sample of AO decisions is checked by an independent discrete team who report their findings to Benefits Agency managers and to the Chief Adjudication Officer. This is part of an ongoing process designed to maintain adjudication standards. Anyone whose benefit is reduced or disallowed is entitled to request a review by another AO, who will consider all available evidence.

Customers suffering from certain conditions will not be contacted as part of BIP. These include customers suffering from a terminal illness where life expectancy is likely to be under six months, quadriplegics, paraplegics, people who are both deaf and blind, double amputees and those within the definition of severe mental impairment. All efforts are taken to avoid contact in regard to the BIP exercise with customers in these categories.

To improve confidence in decisions on cases made by the BIP, an additional safeguard has been introduced from 9 February 1998. No decision to reduce or remove entitlement as a result of BIP will be taken on the basis of the claimant's statement alone, there will always be additional evidence to support the decision.

Further evidence about a customer's care and mobility needs may include factual medical evidence from a General Practitioner or hospital or other health care professional, a full examination by a qualified medical practitioner or information from carers. The source of the additional evidence will be determined by the officer acting on behalf of the Secretary of State in the light of the individual circumstances of the case.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Miss A. Steed

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which officials from the Benefits Agency have seen Miss A. Steed (DB502640) to assess in person the need for her to have the renewal of her motability scheme; and if she will make a statement; [30251]

(2) how many officials were involved in the decision to end the motability scheme originally awarded to Miss A. Steed because of the severe disability of her young daughter (ref: DB502640); [30252]

(3) what consideration was given to the applicant's bringing up a severely disabled child in determining the application by Miss A. Steed (ref: DB502640) for a renewal of the motability scheme; [30253]

(4) what factors led to the decision that Miss A. Steed (ref: DB502640) should no longer be able to lease a car under the motability scheme. [30256]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Winnick, dated 19 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about Miss A. Steed (DB502640).

Motability is an independent body which helps recipients of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) higher rate mobility component to use their benefit to obtain a car on the best possible terms, either on lease, or through a hire purchase agreement. It is a requirement of the Motability Scheme that a disabled person or their representative/appointee who wishes to obtain a car, must have an award of higher rate mobility component that will run throughout the period of the leasing or hire purchase agreement.

I would point out that the Adjudication authorities award DLA higher rate mobility component on the basis of whether the customer satisfies the medical conditions for the benefit. This principle equally applies to the duration of an award of DLA and the adjudicating authorities are not influenced by external factors, such as the qualifying conditions for entering into a Motability agreement.

As the Motability Scheme is an independent body, the Benefits Agency would not have seen Miss A. Steed to assess the renewal of the Motability Scheme or the decision to end the Motability Scheme. The Department is not directly involved in operational issues concerning the Motability Scheme.

If a review is requested within three months of the Adjudication Officer's decision being notified the decision can be reviewed on any grounds. If the review request is received outside the three months period a review can only take place on limited grounds, such as the decision being erroneous in law, based on a mistake, given in ignorance of a material fact or a relevant change in circumstances. Miss A. Steed asked for a review of her daughter's entitlement in April 1997 on the grounds that she wished to enter into a further agreement with Motability. Her daughter's case was passed to another Adjudication Officer who could not find any grounds to review the previous award.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the properties and land owned by her Department which she has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30322]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Final decisions on surplus properties and land have been taken only on three Benefits Agency outlets: Bishopsgate House in Manchester and the Todmorden and Eccles offices. These were closed in March 1997 with services provided through alternative outlets. Information about the estimated value of surplus properties and land is commercially confidential and has therefore not been included.

We are continually planning for the renewal and transformation of our estate, testing proposals against the following criteria:

wider access to our services for customers;

improved quality, accuracy and security of service;

achieving a fair balance between the needs of staff, policy and operational needs; increased efficiency and reduced costs.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to allow the disabled to continue to receive benefits when at work, while paying an increased level of tax. [30922]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to modernising the Social Security system so that it helps people to work as far as they are able; provides appropriate support to those who cannot work; and makes the most effective use of the resources available. We want to encourage people who are disabled, or who have long-term health problems, to play a full part in society and to help them to help themselves wherever that is possible. This means being positive about people's abilities and their capacity, rather than negative about their disabilities and incapacity.

The main benefit available to contribute to the extra costs of disability for disabled people of working age, whether or not in work, is Disability Living Allowance.

No decisions have been made about any changes to benefits for disabled persons. When we have identified specific proposals we will consult disabled people, their organisations and others with an interest. We will not make any changes without consulting on them.

Child Support

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans she has to cap the amount of benefit money the State can recover from absent parents; [30921]

(2) what plans she has to seek to amend the Child Support Act 1995 in order to protect voluntary agreements between separated parents; [30920]

(3) what consultations she is planning as part of her review of the Child Support Act; when she expects the review to be completed; and if she will publish the evidence submitted to the review. [30985]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they may live. Where benefit is not in payment it is already open to parents to make voluntary financial arrangements for their children. The Child Support Agency will become involved only where one or both parents so wish.

We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made and we expect to bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals by the Summer.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the advertising contracts her Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30719]

Mr. Field: The information is as follows:

Headquarters

There have been two advertising contracts awarded by the Department since May 1997 which are for the following advertising campaigns:

Campaign	Value	Number of companies tendered
Winter Fuel Payments	£1,325,000	Single company BMP DDB No other companies were invited to tender
Business Anti-Fraud Hotline	£370,000	Single company BMP DDB No other companies were invited to tender

The Central Office of Information (COI) ensures that current EC/GATT legislation, on tendering public service contracts, has been met.

To comply with the EU directive on tendering, COI runs EU wide tenders by placing an Invitation to Tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities. Tendering agencies who meet the criteria are then given approved status and a framework agreement is established. BMP DDB have this status.

Benefits Agency

Have not awarded any advertising contracts since May 1997.

Child Support Agency

Campaign	Value	Number of companies tendered
Information on leaflets etc.	£17,000	Single company London Leisure Publishing Ltd.

This was a single tender contract because the company is the only one to provide this service. Their newspaper "Time for Change" is issued free at all Jobcentres.

Contributions Agency

No advertising contracts since May 1997.

War Pensions Agency

No advertising contracts since May 1997.

Carers

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the proportion and number of (a) full-time and (b) part-time carers who are aged (i) 24 years and under, (ii) 25 to 44 years, (iii) 45 years to the state pension age and (iv) over the state pension age. [24863]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

We collect information on informal carers via questions in the General Household Survey. The latest set of available data relates to the period from April 1990 to March 1991. The age group of the carer and the amount of time spent caring was collected but not information on whether the carer was full or part time. The table shows, for Great Britain 1990, the percentage and estimated number of carers in each age group caring for less than 20 hours a week and those caring for 20 hours or more per week.

Carers by age group and hours spent caring, Great Britain, 1990

	Carers caring for less than 20 hours per week		Carers caring for 20 hours or more per week
Age group	Percentage	Number (millions)	Percentage	Number (millions)
16–24	8	0.4	6	0.1
35–44	35	1.8	22	0.3
45-state pension age	40	2.1	40	0.6
Over state pension age	18	1.0	32	0.5
All ages (16 and over)	100	5.3	100	1.6

General Household Survey 1990; population estimates. Figures are rounded.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the proportion and number of the population of working age who are (a) full-time carers and (b) part-time carers. [24846]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

We collect information on informal carers via questions in the General Household Survey. Based on the latest set of available data, which relates to the period April 1990 to March 1991, it is estimated that around 16 per cent. of the Great Britain population of working age were carers at that time—approximately 5.5 million people.

Information from the survey on the amount of time spent caring did not specify full time or part time. Estimates based on the survey show that around 1 million adults of working age in Great Britain were spending 20 hours or more each week on caring activities. This represents around one fifth of all adult carers of working age.

Social Fund Loans

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the maximum value of a loan available under the Social Fund for the purchase of (a) kitchen units, (b) carpets, (c) curtains, (d) a bed and (e) a dining table. [30790]

Mr. Denham: There is no specified maximum value for any individual item for which a budgeting or crisis loan may be given. All awards from the Social Fund are decided in accordance with Social Fund Guidance and Directions, issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Tuesday 24 February 1998

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Anti-Drugs Coordinator

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council what are the costs of the (a) salaries, (b) other personal expenses and (c) offices for the United Kingdom Anti-Drug Coordinator and his Deputy. [30990]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator, his Deputy and their personal assistant are based alongside the Central Drugs Coordination Unit in the Privy Council Office. The total budget for the CDCU in 1998–99 will be £553,000. This includes £102,471 for the UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator's salary, £45,000 for his Deputy's salary, and their pension contributions (16 per cent. of salaries). The remainder of the budget covers the salaries of their personal assistant (£17,219) and CDCU officials, accommodation and IT costs and travel and subsistence. It is not possible to specify the proportion of office costs which relate to the Coordinator and his Deputy, or to predict the precise extent of claims for travel and subsistence which may be made.

TREASURY

Official Residence

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount spent by Government on the refurbishment of No. 11 Downing Street in each year since 1989. [26932]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Prime Minister's answer to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 66.

Ministerial Directorship

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 134, what was the last date after 1 May 1997 on which a Minister in his Department resigned a company directorship; who was the relevant Minister; and if he will make a statement. [29598]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 16 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 134.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which projects involving public investment of over £1,000,000 have received capital finance from the European Investment Bank; and for each project, if that investment is taken into account in calculations made (a) by Her Majesty's Government and (b) the European Commission, for national borrowing levels in respect of the criteria for qualification for membership of stage three of monetary union. [30175]

Mrs. Liddell: The information sought about UK projects financed by the EIB could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Capital expenditure by general government is treated as a determinant of the general government financial deficit, including capital expenditure financed by EIB loans.

Housing (VAT Rates)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has received from the European Commission as to which Government housing policy measures qualify for a lower rate of VAT because they are defined as the supply, construction, renovation and altering of housing as part of social policy under Annex H of the Sixth VAT Directive. [30265]

Dawn Primarolo: The Commission's view is that a reduced rate provided under this category could be applied only narrowly, and should be specifically targeted to benefit the less well off.

Public Borrowing Targets

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence and analysis underlay his consent for the percentage public borrowing targets placed on members of the European Union. [30561]

Mrs. Liddell: Percentage targets for public borrowing by the Member States of the European Union were established in Article 104c and Protocol No. 5 of the Maastricht Treaty.

Retirement Relief

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of retirement relief, in terms of lost capital gains tax receipts in 1996–97; and if he will estimate the net effect of (a) doubling and (b) halving the relief bands in the same year. [29720]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 19 February 1998]: Under current rules for capital gains tax retirement relief, full relief is available for the first £250,000 of gains, and half relief on gains between £250,000 and £1,000,000. The estimated costs of retirement relief for 1996–97 with these thresholds and with thresholds at (a) double and (b) half these levels are given in the table. The estimated costs of relief for the alternative thresholds take no account of any changes in taxpayer behaviour which might have occurred if those thresholds had applied for 1996–97.

Capital gains tax
Cost of retirement relief for 1996–97

£ million

Thresholds	Cost of relief
As set for 1996–97 (£250,000 and £1 million)	120
Double the level for 1996–97 (£500,000 and £2 million)	135
Half the level for 1996–97 (£125,000 and £500,000)	100

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30710]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Treasury has not awarded any advertising contracts since 1 May 1997.

Universal Benefit

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his Department's definition is of a universal benefit; and if that definition covers a benefit which is taxed or means-tested. [30608]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 23 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), on 19 February 1998, Official Report, column 86.

Nursery Schools (Deaths)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children have died at nursery schools in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will provide statistics for each region. [30811]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Lindsay Hoyle, dated 24 February 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on deaths at nursery schools.

In England and Wales for 1993–1996, the latest years for which data are available, there were no deaths registered to children aged 3–5 inclusive where place of death was recorded as nursery school.

In Scotland for 1996 there were no deaths registered to children aged 3–5 inclusive where place of death was recorded as nursery school.

Data for England and Wales for 1992, Scotland for 1992–95 and Northern Ireland for 1992–1996 could only be made available at disproportionate cost.

Statistics

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Government's plans in respect of statistics. [31449]

Mrs. Liddell: The public, Parliament and government need statistics they can trust. Official statistics commanding confidence are essential to good public management and are the factual cornerstone of democracy. Accordingly, the Government are today publishing a Green Paper, "Statistics: A Matter of Trust", to open up debate on the best arrangements for ensuring high quality statistics, driven by the requirements of all users, efficiently produced, and compiled and presented free from political interference. This is yet another stage in the Government's progress towards a more open, fair and modern democracy.

Arrangements are in place to engage in the debate those known to have a close interest in statistics. But views generally will be welcome. The consultation period extends until 31 May 1998. A decision on the way forward will be made as soon as possible after that date.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) he and (b) other Ministers within his Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23762]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 19 January 1998]: None.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26659]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The estimated costs for both the former Departments of the Environment and Transport and the merged Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions are as follows:

	DOE	DOT	DETR	Total
1995–96	105,237	86,371	—	191,608
1996–97	120,131	57,801	—	177,932
1997–98 to 31 January	14,937	—	124,115	139,052

In the case of the former Department of Transport these figures also include an element for travel within the UK.

The Department of the Environment figures for 1997–98 cover the period of one month from 1 April until the election when £14,937 overseas expenditure was incurred by ministers in the previous Government. The remaining amount relates to travel costs of this Government to 31 January.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27805]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Total Spend by my Department, its agencies and its non-departmental public bodies for the period 1 May 1997 to 31 January 1998 is as follows:

Department	260
NDPBs	411

The classification of hospitality expenditure in some cases differs between the Department, its Agencies and NDPBs, so the figures may not be directly comparable.

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27804]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 15 February 1998]: I have today placed the information requested in the Library.

Oil Spills

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has issued on methods of aerial spraying to be used following oil spills; and what reports his Department has received in the last two years on the effectiveness of methods of tackling oil spills. [30284]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Marine Pollution Control Unit (MPCU) of my Department's Coastguard Agency is responsible for the Government's response to oil spills. The MPCU receive few requests for advice on this method of combating marine oil spills, but when it does it makes reference to:

(a) "IMO/UNEP Guidelines on Oil Spill Dispersant Application" published by the International Maritime Organisation (IMO-575E).

(b) Advice on the use of dispersants in the UK is contained in the MAFF booklet. "The approval and use of Oil Dispersants in the UK".

(c) The International Petroleum Industry Environmental Conservation Association have also produced a document "Dispersants and their role in oil spill response".

The Government last reviewed the use of oil dispersants in 1995. The final report of the review, published by MAFF in January 1996, concluded that "Retaining oil dispersants as a means of dealing with spilt oil when economic and environmental resources are at risk is fully justified."

The recently published report by the Sea Empress Environmental Evaluation Committee "The Environmental Impact of the Sea Empress Oil Spill" (ISBN 0–11–702156–3) published by the Stationery Office, assessed the effectiveness of the clean-up in Pembrokeshire. This assessment looked at all aspects of the clean-up in detail. The general conclusions found that the clean-up was well managed and that the use of aerial spraying of dispersants considerably reduced the quantity of oil impacting the shoreline and will have had significant environmental benefits.

Planning and Water Directorates

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision he has made within his Department for liaison between the planning and water directorates. [30598]

Mr. Raynsford: Officials of the two Directorates liaise as necessary over matters of common interest.

House Building

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the rate of house building in (a) Scotland, (b) East Anglia and (c) Cornwall. [30597]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department and the Scottish Office monitor housebuilding activity in England and Scotland respectively. They collect information from local authorities about house building in their area, and in the case of England, this is supplemented with information from the National House Building Council. Recent figures for the three areas are shown in the table.

Housing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the private finance that would be available for public sector housing if local housing authorities were to transfer their housing to public corporations. [30552]

Mr. Raynsford: No such estimate has been made. We shall be looking at the implications of housing corporations as part of our comprehensive review of housing policy.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has issued to local housing authorities regarding the formation of local housing companies. [30553]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has not issued any guidance specifically on local housing companies (LHCs). Guidance on the formation of LHCs is contained in the Housing Corporation's booklet: Guidance for applicants seeking to become registered social landlords: general applicants. A separate version is available for applicants undertaking a stock transfer. My Department has also assisted the Chartered Institute of Housing in preparing their good practice guide on LHCs.

New Drivers

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to change the qualifying age for taking a driving test; [30526]

(2) what plans he has to restrict the speed limit for newly qualified drivers. [30549]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have at present no plans to change the qualifying age for taking a driving test, or to restrict the speed limit for newly qualified drivers. However, we are developing a new long term strategy for road safety to achieve further casualty reductions by the year 2010 and in that context will be considering further measures aimed at reducing the current high level of accidents involving novice drivers.

Fluoride

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those areas in the United Kingdom where fluoride in water occurs naturally. [30557]

Mr. Meacher: Fluoride occurs naturally in various parts of England and Wales. A map showing these areas has been placed in the Library.

Information about Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Maritime Rescue

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current staffing level at each of the maritime rescue sub-centres. [30500]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total cost (a) including and (b) excluding staffing costs of operating each of the maritime rescue sub-centres in 1996–97. [30499]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is detailed in the table.

Electricity Pylons

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to require the removal of pylons and transmission lines which no longer carry electricity. [30556]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning permission for all but the most minor overhead lines is granted by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. It is frequently a condition of such a permission that the apparatus is removed if no longer needed. Where such a condition has not been attached and there is an affect on amenity, a local planning authority has powers to serve a notice under section 215 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requiring removal. Such notices may be enforced by, or appealed against to a Magistrate's Court and do not concern the Secretary of State.

Waste Management

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what role he proposes for the regional Development Agencies in the strategic planning of waste management. [30575]

Mr. Caborn: Regional Development Agencies will not have waste management functions. Waste management will remain the responsibility of local authorities in their areas except that, in London, the Government have proposed that the Greater London Authority should have a role in drawing up a London-wide integrated municipal waste management strategy.

Minerals Conference

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what sum his Department has provided to help fund the Minerals '98 Conference; and on what basis this money was provided. [30604]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 23 February 1998]: No money has yet been paid by the Department. However, a contribution of £8,000 from the industry sponsorship budget towards the costs developing a manual to be used by quarry operators to strengthen links between individual sites and local communities is under consideration.

Olympic Airways

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the safety of aircraft operated by Olympic Airways; and if the CAA have implemented increased safety oversight checks in response to press reports in the Greek media. [31206]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Safety oversight of Olympic Airways is the responsibility of the Greek Civil Aviation Authority. We are not aware of any reports in the Greek media or elsewhere which suggest that either the Greek CAA or Olympic Airways are not complying with the minimum safety standards set by the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Toxic Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reviews are being, or have recently been, conducted governing the adequacy of the safety arrangements for the import and export of dangerous and toxic substances (a) by air, (b) by ship and (c) via the Channel Tunnel. [31023]

Ms Glenda Jackson: (a) United Kingdom legislation requires dangerous goods (which include toxic substances) carried by air to be in compliance with the International Civil Aviation Organization's Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air. These Instructions are subject to a biennial review and amendment cycle, and the United Kingdom provides a member for the Panel which carries this out. The Civil Aviation Authority is satisfied that there are adequate and up-to-date safety arrangements in place for all dangerous goods carried by air.

(b) The carriage of dangerous goods by sea is governed by the International Maritime Dangerous Goods (IMDG) Code, which like the air regulations applies world wide. Its provisions have proved adequate for the safety of dangerous goods exported and imported to and from the United Kingdom. The Code is revised biennially on the basis of proposals presented at meetings of the International Maritime Organisation in London, and the United Kingdom plays an active role in these proceedings. It is implemented into United Kingdom regulations, the last revision of which came into force on 1 November 1997.

(c) Dangerous goods are carried through the Channel Tunnel in accordance with Eurotunnel's arrangements, which were approved in 1994 by the UK/France Intergovernmental Commission, on the advice of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority. These apply a number of restrictions additional to those already applicable to road and rail carriage which limit both the types and the quantities of dangerous goods that are permitted. These arrangements were reviewed after the fire in the Channel Tunnel on 18 November 1996 and as a result further restrictions were introduced in June 1997, when the suspended HGV shuttle services resumed.

Strategic Environmental Assessment

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 318, to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor), on strategic environmental assessment, for what reason the Government have decided not to put the proposed Directive to the Council of Ministers. [30804]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government support the principle of strategic environmental assessment, but we are not convinced that the proposed Directive is the best way to ensure that environmental concerns are integrated into Member States' different strategic decision making processes. A number of other Member States share our concerns over the scope and practicality of the proposal, and those whose Presidencies will follow ours have indicated that they would not continue any negotiations which we might begin. We have a full and well balanced environment programme for the Presidency, and we would rather devote our resources to matters where real progress can be achieved.

Wild Bees

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the potential impact on the wild bee population of the introduction of transgenic insect resistant plants; and if he will make a statement. [30803]

Mr. Meacher: The importance of bees in the pollination of crops is taken into consideration in the review of all applications to release genetically modified plants. The risks that crops genetically modified for insect resistance pose to non-target beneficial species such as bees will depend on the crop plant and the genes for insect resistance which are introduced. To affect bees the inserted insect resistance genes must be expressed in the plant's pollen. To date, no applications have been submitted for the release of such plants in the United Kingdom. My Department let a contract to IACR Rothamsted in October 1996 to investigate the effects of insect resistant GM crops on non-target insects. This research is investigating the interactions between insect resistant GM oilseed rape and commonly associated insect species under carefully controlled conditions. The results of this research will be published on completion of the project in 1999.

Council Houses (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money will be made available to Chelmsford Borough Council in 1998–99 for the receipts from sale of council houses; and if he will make a statement. [31059]

Mr. Raynsford: Under the Capital Receipts Initiative, we intend to issue to Chelmsford Borough Council a supplementary credit approval of £1.241 million in respect of 1998–99. These additional resources will be used to increase expenditure on housing and housing-related regeneration.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many site inspections were made by Health and Safety Executive factory inspectors in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97. [30959]

Mr. Meacher: The number of site inspections carried out by inspectors in HSE's Field Operations Directorate in each of the years specified was:

Year	Number of site inspections
1993–94	152,014.00
1994–95	142,132.00
1995–96	120,080.00

In 1996–97 another 3,425 inspections were completed by inspectors in HSE's newly-created Chemical and Hazardous Installations Division (CHID). In the years 1993–94 to 1995–96 most of CHID's field inspectors had worked in and contributed to the outputs of the Field Operations Directorate.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of major injuries were investigated by the Health and Safety Executive in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97. [30962]

Mr. Meacher: The percentage of major injuries investigated by the Health and Safety Executive's Field Operations Directorate is set out in the table.

Year	Percentage of major injuries investigated
1993–94	15.40
1994–95	15.30
1995–96	12.20
1996–97[1]	4.30

Changes in the definition of a major injury under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 mean that direct comparisons between 1996–97 and earlier years cannot be made. Many injuries which would have been over-3-day injuries under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 are now classed as major injuries.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Health and Safety Executive inspectors were employed in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97; and how many are currently employed. [30960]

Mr. Meacher: The following table shows the number of inspectors, employed by the Health and Safety Executive.

Year (1 April)	Inspectors
1993	1532.00
1994	1572.50
1995	1477.60
1996	1466.00
1997	1442.20
1 February 1998	1445.50

Figures given are full-time equivalent counts: part-time staff were counted as half units until 1 April 1995; since then they are counted on the basis of the proportion of a full week that they work.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of notified asbestos removal operations were inspected by the Health and Safety Executive in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97. [30963]

Mr. Meacher: The information requested is not collated and kept centrally by the Health and Safety Executive. However, from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 HSE visited 9 per cent. of all notifications required under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983.

The corresponding figures from 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997 HSE's Regions were:

Scotland: 9 per cent.

Yorkshire and North East: 7 per cent.

North West: approximately 12 per cent.

Midlands: 6 per cent.

Wales and West: approximately 10 per cent.

Home Counties: approximately 10 per cent.

London and South East: 5 per cent.

Asbestos

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Health and Safety Executive is taking to ensure that best practice is applied by local authorities to manage the risk of asbestos to their building and maintenance workers; and what plans he has to make it a duty for owners to survey and identify asbestos in their property. [30964]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Executive has issued advice and guidance on best practice for all employers, including Local Authorities, who have responsibilities for workplace buildings which may contain asbestos. Its publication 'Managing Asbestos in Workplace Buildings', has featured prominently in publicity and enforcement campaigns.

This Government are firmly committed to ensuring that the risks arising from exposure to asbestos are further controlled. I have asked the Health and Safety Commission to develop proposals of principle to strengthen legislation. These proposals will include duties to manage the risks from asbestos taking all reasonable steps to identify and record its location within the property.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) his Department are taking to challenge the decision of the EU Technical Committee on 11 February that white asbestos poses no greater risk than the substitutes replacing it. [30965]

Mr. Meacher: The interim opinion by a European Commission scientific committee on the safety of substitutes for white asbestos raised questions about the strength of evidence presented to it. The Committee has not, however, reached any firm conclusions. It has asked for more or better evidence. The Health and Safety Executive is actively reviewing how such evidence can be put before this Committee. The Government continue to give high priority to pressing for EU action on dealing with the asbestos problem overall.

Health and Safety (Prosecutions)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions resulting from a failure to comply with Health and Safety legislation were made in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97; and what was the average level of the fines imposed. [30961]

Mr. Meacher: The number of health and safety prosecutions (offences prosecuted) by the Health and Safety Executive and local authorities, and the average levels of fine imposed, in the years 1993–94 to 1996–97 were as follows:

Health and Safety Executive prosecutions	Total offences prosecuted[1]	Of which, offences leading to conviction	Total fines imposed £	Average fine per conviction £[2]
1993–94	1,793	1,507	4,675,716	3,103
1995–96	1,767	1,451	3,731,368	2,572

[1] Each offence prosecuted represents one information laid or, in Scotland, charge preferred. Informations laid or charges preferred are the first step in prosecution. They are a statement of the offence that is alleged to have been committed—each information or charge relates to a single offence.

[2] Figures for average penalty are in current price terms and not adjusted for inflation.

[3] Figures are drawn from returns which have been supplied by more than 90 per cent. of local authorities in Great Britain.

Agenda 21

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what monitoring is being undertaken of Local Agenda 21 proposals on sustainability; and what account of these is being taken by his Department in formulating policy. [30769]

Angela Eagle: The Local Government Management Board (LGMB) monitors progress by local authorities in adopting and implementing Local Agenda 21 strategies. In June 1997, the LGMB published "Local Agenda 21 in the UK—the first five years" reviewing progress made by local authorities since the Rio 'Earth Summit' in 1992. This showed that 70 per cent. of local authorities had made a commitment to Local Agenda 21, and that about 55 per cent. were putting strategies in place. At the United Nations General Assembly Special Assembly in June 1997, the Prime Minister called on all UK local authorities to adopt Local Agenda 21 strategies by the year 2000.

On 14 January 1998, the Deputy Prime Minister launched guidance produced jointly by the Department of the Environment, Transport and Regions, the Local Government Association (LGA) and the LGMB, "Sustainable Local Communities for the 21st Century", to encourage the remaining local authorities to make such a commitment. The LGMB and LGA will be supporting all local authorities in their Local Agenda 21 work, and providing further guidance and advice. The LGMB will be surveying all local authorities again in April 1998 to ascertain the progress each has made on Local Agenda 21 and to identify areas where further support is required.

On 4 February 1998, the Government launched their consultation paper "Opportunities for Change" on the review of the UK Sustainable Development Strategy. Local authorities, and the local people involved in their Local Agenda 21 processes, will provide a key input to the consultation process.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has held with the Borough of Islington concerning housing needs and the disbursement of capital receipts; and if he will make a statement. [30771]

Mr. Raynsford: Officials from the Government Office for London meet those from the Borough's Housing Department throughout the year to discuss priority needs, the Borough's responses to those needs, and to explore ways of contributing through my Department's capital programmes including the Capital Receipts Initiative. The most recent contacts have been as part of the annual Housing Investment Programme round, during which the Borough's housing strategy for the next three years was discussed.

Bull Bars

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his proposals to control the use of bull bars. [30989]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Given the lack of progress of European proposals to control aggressive bull bars, we issued a consultation document in October last year which sought views on a range of possible options for tackling bull bars at a national level. This consultation ended on 31 December and we are now carefully considering the responses received and analysing the arguments prior to formulating our proposals.

Drug Driving Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his planned roadside drug driving tests detect the presence of (a) Prozac and (b) Benyllin. [30957]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Neither of the devices which are being trialled will detect the presence of Prozac or Benyllin. The purpose of the trials is to assess the robustness and practicability of the devices when used at the roadside—not to test drivers for the presence of drugs.

Dial-a-ride

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial target has been set for the London Dial-a-ride service. [31450]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have set a new financial target for the London Dial-a-ride service for achievement for the financial year 1998–99. The new target will be £10.50 per trip at current 1997–98 prices and will replace the previous target set in 1996.

The new target will be to allow the Dial-a-ride companies sufficient flexibility to provide a wider range of trips and ensure that the grant is spent in a way which improves services for users.

Air Operations of Europe

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when an application was originally received by Air Operations of Europe or its subsidiaries to operate from the United Kingdom; and how many applications have been received over the last 12 months. [31189]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The first application by "Air Operations of Europe" to operate flights out of the UK was on 6 December 1993. No applications have been received since the airline announced its closure on 2 May 1996.

Power Stations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many disused power stations are currently awaiting demolition. [30555]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The Government do not hold figures for the number of power stations awaiting demolition. Owners of disused power stations do not have to apply to my Department or the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for permission to demolish them.

There are 28 power stations which were in operation in 1990 which are no longer in operation. A further seven stations have been affected by partial station closure.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the total number of visitors to the Victoria and Albert Museum for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [29936]

Mr. Fisher: There were 1.53 million visits to the Victoria and Albert Museum (all branches) in 1995/96, and 1.59 million in 1996/97. The estimated number of visits for 1997/98 is 1.45 million.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is implementing to increase access and availability to the United Kingdom's museums and galleries; and if he will make a statement. [29934]

Mr. Fisher: My Department launched a review of access to the national museums and galleries immediately on taking up office.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made an interim statement about this review on 8 December 1997. He also announced the creation by the Heritage Lottery Fund of a new £5 million Museums and Galleries Access Fund, which will be available for touring exhibitions, transport costs, and other audience development approaches to make our great national and regional museums more accessible to more people. He also published a consultation paper inviting views on a code of good practice on access on which views are welcome.

We are giving further thought to access issues as part of our Departmental Spending Review, which is taking a fundamental look at spending priorities across the whole range of my Department's responsibilities. This will be completed this summer, when a further announcement will be made.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what research he is conducting on the effects of admission charges on the overall number of visitors to galleries and museums; and if he will make a statement. [29938]

Mr. Fisher: The effects of admission charges have to some extent already been examined by the recent research carried out for the Museums and Galleries Commission.

The effects of charging on access cannot be viewed in isolation. Other barriers to access such as opening hours, presentation and the cost of travel must be taken into account.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last met the Director of the National Gallery to discuss Government policy towards free admissions; and if he will make a statement. [29935]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met Mr. MacGregor on 16 February 1998 and a number of issues, including museum admission charges, were discussed.

I am aware of Mr. MacGregor's views on the desirability of free admission to museums and galleries, and these will be taken into account in our continuing examination of access issues as part of our Departmental Spending Review. This will be completed this summer, when a further announcement will be made.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the cost to public expenditure of a free admissions policy to national collections in galleries and museums; and if he will make a statement. [29937]

Mr. Fisher: We estimate very roughly that some £40 million p.a. would be required to secure free access to those national museums and galleries which currently charge for admission, and to preserve free access to those which do not currently charge. This figure includes compensation to charging museums for loss of recovery of VAT and the operating costs of new gallery space provided through major capital developments.

Museums (Macclesfield)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on threats to the future of Macclesfield's museums following proposed cuts in local authority funding; and if he will make a statement. [29943]

Mr. Fisher: We have received two representations on the future of Macclesfield's museums; one of them is from the hon. Member.

Although we desire the best possible museum services for all areas, it is not a statutory requirement that local authorities fund museum services. The funding of museums by Cheshire County Council is a matter for them.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what changes he proposes to make to his Department's cash limits and running costs for 1997–98. [30381]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class X, Vote 1 will be increased by £19,169,000 from £873,953,000 to £893,122,000. This is to increase provision for assets accepted in lieu of tax; a transfer from the Board of Inland Revenue (Class XVI, Vote 4) towards the refurbishment costs of Somerset House for the housing of the Gilbert Collection; to provide for additional appropriations in aid for the Historic Royal Palaces to offset net increases in gross expenditure; and to provide for an increase in provision to meet the costs of the funeral of Diana, Princess of Wales.

The increases will be offset by transfers, savings and charges to the Reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what planning totals have been given on what dates to National Lottery fund distributors; [30779]

(2) if he will list the (a) dates and (b) amounts and estimates of funds and limits to funds given or expected to be given to National Lottery fund distributors; [30778]

(3) if the Government guaranteed that National Lottery fund distributors would have £1.8 billion in total to give out. [30781]

Mr. Chris Smith: In 1994, the good causes were predicted to receive around £9 billion in total over the first licence period until September 2001, that is, £1.8 billion for each of the five good causes. The financial success of the Lottery means that it is now likely to generate at least £10 billion over the life of the licence, allowing the Government to make available £1 billion for the New Opportunities Fund and NESTA while maintaining £1.8 billion for each of the arts, sport, heritage, charities and Millennium good causes. While Lottery funds, by their nature, can never be predicted with absolute certainty, the Government are confident that these forecasts represent a prudent estimate for planning purposes. This position was outlined in the White Paper, The People's Lottery, (CM3709) published in July 1997.

On 1 October 1997, I announced the changes in percentage shares for the existing good causes which, on current forecasts, will generate these totals for each good cause. I also confirmed that the Millennium Commission would receive £2 billion during its funding life, which would be extended as necessary beyond 31 December 2000.

I will continue to issue forecasts of Lottery income to the distributors from time to time to enable them to plan their commitments.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list for each National Lottery fund distributor the (a) date, (b) nature, (c) details and (d) initiator of each voluntary agreement to bank up funds for distribution by another distributor. [30780]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Lottery Bill contains provisions for altering the percentage shares of the existing good causes, and allocating a percentage to the New Opportunities Fund. If the Bill becomes law, these provisions will take effect as from 14 October 1997. Meanwhile, the proceeds for good causes continue to be allocated between existing distributors' accounts in the National Lottery Distribution Fund as provided by the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 and Orders made under it.

The distributors are maintaining shadow accounts for indicative planning purposes, on the basis of the Government's announced policy, to enable the smooth and straightforward implementation of the Bill if it becomes law. No actual funds will pass from existing distributors to the New Opportunities Fund, unless and until the Lottery Bill receives Royal Assent.

These arrangements were agreed between distributors and the Government in discussions over the summer last year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the bodies distributing National Lottery funds to good causes. [30777]

Mr. Chris Smith: There are currently eleven National Lottery distributing bodies: the Arts Council of England, the Scottish Arts Council, the Arts Council of Wales and the Arts Council of Northern Ireland; the English Sports Council, the Scottish Sports Council, the Sports Council for Wales and the Sports Council for Northern Ireland; the National Heritage Memorial Fund; the National Lottery Charities Board; and the Millennium Commission.

Old Vic Theatre

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on future assistance from public funds for the Old Vic Theatre. [30511]

Mr. Chris Smith: Decisions on the allocation of both grant-in-aid and Lottery money to the arts are a matter for the Arts Council of England.

TV Dreams

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his Department's responsibility for approving the introduction of the National Lottery instant game, TV Dreams. [31196]

Mr. Chris Smith: Under section 6 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 the Director General of the National Lottery is responsible for licensing new National Lottery games. In doing so, he takes account of directions I have given him under section 11 of the Act. The BBC Governors are responsible for ensuring that all programmes broadcast on the BBC are in line with their Producers' Guidelines.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Office Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the total cost of the redecoration and refurbishment of the offices of Ministers in his Department since 1 May. [25187]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 23 January 1998]: The Palace of Westminster authorities have spent £11,000 since 1 May to refurbish the Lord Chancellor's office in the House of Lords. This is drawn from the overall budget to refurbish accommodation provided in the Palace for the Lord Chancellor's use. This in turn now forms part of the rolling programme of work initiated by the House of Lords authorities to renovate the House of Lords. No other offices have been redecorated or refurbished for Ministers.

Civil Justice Council

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the Civil Justice Council. [31326]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has appointed the members of the Civil Justice Council. They are:

Chairman: Lord Woolf, Master of the Rolls
Vice-Chairman: Sir Richard Scott, Vice-Chancellor
Vicki Chapman
Stephen Cragg
Carlos Dabezies
Professor Robert Dingwall
District Judge Godfrey Evans
David Gladwell
Hilary Heilbron QC
Lord Justice Henry
Henry Hodge OBE
Ashley Holmes
Peter Jacob
Vicky Ling
Michael Napier
Professor Martin Partington
Judge Sessions
District Judge Monty Trent
Owen Tudor
Tim Wallis
Ashton West
Marlene Winfield.

In accordance with the Civil Procedure Act 1977, the Lord Chancellor has chosen members with a wide range of experience in the civil justice field, including members of the judiciary and the legal professions, civil servants concerned with the administration of the courts, persons with experience in and knowledge of consumer affairs and the lay advice sector, and persons able to represent the interests of particular kinds of litigants. The Council will meet for the first time in March.

County Courts

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the average volume of work undertaken by county courts in each year since 1980. [30184]

Mr. Hoon: The information for 1987 to 1997 is set out below. County courts vary considerably in size but the average figures have been calculated by taking the county court workload as a whole and dividing it by the number of county courts open in that year. Figures prior to 1987 will take a little longer to prepare. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as they are available.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what volume of work was undertaken in (a) Shrewsbury and (b) Telford County Courts in each year between 1980 and 1989. [30181]

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will undertake a feasibility study into extending the Shrewsbury Crown and Magistrate's courts to include provision for the County Court. [30182]

Mr. Hoon: We have already looked at the possibility of housing the county court in these two buildings. It is very unlikely that the magistrates' court would have future capacity to accommodate the county court. The Crown Court is located in a building leased from Shropshire

County Council. Discussions about the county court are continuing with the council, which has not yet been able to offer any suitable space.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the factors which are taken into account in consideration of the proposed closure of a county court by the Court Service. [30183]

Mr. Hoon: The criteria, as set out in the Departmental Accommodation Plan, are:

The court's workload;

The condition of the existing accommodation and the availability of facilities;

The frequency of judicial visits and waiting times for hearings;

The capacity of alternative court(s) to cater for additional workload;

The facilities provided by the alternative court; and

The distances involved for court users travelling to an alternative court, and public transport consideration.

The overall aim is to use the resources available to provide a comprehensive service through a network of courts over a given area.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what unused capacity is available at (a) Ludlow and (b) Oswestry County Courts. [30185]

Mr. Hoon: At Ludlow, which has no courtroom, the judge's chambers are unused for 85 per cent. of the available time. At Oswestry, the courtroom is unused for 98.5 per cent. of the available time and the judge's chambers are unused for 75 per cent. of the available time.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what volume of work was undertaken in (a) Ludlow and (b) Oswestry County Courts in each year since 1980 [30180]

Mr. Hoon: The information for 1980 to 1997 is as follows. Figures prior to 1987 are only available as a total for England and Wales.

Magistrates Courts

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received on the reorganisation of magistrates' courts in North Yorkshire. [31024]

Mr. Hoon: My Department is currently dealing with two matters relating to the reorganisation of North Yorkshire Magistrates' Courts Committee's area. On the application to reorganise the petty sessional divisions within North Yorkshire's area, we have received 59 representations. In relation to the proposed closure of Ripon Magistrates' Court we have received 275 representations. 30 further representations were made which jointly concerned both these matters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she was first consulted by the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on his announcement of new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements. [26360]

Mrs. Roche: The President was consulted in January 1998 and was told of the proposals in July 1997.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contracts were signed during the visit of the Prince of Wales to Sri Lanka. [28595]

Mrs. Roche: The Prince of Wales visited Sri Lanka at the invitation of President Kumaratunga, to attend the celebrations of the 50th anniversary of Sri Lankan independence. During this visit no contracts were signed but His Royal Highness' programme reflected the wide range of bilateral contacts between the two countries and included commercial elements.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. Drew: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to end the current system of dual registration for customers and generators in advance of full deregulation. [28319]

Mr. Battle: This is a matter for the Electricity Pool. I understand that Pool officials are aware of the issue, and are working to ensure a smooth transition to a single system.

Taiwan (Whisky)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has made to the Government of Taiwan concerning (a) their current tax treatment of Scotch whisky and (b) their regulations on the definition and labelling of whisky. [27901]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 9 February 1998]: This Government are pressing Taiwan strongly for the early elimination of the current tax discrimination on Scotch whisky and introduction of satisfactory legislation on the definition and labelling. We are fully conscious of the adverse effect which the discriminatory tax treatment and the absence of legal definitions is having on the Scotch whisky industry and on the UK's export earnings. During his visit to Taipei last year, British Overseas Trade Chairman Sir Martin Laing raised this with both the Taiwanese President and the Vice Minister for Finance. My hon. Friend the Minister for Education and Industry, Scottish Office also raised it during his visit in October. In November 1997 the head of the British Trade and Cultural Office in Taipei wrote, with DTI support, a joint letter with his French counterpart urging Taiwan to take immediate action to equalise taxes on all spirits. Following a disappointing response, UK officials in London and Taipei have emphasised to the Taiwanese our concern about the slow progress on these issues. My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs and DTI officials will reinforce our expectation of early progress at the UK/Taiwan trade policy consultations in London on 26–27 February. DTI officials have also written to the European Commission, ahead of the next EU-Taiwan market access negotiations over Taiwan's accession to the World Trade Organisation in Taipei on 23–26 February, to ensure that in its negotiations the Commission continues to reflect the UK's and other Member States' concerns on these issues.

Utility Bills

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she plans to impose an extra levy on utility bills to cross-subsidise lower income consumers. [29390]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 16 February 1998]: The inter-departmental review of utility regulation is examining a wide range of issues. A Green Paper setting out the conclusions of the review will be issued in the near future.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the location and running costs of each of her Department's buildings. [30144]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 18 February 1998]: The information has been placed in the Library. Costs relate to the financial year 1996–97 unless otherwise noted. Comparability of cost figures has been attempted but could be verified only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the number of her Department's employees by UK region, indicating the wage bill (a) in total and (b) by region in the last year for which figures are available and separately identifying the costs of London allowances and weightings. [30143]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 18 February 1998]: The distribution of DTI-core staff (i.e. excluding Agencies, staff with the Government Offices and on detached duty outside the Department) on 31 March 1997 was:

London: 3,851
Scotland: 173
Wales: 81
Yorkshire and Humberside: 140
North West: 106
Eastern: 44
East Midlands: 50
North East: 109
South East: 57
South West: 80
West: 145.

DTI-core pay out-turn for financial year 1996–97

Salaries	113,388,000
Overtime	1,444,000
ERNIC	8,906,000
Superannuation	15,580,000
	139,318,000

Local Pay Additions and London weighting were abolished for DTI staff in 1994, but most employees continued to receive them under reserved rights provisions. In August 1997 these payments were consolidated into base pay.

The annual amounts paid in the London area (to staff below the senior civil service) were as follows:

Inner London Weighting: £1,776
Intermediate London Weighting: £1,015
Outer London Weighting: £736.

In addition some junior staff (mostly clerical) were eligible for:

London Local Pay Addition: £800

except for about 100 individuals who retained reserved rights to different amounts.

The cost of providing a regional breakdown of pay and allowances would exceed the disproportionate cost limit. My Department no longer pays regional allowances as a distinct element of pay.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will give a regional breakdown of her Department's expenditure on (a) hospitality, (b) stationery and (c) travel. [30145]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 18 February 1998]: Disaggregated information in the form requested, which is not held centrally within the Department, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts of a value greater than £5,000 her Department has with companies in (a) London, (b) South East England, (c) England, (d) Scotland, (e) Wales and (f) Northern Ireland; and what is the total value of such contracts for each area. [30146]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 18 February 1998]: This information is not held centrally and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) on 10 June 1997, Official Report, column 415, concerning radioactive material, if a date has been set for the return of the material. [29869]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 17 February 1998]: The date for the return of the wastes concerned will be set by BNFL and ENEL.

Departmental Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision her Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what subsidy is provided for (a) nursery places and (b) holiday play schemes; if she will list the organisations used by her Department for child care; and if child care vouchers are made available to staff. [30013]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The Department provides a 32-place holiday playscheme which operates from purpose-built accommodation in central London, for a minimum of 54 days each academic year. Departmental staff enjoy a subsidy of 54% towards the cost of daily fees. An annual contribution is also made towards the cost of running an inter-Departmental Easter and Summer playscheme for staff located in the Government Office for the East Midlands.

In September 1997, as a result of an invitation to tender exercise, Kinderquest Ltd. was successful in securing a three-year contract to run the Department's central London playscheme. The previous contractor was Multibase Playcare, which was awarded the first contract in 1990.

The Department does not at present provide or subsidise nursery places, nor does it offer nursery vouchers to its staff.

Scientific Research

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to promote international co-operation in scientific research. [30474]

Mr. Battle: International co-operation in scientific research is of vital importance for the health of the domestic science base, and is an important component in our export promotion, inward investment, developmental and diplomatic efforts world-wide. For this reason, scientific co-operation is promoted by a wide range of governmental and non-governmental agencies. The Office of Science and Technology plays a key role in bringing a high-level strategic focus to these activities. In Europe, I am particularly keen to see continued vigorous participation by UK researchers in the EU's Framework Programmes for Research and Technological Development. In 1996, 15 per cent. of new partnerships established in the Fourth Framework Programme involved UK teams, more than those of any other country. I am also very pleased that we were able, at the EU Research Council on 12 February, to secure a common position on the structure, content and management of the Fifth Framework Programme. This should provide a good basis for continuing strong UK participation in the future. Beyond Europe, recent DTI initiatives include, for example, the strengthening of science and technology links with the Russian Federation and the negotiation of an agreement with Brazil, the establishment of a joint £600,000 fund to support scientific collaboration with the Republic of Korea, and a £500,000 programme of post-doctoral researcher exchanges with Australia.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will publish the results of Government discussions about handling inward investment policy between Departments. [30400]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 February 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 3 December 1997, Official Report, column 255.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the impact of the increases in corporation tax on net profits of UK business over the next four years. [30518]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 174.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the effect on net returns on capital employed from accelerated corporation tax payments in the next four years. [30519]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 174.

Business Taxation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has made to the Chancellor concerning the level of business taxation. [30520]

Mrs. Beckett: I maintain regular contact with the Chancellor of the Exchequer to ensure that the effect on business is taken into account in decisions on taxation and other aspects of economic policy.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the advertising contracts her Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30709]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The following contracts for advertising campaigns have been placed through COI since 1 May 1997.

Contract	Value to date	Number of companies which tendered
Business Link	750,000	4
Queen's Awards to industry[1]	Nil	3
Firework Safety[2]	85,000	1

[1] The Queen's Award contract has only just been placed. The final value is to be confirmed.
[2] The firework safety contract was awarded under the COI call-off arrangement for contracts of less than £104,000.

Prepayment Meter Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to exclude the sick, the incapable and those on Fuel Direct from the proposed levy on electricity users for the extension of the Prepayment Meter Scheme. [30924]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The review of utility regulation has not yet been completed. Until that time, it would be wrong of me to respond to speculation on issues which fall under its remit. I would, however, encourage my hon. Friend to participate fully in the consultation process which will follow publication of the review's findings.

European Research Council

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the outcome of the European Union Research Council on 12 February. [31498]

Mr. Battle: I chaired the meeting of the EU Research Council on 12 February 1998.

After a hard and long negotiation, the UK Presidency was able to secure unanimous agreement on a "common position" on the EC Fifth Framework Programme for Research Technological Development and Demonstration Activities 1998–2002 (FP5). This was particularly welcome as we have identified progress on FP5 as a key priority for our Presidency. We were also able to achieve a political agreement on the Fifth Framework Programme of the European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom) for Research and Training Activities (1998–2002).

The achievement of a common position means that we have secured a firm foundation for bringing FP5 into operation on time thus avoiding a gap in funding for European research. FP5 also represents a significant improvement on FP4 in that it is well focused on a limited number of objectives of clear European importance, complementing the work undertaken at national level. FP5 will deliver real results of value to European competitiveness and society, playing an important part in helping to strengthen the technological edge of European industries and services and in tackling pressing European issues in fields such as health and the environment.

Though it had many very difficult issues to tackle, the Council was able to agree on all areas of FP5 including scientific and technological content, structure and the budget, which was settled at 14 bn ecu (around £10 billion). While my responsibility as President was to reach a compromise all could accept, the outcome very closely reflects the UK's national priorities and objectives.

I also made further announcements on the management of the FP5. In the light of the conclusions of the Council held on 10 November 1997, which committed the Council to consider FP5's management further, I confirmed that the UK presidency would host a Ministerial Colloquium on 28 April in London, to look closely at the management and administration of FP5 and how it can be improved. Its conclusions will provide an important contribution to future work.

Having achieved a common position we can now move onto the next stage in negotiations. We must keep up the pace to achieve agreement on all aspects of FP5, including the more detailed specific programmes to ensure a smooth transition from FP4 to FP5 at the end of the year. I encouraged the Commission to produce drafts of these urgently so that the Research Council on 22 June can reach preliminary conclusions on them.

The Council also received a presentation from the Commission on the rules of participation and dissemination (130j rules) which will again be discussed in more detail at the 22 June Research Council.

I also described work underway to improve co-ordination between the EU and the European Space Agency (ESA), which I had set out as a Presidency objective at the 10 November Research Council. The aim is to bring forward a resolution in similar terms to the Research Council on 22 June and the ESA Ministerial Council which follows it.

Export Sales Lead Service

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will announce the outcome of the tender for the new export sales lead service. [31497]

Mrs. Beckett: Yes. I received 71 initial expressions of interest from which 21 organisations sought to pre-qualify. A shortlist of 6 firms were then invited to submit bids and of these 4 organisations actually did so. I am pleased to announce today that the contract to operate the new export sales lead service has been awarded to the Dialog Corporation plc. I expect to make a further announcement shortly giving details about how the new service will operate.

DEFENCE

Bull Point, Plymouth

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the proposed remote ammunition facility at Bull Point, Plymouth. [27056]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 6 February 1998]: The estimated cost of this facility is £12.8M.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the proposed remote ammunition facility at Bull Point, Plymouth; if its design will allow for the other uses; and which other uses would be covered by Crown immunity. [27057]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 6 February 1998]: The proposed development at Bull Point would provide a purpose-built facility for loading and unloading conventional ammunition from surface ships and submarines. We have no plans to use it for any other purpose and it has been designed specifically for ammunitioning. The question of Crown immunity does not, therefore, apply.

EUROFOR

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United Kingdom co-operation is planned with EUROFOR; what effect this organisation will have on the operational activity of Gibraltar; what linkage is currently under discussion between this body and the Eurocorps; and if he will make a statement. [29825]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 February 1998]: The UK is not a member of EUROFOR and has no current plans for co-operation with this force. The establishment of EUROFOR has no effect on the operational activity of Gibraltar. Eurocorps and EUROFOR are declared as potentially available for use in NATO and WEU operations. Although any linkage between these two forces is a matter for the nations involved, the UK is not aware of any plans for such a linkage. France, Italy, Portugal and Spain are members of EUROFOR; and France, Germany, Belgium, Spain and Luxembourg are members of Eurocorps.

Precision-guided Weapons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 71, on precision-guided weapons, which countries possess multi-spectral smoke. [30263]

Dr. Reid: Countries which have a pyrotechnics manufacturing industry are most likely to be capable of producing smoke generators which cover different parts of the visible or infra-red spectrum.

WE-177 Bomb

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when each variant of the WE-177 bomb was withdrawn from service. [30562]

Dr. Reid: While some WE-177 weapons remain in operational service I am withholding the information under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of the closure of NATO headquarters in Gibraltar on Gibraltar's (a) air space, (b) border controls and (c) territorial waters. [30810]

Dr. Reid: The defence and security of Gibraltar, its air space, borders and territorial waters are, and will remain, the direct responsibility of the UK. They will therefore be unaffected by the closure of GIBMED, the NATO headquarters based in Gibraltar.

Arms Exports (Iraq)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the volumes and nature of equipment and raw materials exported from the United Kingdom to Iraq since 1980 that are likely to have been used in manufacture of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons. [30956]

Mr. George Robertson: The Ministry of Defence receives export licence applications, referred to it for review, and intelligence on Iraq. Assessments are made of Iraq's nuclear, biological and chemical weapons programmes and are continually reviewed by technical experts within my Department.

HEALTH

Primary Care

6. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposals for the constitution and working of the proposed primary care commissioning groups. [29319]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper "The new NHS" sets out our plans for the core functions and requirements of Primary Care Groups. Their requirements will need to be flexible to reflect local circumstances. The final shape of Primary Care Groups will need to reflect the functions they have to perform.

Hypertension

14. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding links between levels of dietary salt consumption and the incidence of hypertension. [29328]

Ms Jowell: We have received a letter from the Salt Manufacturers' Association.

The Department asked the Faculty of Public Health Medicine, with the British Heart Foundation, to host a seminar to bring together a wide spread of scientific opinion to consider whether a reduction in salt consumption for the general population is advisable. A report is expected later this year.

Asthma (East Sussex)

20. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many asthma cases there were among children in East Sussex in the latest period for which figures are available. [29334]

Ms Jowell: There are no comprehensive data available on the numbers of children with asthma, but in East Sussex during 1995–96 there were a total of 1,202 finished consultant episodes for young people in the 0–18 age group treated in hospital.

NHS (50th Anniversary)

21. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what events his Department has sponsored to date to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the NHS. [29335]

Mr. Milburn: The main focus of events celebrating the 50th anniversary of the National Health Service is at a local level, and central sponsorship has been restricted to legitimate national activities which support the NHS's aims. To date the Department has sponsored an education resource pack, health promotion material, and a resource pack for use by local NHS organisations.

Diabetes

22. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the advice from the UK National Screening Committee on the introduction of a national screening programme for diabetes among high risk groups. [29336]

Ms Jowell: The National Screening Committee has not yet considered national screening for diabetes but will do so as part of its future programme. Any decision on the introduction of a national programme will be made in the light of that consideration.

Birmingham Health Authority

23. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Birmingham health authority's review of services. [29337]

Mr. Milburn: Birmingham Health Authority is currently consulting on its proposals for health service provision and this will conclude in March. Should it then fall to ministers to make the final decision on the future of services in Birmingham we will take into account all the evidence, including the response to public consultation.

Suffolk Health Authority

24. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding the allocation of funds to the Suffolk health authority for 1998–99. [29338]

Mr. Milburn: We have received a number of representations.

Accident and Emergency Units

25. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure patients are seen as quickly as possible in accident and emergency units. [29339]

Mr. Boateng: The first responsibility of the National Health Service is to respond properly to emergency need as and when it arises. National standards require patients to be assessed within 15 minutes of arrival in Accident and Emergency Departments and that patients admitted as inpatients through A&E be given a bed as soon as possible and certainly within two hours. We are keeping these standards under review.

Waiting Lists

26. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce waiting lists in the next 12 months. [29340]

Mr. Milburn: Our immediate priorities are to manage winter pressures and to eliminate 18 month waits for treatment by the end of March. We are doing this. The national Waiting List Action Team and its regional task forces are working with the National Health Service to ensure that waiting lists will be lower at the end of this Parliament than at the beginning.

Public Health

27. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to address regional disparities in ill health as part of the Government's public health strategy. [29341]

Ms Jowell: We are currently consulting on the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation", which includes our proposals for reducing England's significant social, geographical and ethnic health inequalities. The consultation responses and the findings of the Independent Inquiry into Inequalities in Health will be used to develop a concerted strategy to tackle health inequalities which will reflect a proper balance between targets for national action and local targets reflecting priorities for action in tackling local health inequalities and health improvement.

Dental Services (Swindon)

28. Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Investing in Dentistry awards in Swindon. [29342]

Mr. Milburn: In January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State approved an Investing in Dentistry request from Wiltshire Health Authority for a grant of £50,000 to enable a new dental practice to open in Swindon.

NHS Charter

29. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards developing a new NHS charter. [29343]

Mr. Milburn: We announced on 8 October last year that Mr. Greg Dyke (chief executive and chairman of Pearson Television) had been appointed to advise the Government on developing a National Health Service Charter. He is being supported in this task by a group of advisers drawn from the NHS, patient and other organisations. We expect to publish draft proposals later this year.

Redbridge and Waltham Forest DHA

30. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received recently regarding services purchased by Redbridge and Waltham Forest district health authority. [29344]

Mr. Milburn: We have received a number of representations concerning Redbridge and Waltham Forest Health Authority's proposals to achieve financial stability.

Rationing (NHS)

31. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has in respect of rationing in the NHS. [29345]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 198.

NHS Performance and Efficiency

32. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incentives he intends to introduce for health authorities, NHS trusts and primary care groups to improve performance and efficiency. [29346]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper "The New NHS" outlines a range of incentives for improved performance and efficiency across the National Health Service, including:

- the introduction of a new broader-based performance framework, with particular emphasis on benchmarking and on the sharing of good practice;
- aligning clinical and financial responsibility in Primary Care Groups, and giving greater devolved budgetary responsibility to clinical teams in NHS trusts;
- the development and publication of a national schedule of "reference costs" to provide a strong lever to tackle NHS trust inefficiency;
- rewarding good performance through modest extra non-recurrent funding for health authorities that make most progress against agreed targets and objectives, allowing NHS trusts to use a share of any savings resulting from longer term service agreements and allowing Primary Care Groups to redeploy savings to meet local needs and promote local developments;
- ensuring a drive for quality, including the introduction of a new system of clinical governance in NHS trusts and primary care, backed up by a new statutory duty for quality in NHS trusts.

The White Paper also sets out a range of clear sanctions for use where performance is not up to standard, including the scope for direct intervention by the NHS Executive to rectify poor performance in any part of the NHS.

NHS Cuts (Cornwall)

33. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposed NHS cuts in Cornwall. [29347]

Mr. Milburn: Cornwall Community Health Council has rejected the proposals for changes to health services contained in Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority's Service Strategy 1998–2003. The proposals have now been referred to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for a final decision. He will be considering the proposals carefully and will only allow them to proceed if he is satisfied that they represent the best way forward for the health service in Cornwall.

Bed Blocking

34. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the action his Department is taking to reduce the incidence of bed blocking in NHS hospitals. [29348]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) on 11 November 1997, Official Report, column 538.

Integrated Care

35. Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the differences between the current NHS internal market and the system of integrated care outlined in the NHS White Paper. [29349]

Mr. Milburn: A summary of the differences between the National Health Service internal market and the system of integrated care can be found on page 16 of the White Paper, The New NHS (Cmd 3807), copies of which are available in the Library.

Immunisation

36. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to increase the take-up of immunisation among people from areas of multiple disadvantage. [29350]

Ms Jowell: Annual immunisation rates are now at their highest ever levels, for example the uptake of three doses of diphtheria, tetanus and polio immunisation by age two in 1996–97 was 96 per cent. This has resulted in the reduction of childhood diseases to very low levels and reflects the hard work of doctors, nurses and other health professionals in dedicated immunisation teams across the country.

Immunisation uptake is influenced by many factors including the attitude of health care professionals, social deprivation, available information, ethnicity, the presence of older siblings, religious beliefs and media reporting. These factors interact in different ways and will vary between areas. We have a range of literature about immunisation for both parents and health professionals to assist in strategies to maintain the high uptake levels already achieved and improve those in lower uptake areas.

The national target for immunisation uptake is 95 per cent. A few health authorities (HAs) have significantly lower immunisation rates, achieving 86–89 per cent. uptake rates for diphtheria, tetanus and polio immunisation. Such HAs are targeted through the Department's performance management function, local action plans developed and progress monitored on a regular basis. The detail of these improvement strategies are necessarily decided at a local level as they will depend on the specific circumstances. Local immunisation co-ordinators work with primary care health professionals to achieve immunisation targets.

Primary Care (Nurses' Role)

37. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for boosting the role of nurses in commissioning primary care. [29351]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997 Personal Medical Services Pilot scheme has made it possible for nurses to take a leading role in primary care. In addition, the Primary Care Groups we will be establishing will involve nurses, general practitioners and other primary care professionals. The development of the Primary Care Groups will be evolutionary and as part of this process, we shall be issuing guidance on this and other related issues.

St. Vincent's Declaration

38. Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of progress towards meeting the objectives of the St. Vincent's Declaration in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [29352]

Ms Jowell: We are committed to improving health services for people with diabetes, and we have accepted the international St. Vincent's Declaration, to which the previous Government signed up.

In 1992 the Department and the British Diabetic Association set up the St. Vincent Joint Task Force for Diabetes, which reported in 1995 making recommendations about good clinical and management practice in eleven key areas. The Department then set up a diabetes subgroup of the Clinical Outcomes Group to develop service guidance for the National Health Service. The guidance, entitled "Key features of a good diabetes service", was issued in November 1997 as Health Service Guidelines HSG(97)45. The Department has also commissioned clinical guidelines and other clinical effectiveness materials for diabetes.

Private Finance Initiative

19. Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the hospital building programme under the private finance initiative scheme. [29333]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Laxton) earlier today.

Suicides

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the linkage between changes in levels of suicide and unemployment among young men. [28825]

Ms Jowell: The Department has not directly commissioned research into the linkage between changes in levels of suicide and unemployment among young men. There are a number of relevant papers which discuss the complexity of this issue. These include studies by Colin Pritchard: Is there a link between suicide in young men and unemployment? A Comparison of the UK with other European Community Countries (British Journal of Psychiatry, London, volume 160, June 1992, pages 750–756) and Suicide, Unemployment and Gender in the British Isles and European Economic Community (1974–1985)—A Hidden Epidemic? (Social Psychiatry and Psychiatric Epidemiology, Berlin, volume 23, number 2, 1988, pages 85–89).

Recent Life Events, Social Support and Suicide (Heikkinen M; Aro-H; Lonnqvist J, National Public Health Institute, Department of Mental Health, Helsinki, Finland, SO: Acta-Psychiatr-Scand-Suppl, volume 377, 1994, pages 65–72) reports the findings of a national suicide study in Finland.

The Department does fund the National Confidential Inquiry into Suicide and Homicide by People with Mental Illness. A progress report published on 12 December 1997 showed that 58 per cent. of people in contact with psychiatric services who committed suicide were unemployed or long-term sick. A copy of the progress report has been placed in the Library.

NHS White Paper

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of administering the organisational changes in the NHS outlined in his recent White Paper. [29059]

Mr. Milburn: Our estimates are that savings in bureaucracy and management costs over the lifetime of this Parliament will free up £1 billion for patient care.

Dalton Report

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation he has made of the Dalton Report. [29363]

Ms Jowell: We have asked our independent scientific and medical experts on the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) to review the toxicity of vitamin B6. As part of this review the COT considered the Dalton and Dalton study. In addition to information supplied by interested parties the Committee also considered over 100 other scientific papers from both national and international journals.

The COT noted some methodological deficiencies in the Dalton and Dalton study, but in the light of other supporting human and animal data, concluded it would be unwise to ignore evidence from this study that daily doses of vitamin B6 of 50mg and above are potentially harmful.

We have every confidence in the rigour with which the COT reviewed the data on vitamin B6 and the robustness of the recommendations it made.

Aricept

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many district health authority areas the drug Aricept is available on prescription at public expense. [29571]

Mr. Milburn: Data from the Prescription Pricing Authority show that in the vast majority of health authorities (99), some prescriptions for Aricept have been dispensed. However, I understand that many health authorities are at present reluctant to commit resources to the drug because published data currently suggest that it has limited clinical effectiveness and is unlikely to have any effect on the underlying disease progression.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the NHS drugs bill has been taken by the biopharmaceutical sector in each of the last five years. [29852]

Mr. Milburn: The cost of biopharmaceutical medicines is not separately identified in the information reported on National Health Service pharmaceutical expenditure and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to promote biotechnology in pharmaceutical development. [29853]

Mr. Milburn: The Department is committed to encouraging a fertile climate in which biotechnology can flourish, and medical treatment can continue to advance. To this end, we support a range of programmes including the Crusade for Biotechnology, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development Working Party on Biotechnology, and the MedLINK programme.

These measures will help to promote biotechnology and human healthcare, not only in pharmaceutical development but as a technology in its own right.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to increase the number of qualified nurses in nursing homes. [29972]

Mr. Milburn: Independent nursing homes are regulated under the Registered Homes Act 1984, and are required to provide adequate numbers of professional and technical staff with regard to the number, age, sex and condition of the residents in any one home. The precise number of qualified nursing staff required for any individual nursing home is for the health authority to determine as the registering authority.

Diabetes

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many admissions to accident and emergency departments of type 1 diabetics in a hypoglycaemic coma occurred in each year since 1987 [29778]

Ms Jowell: The available information is shown in the tables and is based on finished consultant episodes (FCEs), which represent the number of episodes of care under individual consultants. International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision (ICD9) was used for the period 1989/90 to 1994/95. This was replaced by International Classification of Diseases Tenth Revision (ICD 10) in 1995/96 when many new codes were introduced and others expanded.

Hormone Replacement Medication

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the policy of a double prescription charge for hormone replacement medication; and if he will make a statement. [30192]

Mr. Milburn: All aspects of prescription charging arrangements are being examined as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. In the Department of Health, the review is being undertaken in the context of the manifesto commitment:

"if you are ill or injured there will be a national health service there to help; and access to it will be based on need and need alone—not on your ability to pay, or on who your general practitioner happens to be or where you live".

NHS Dentists

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average turnover derived solely from the NHS for dental practices undertaking NHS work in the last year for which figures are available. [30238]

Mr. Milburn: The average gross fee earnings of a General Dental Service (GDS) dentist from National Health Service work in the year ending 31 March 1997 was £84,758. The average is for those principal dentists who have a contract with a health authority, who provide some treatment within the GDS throughout the financial year and who have received a payment for treatments carried out in the last six months of the year. As self employed healthcare workers, GDS dentists are able to do as much as or as little NHS treatment as they wish.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase fee levels for NHS dentistry. [30236]

Mr. Milburn: We have accepted the recommendations of the 27th Report of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body for dentists' remuneration. As a result fees will increase for work begun from 1 April 1998. Officials are calculating the feescale changes and will be consulting the British Dental Association in the near future.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the average income of dental practitioners undertaking work which is (a) solely and (b) principally funded by the NHS. [30239]

Mr. Milburn: None.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total NHS expenditure on dentists' fees in the current financial year; and what was the total expenditure in each of the last four years. [30237]

Mr. Milburn: The table sets out gross and net expenditure in the General Dental Service (GDS) in England for the financial years 1993–94 to 1996–97. For 1997–98 the latest estimate is for GDS expenditure of £1,335.7 million gross, £955.7 million net of patient charges. Gross expenditure includes all fees and allowances payable to General Dental Practitioners, which cover both their income and practice expenses, together with supplementary costs such as employers' superannuation contributions and payments for salaried dentists who provide GDS care in certain localities.

Health Authority Deficits

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (a) non-recurring and (b) recurring deficit of (i) Merton and Sutton Health Authority and (ii) Wandsworth Health Authority in the three years up to merger in 1996. [30294]

Mr. Milburn: The financial position of district health authorities was not analysed between recurrent and non-recurrent components.

The details of income and expenditure positions for the relevant years is shown in the table. Merton and Sutton Health Authority and Wandsworth Health Authority and merged on 1 April 1994 to form Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority.

	Income and expenditure position
1993–94
Merton and Sutton District Health Authority	(77,000)
Wandsworth District Health Authority	2,093,000
1994–95
Merton Sutton and Wandsworth District Health Authority	7,836,000
1995–96

Social Services

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to (a) identify and (b) disseminate good practice within social services departments. [30225]

Mr. Boateng: We both identify and disseminate good practice through national and regional seminars and conferences, local networks of managers and leading professionals and the publication of inspection reports and studies which include examples of best practice. Our work with the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to improve the training of social services staff and with the National Institute for Social Work supports this strategy.

Psychologists

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on statutory registration of psychologists. [30293]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to introduce statutory registration of psychologists. However, we continue to work with the professional body concerned and with health service staff to maintain and develop the existing mechanisms for regulation which are in the public interest.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many disciplinary cases have been brought before the General Medical Council since 1984 concerning doctors undertaking cosmetic operations who were (a) found to be incompetent and (b) not qualified to carry out the surgical procedures. [30386]

Mr. Milburn: The General Medical Council does not make findings of "incompetence" or whether doctors are qualified to carry out surgical procedures. It considers allegations relating to the conduct and performance of doctors. Information about the cases considered by the Council's Professional Conduct Committee and whether or not the doctors were found guilty of serious professional misconduct is published annually. Cases involving treatment are not broken down by specialty. Since the introduction of the professional performance procedures in July 1997, no doctor undertaking cosmetic surgery has been found to be seriously deficient.

Social Care Council

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish his White Paper on a General Social Care Council. [30584]

Mr. Boateng: We intend to publish the Social Services White Paper in the summer.

Meningitis

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many young people in higher education have (a) contracted meningitis and (b) died as a result of meningitis, in each of the last five years. [30491]

Ms Jowell: The table gives the number of laboratory reports of meningococcal disease and the number of deaths for ages 15–24; it is not possible to say how many of these cases were in higher education. Total figures for all ages and those for children under 5 are also included for comparison.

[1] Provisional data.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Government are spending on raising awareness of the risks and symptoms of meningitis among students. [30490]

Ms Jowell: The Chief Medical Officer (CMO) holds an annual press briefing for journalists to raise public, professional and media awareness of meningitis. The CMO also writes to all doctors each year giving advice on the early diagnosis of suspected cases of meningococcal infection and stressing the need for immediate antibiotic treatment and urgent referral to hospital. The Department contributes to the many articles in newspapers and the medical press, and television and radio programmes that appear during the winter increase in cases.

Last year we also revised the Department's information leaflet entitled "Knowing about meningitis and septicaemia" available to the public from general practitioners' surgeries. As meningococcal infections peak with most cases in children under one year, with a second smaller peak in late teenagers we target extra information in these areas. The Health Education Authority (HEA), funded by the Department, produces a leaflet targeted at students, "Look out for your mate", which is distributed to colleges and universities. The Department provides funding to both the National Meningitis Trust and the Meningitis Research Foundation to support their valuable information work.

It is not possible to identify the amount spent on student awareness of meningitis separately, but it is a key theme of the Department's, the HEA's and the meningitis charities' information campaigns. 1.5 million "Look out for your mate" flyers and 35,000 posters were distributed to 765 colleges in England and Wales. 250,000 copies of the Department's "Knowing about meningitis and septicaemia" leaflet were printed last year.

NHS Trust Boards

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made in ensuring that the boards of NHS trusts are more representative of the communities they serve; and how he intends to extend this principle to the boards of health authorities. [31371]

Mr. Dobson: Substantial progress has been made to meet the Government's election manifesto commitment to make National Health Service trust boards more representative of their local communities.

Working within the parameters for public appointments established by the Commissioner for Public Appointments, Sir Leonard Peach, and following my consultation with him, a number of substantial changes were announced last June to apply to the 1997 round of appointments of chairmen and non-executives to NHS trusts to fill 1005 vacancies out of a total of 2509 places on trust boards:

(a) The person specification for non-executives and chairmen has been changed to encourage more NHS users and carers. Candidates are expected to live in the area served by the trust.

(b) Interview panels have been instructed to ensure that all candidates are personally committed to the NHS and can bring a user's perspective to the board.

(c) Members of Parliament and Local Authorities have been asked to nominate candidates for consideration. These are not for reserved places but to widen the local base from which candidates can be drawn.

(d) The balance of board membership will move in favour of ordinary users and carers and those with a community voice.

(e) The commitment to the goals set for women and ethnic minorities on NHS boards has been reinforced.

Over 1,800 nominations were received from Members of Parliament and Local Authorities. Both these nominated candidates and those responding to public advertisements were considered against the new criteria. All appointments were made on merit under the Nolan rules, candidates having gone through the same selection process, including an interview with a panel including an independent member.

At 23 February, I have made 884 appointments to NHS trusts and a further 121 are currently under consideration. Of those appointed as non-executive directors in this round, 52.3 per cent. are women. Of those appointed as chairs, 35.5 per cent. are women. This is a significant improvement on the position inherited from the previous Government at 1 May.

We have also significantly improved representation of people from ethnic minorities. The previous Government set the target that each NHS trust with 10 per cent. of people from ethnic minorities in their local population should have a board member from an ethnic minority. They failed to achieve this in 19 of the NHS trusts to which appointments had to be made in 1997. I have made appointments of members from ethnic minorities in all but two of these. One was a specialist orthopaedic trust to which I appointed a disabled member. The other is to be merged in the summer of 1998. In total, 9 per cent. of appointments since 1 May have been of people from ethnic minorities, taking the total from 5 per cent. to 7.2 per cent.

Around a third of those appointed were existing board members reappointed for a further term of office after a previous period of satisfactory service.

Of those appointed, 620 have declared no political activity and 264 have declared that they have been politically active within the definition used by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. Twenty-five have been active on behalf of the Liberal Democrats, 29 on behalf of the Conservatives including a former Cabinet Minister, 206 on behalf of Labour and four Other. Many of these people represent their community as serving councillors; 117 Labour, six Conservative, 16 Liberal Democrats and 3 Other.

The Government are committed to an open and transparent process for NHS appointments. The appointments process which we inherited from the previous Government was not consistent and varied from place to place. This is most unsatisfactory. In consultation with the Regional Chairmen I have produced guidelines which are to be followed in every part of the country. The guidelines also stipulate that there should be a standard procedure for assessing the performance of individual non-Executive directors and chairmen. These guidelines have been cleared with the Commissioner for Public Appointments and we will be placing copies in the Library.

These procedures will be used to identify candidates for the 302 vacancies for the boards of health authorities which will fall due in March. We are committed to ensuring that health authorities, like NHS trusts, have board members who represent the interests of local NHS users and carers. Public advertisements have already been placed and we have asked Members of Parliament and Chief Executives of local authorities to make nominations. Around 3,000 completed applications have already been received. To enable proper consideration to be given to all these candidates, especially as in future health authorities will be required to discharge additional duties, and to enable proper notice to be given to all appointees, I intend to ask the 302 incumbents to serve for an additional three months until 30 June 1998.

Full details of appointments to NHS bodies will be published in the Department of Health's Public Appointments Annual Report in March.

Dissolved NHS Trusts

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial arrangements are being made in respect of the eight NHS trusts dissolved on 1 April 1997. [31502]

Mr. Milburn: Pursuant to the dissolution of eight National Health Service trusts on 1 April 1997, and their reconfiguration through the establishment of four new trusts on that date, we propose to create originating debt for the new trusts equal to the net assets transferred to them and therefore to remit the outstanding debt of the dissolved trusts.

These operations involve no overall loss to the Exchequer. Her Majesty's treasury has today presented a minute to the House giving the particulars and circumstances of the proposed remission which it has approved in principle.

Medicinal Drugs (Driving)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the percentage of medicinal drugs which carry advice against driving after consumption; [31028]

(2) what assessment he has made of the (a) numbers and (b) percentage of prescription and over-the-counter drugs that warn users that they may impair their ability to drive. [30958]

Ms Jowell: The United Kingdom medicines licensing procedure requires any company applying for a marketing authorisation, to detail the effect of the medicine on the user's ability to drive. Advice that driving ability may be impaired is included where necessary. However, retrieval of the number or percentage of marketing authorisations carrying this advice from our records would incur a disproportionate cost.

Community and Acute Hospitals

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy on the role of community hospitals and their relationship to acute hospitals in the same health authority. [29320]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for North Norfolk (Mr. Prior) earlier today.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the medical equipment currently being used in the Health Service which will need to be checked for millennium compliance. [25660]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The Medical Devices Agency has advised users to ensure that they have complete and accurate inventories of all medical devices and associated equipment that could possibly be date aware, and therefore could be adversely affected by such problems.

EL97/59 was issued to all health authorities and trusts in October informing them of their obligations and setting out milestones for achieving them.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the report from Mr. J. J. Rowe QC on the Operation in 1997 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989; and if he will make a statement on the future of the Act in the light of Mr. Rowe's report. [31503]

Mr. Straw: I have today arranged for copies of Mr. Rowe's report to be placed in the Library. Mr. Rowe recommends that the legislation should be renewed in its entirety for a further 12 months. A draft Order is being laid before the House today which continues in force most provisions of the Act for a further 12 months. In accordance with the announcement I made on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 1027–37, I have decided not to renew the exclusion order powers under Part II of the Act. This recognises the limited use which has been made of the powers in recent years. 248 orders were in force in 1982, falling to 74 in 1994. No exclusion order has been in force in Northern Ireland since February 1995. No order was made in 1996 or 1997 against anyone who had not been previously excluded despite the fact that the ceasefire had ended. By May 1997, 22 orders were in force. No orders are in force now. It has long been our view that the powers are of limited value and objectionable on policy grounds.

There is nothing in Mr. Rowe's report which leads me to change that view, nor has it been the practice of this or previous administrations automatically to follow the recommendations of reviewers. In 1987 a recommendation by Viscount Colville as part of his fundamental review of anti-terrorist legislation that exclusion orders were "draconian" and should be removed from the statute book was rejected by the government of the day.

The consultation document which is being prepared on future permanent United Kingdom-wide counter-terrorism legislation will provide an opportunity for discussion on whether the powers should be retained permanently or abolished. Our overall aim will be a framework of laws that are both effective and proportionate to the threat. This Government will never drop their guard in the fight against terrorism.

Laboratory Animals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he takes to examine journey plans and transport conditions for animals imported into the United Kingdom for use in experimentation before issuing licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; [31100]

(2) if he will undertake an urgent assessment of the conditions under which animals destined for use in experimentation are imported into the United Kingdom. [31099]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 provides only for regulating the importation of species listed in Schedule 2 of the Act.

For animals listed under Schedule 2:

the Home Office must be satisfied that suitable animals cannot be obtained from designated sources;

the place from which the animals are being imported and the animals' provenance must have been established and must be acceptable to the Home Office;

the animals must be delivered to someone with responsibilities under the Act; and details of any resulting transport related morbidity and mortality must be notified to the Home Office.

Outline travel plans must also be submitted. These must confirm that the arrangements (including travel times, the mode of transport and any special requirements for the type of animals involved) meet domestic and international welfare requirements; and they must identify who is responsible for the welfare of the animals at any point in the journey. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate scrutinises such applications and provides advice on whether and on what terms the animals should be imported.

In all cases, relevant domestic and international transport and welfare regulations must be complied with. These are the responsibility of other Government Departments and of international bodies, such as the International Air Transport Association.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1 January 1993 he has required licences applied for under the Animals (Scientific Producers) Act 1986 to be (a) refused and (b) withheld pending amendment because of concern about the transport conditions for animals imported into the United Kingdom for use in experimentation. [31105]

Mr. George Howarth: Central records which indicate why applications were refused or withdrawn are not kept.

It is rare that licences need to be formally refused. Normally, the Inspectorate will indicate to the applicant that the licence cannot be recommended in its current form and the applicant either amends or withdraws it.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 61, where I explained that authority to acquire primates from a particular overseas source had been withdrawn because of problems relating to the transport of animals.

Handguns

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what date the decision to suspend compensation payments to handgun owners in the South Yorkshire police constabulary area was made; and for what reasons hon. Members and the relevant shooting organisations were not informed of that decision; [30216]

(2) if he will make a statement on the circumstances leading to the suspension of compensation payments to handgun owners in the South Yorkshire police constabulary area; and when he expects payments will be resumed. [30215]

Mr. Michael: Payments to gun dealers and individual claimants in South Yorkshire under the Firearms Compensation Schemes have been suspended as a result of investigations by the South Yorkshire Police. I have written to all hon. Members in South Yorkshire informing them of this development. The South Yorkshire Police are writing to all the claimants concerned and have set up a telephone inquiry line to keep claimants informed of the progress of the investigations. I understand that three police officers and one civilian employee have been suspended from duty. The first notification to Home Office officials of suspected fraudulent practices in relation to firearms compensation claims from some dealers in South Yorkshire was made on 12 November 1997.

Following a meeting between officials and police investigation officers, payments to South Yorkshire dealers were suspended, and the suspected claims were returned to the police for further analysis. On 26 January 1998, as a result of a further approach from the police investigation team, payments to individual claimants in South Yorkshire were also suspended, pending an emergency audit by the police of the claims received against the items actually surrendered.

It is inevitable that re-examination of claims by the police will cause delay and inconvenience to bona fide claimants, but it is essential that any fraudulent claims are identified. We have arranged with South Yorkshire police for claims to be validated by the police audit team in batches, rather than wait until all of the claims have been rechecked, and the Home Office team will resume processing claims as the batches are received in order to keep delay and inconvenience to a minimum.

Immigration

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report of the Consultative Seminar on Standards and Regulation of Immigration Advice undertaken by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct and the figures on representation for March 1997 from the Chief Adjudicator of the Immigration Appellate Authority. [30734]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The report and the figures provided by Judge Pearl identify problems with the standard of immigration advice and representation. Many of these have been addressed in the consultation document on the Control of Unscrupulous Immigration Advisers which was published on 22 January.

Sexual Abuse

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of sexual abuse of children by other juveniles, in the latest 10 year period available, (a) came to trial, (b) were sent to (i) a magistrates' court and (ii) a crown court, (c) involved more than one child victim giving evidence, (d) involved boy victims only, and how many of these were dealt with by magistrates' courts, (e) involved girl victims only, and how many of these were dealt with by magistrates' courts and (f) resulted in the successful conviction of a juvenile for the offence. [30461]

Mr. Michael: The available information given in the table shows the number of persons aged 10–13 and 14–17 either cautioned or proceeded against and convicted by type of court for certain sexual offences, where the victims were known to be aged under 16 years. It is not possible to identify, from the information held centrally, all sexual offences where the victim is aged under 16 years.

Police Surgeons

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 398, what estimate he has made of the number of police surgeons who are refusing to carry out intimate body searches (a) in Cheshire and (b) nationally. [29275]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 16 February 1998]: I am informed that in Cheshire none of the 17 retained police surgeons will carry out an intimate body search without the consent of the suspect. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) Drugs Sub-Committee has recently conducted a national survey of police forces to assess how widespread this situation is. I do not have statistics but I am told that a significant number of forces replied stating that they are experiencing problems of this nature. I am inviting the ACPO Drugs Sub-Committee and the British Medical Association, which has issued guidelines on the subject, to meet Home Office representatives in an attempt to find a solution.

I am glad to say that not all police surgeons take the same view. The latest statistics available show that, of a total of 132 intimate searches carried out in 1996, 128 were carried out by, or in the presence of, a registered medical practitioner or a registered nurse.

When a police surgeon declines to conduct an intimate search, the options are to use any registered medical practitioner or a registered nurse.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Removal Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of his Department's recent move from Whitehall Place West to Smith Square; and if he will make a statement. [27150]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The outturn removal costs for Ministers' offices and those of officials from Whitehall Place to the Department's accommodation at Nobel House, Smith Square, was £38,000.

Additionally alterations to Nobel House to prepare it for Ministers and senior officials cost £240,000, and £54,000 was spent on furniture and carpets for Ministerial offices. The move was completed on 24 November 1997.

Associated with this move, some staff from Nobel House were relocated to temporary accommodation at St. Christopher House, Southwark to create space for those moving from Whitehall Place. £253,000 was spent in preparing two floors at St. Christopher House for the Department's occupation. The building was already on the Government estate so there are no additional rental costs to the Exchequer. However, the Department will pay an occupancy charge (rent, rates and service costs) of £367,000 for the year to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate, an executive agency of the Office of Public Service.

Slaughter Proposals

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will propose to the Council of Agriculture Ministers the adoption of the European Commission's proposals to strengthen Council Directive 93/119EC by laying down legally binding minimum stunning currents and requiring the severing of both carotid arteries; and if he will make a statement. [30743]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend would certainly wish to give priority to advancing negotiations on these matters in the Council of Ministers. However, the European Commission has yet to submit its proposals to the Council. We are continuing to press the Commission to bring forward its overdue proposals on welfare at slaughter.

Beef on the Bone

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what statutory authority he has taken steps to ban the display of beef on the bone on a butcher's counter. [27334]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Display of beef on the bone on a butcher's counter is not prohibited under the Beef Bones Regulations 1997. However, unless accompanied by an indication that it would be deboned before being sold, display could be construed as evidence that it was intended for sale. The sale of bone-in beef to the ultimate consumer is an offence under Regulation 3 of the Beef Bones Regulations 1997.

Countryside Protection

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of agricultural support has been allocated to countryside protection in each of the last five years. [29254]

Mr. Morley: Expenditure on agri-environment and other measures which have as their primary aim the protection of the rural environment is shown in the table. The table also shows this expenditure as a percentage of total agricultural support.

Year	£ million	Percentage
1992–93	73.6	3.6
1993–94	93.8	3.2
1994–95	99.2	3.9
1995–96	117.5	4.1
1996–97[1]	127.2	[2]2.9

[2] Total agricultural support increased substantially in 1996–97, largely because of BSE-related expenditure. This is reflected in a lower percentage figure for expenditure on agri-environment and similar measures.

A number of other measures also benefit the rural environment as part of their overall objectives. These include programmes to increase awareness of the environment among the farming community, and measures in support of upland areas.

Further details can be found in table 9.1 of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1996", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Department has held with (a) statutory agencies and (b) non-governmental organisations concerning synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips. [29725]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Officials of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate are in regular contact with statutory agencies and non-governmental organisations on a variety of issues relating to veterinary medicinal products, including synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips.

Farm Values

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 606, what evidence he has evaluated to suggest that support for agriculture has been capitalised into the value of land. [30736]

Mr. Morley: There have been several studies providing evidence that agricultural support affects the value of land. A recent study on "The Social Economic Value of Agricultural Land" commissioned by the Department from Professors D. R. Harvey and K. Willis of Newcastle University summarises the theory and available evidence. Copies of this report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many beam trawlers are based at each English fishing port. [30529]

Mr. Morley: The most recent definitive information relates to end-1996 when the numbers of fishing vessels in the beam trawl segment administered from English ports were as follows:

Administrative port	Number of vessels in the beam trawl segment
Grimsby	17
Lowestoft	65
Hastings	11
Poole	10
Plymouth	10
Newlyn	38
Brixham	26
Fleetwood	3
Total English ports	180

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many British-registered foreign-owned fishing vessels there are at each English fishing port. [30528]

Mr. Morley: There are 56 British-registered fishing vessels which are regarded as being wholly or partly owned or controlled by foreign interests and which are licensed by the Department's port offices in England, although many operate predominantly out of foreign ports. The numbers and administrative port offices are set out.

Port office	Number of vessels
Grimsby	21
Brixham	1
Plymouth	15
Newlyn	19

Fishing (EU Finance)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount of EU finance for fishing in the form of (a) decommissioning grants and (b) support for construction and rebuilding grants given to (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) Spain and (iii) the Netherlands for each year since 1990, together with the amount of nationally funded support known to him. [30486]

Mr. Morley: The amount of financing for the United Kingdom is as follows:

£ million

Year	Decommissioning		Construction and modernisation, including safety improvements
	EU	National	EU	National
1989–90	—	—	4.21	5.69
1990–91	—	—	2.23	3.10
1991–92	—	—	1.49	2.28
1992–93	—	—	1.41	1.28
1993–94	5.40	2.38	0.36	1.73
1994–95	3.02	5.75	—	2.27
1995–96	3.18	6.44	0.36	2.42
1996–97	5.68	4.55	1.05	0.90

Only limited information is held on support in other Member States. That most readily available relates to total EU expenditure in 1986–93 as published by the European Commission[1].

£ million

	Decommissioning	Construction	Modernisation
Spain	182.64	105.96	58.05
Netherlands	53.46	—	1.62

No figures are available for actual expenditure in these countries from 1994 onwards. Planned expenditure under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance as set out in sectoral plans for the period 1994–99[1] adopted by the European Commission is as follows:

£ million

	Decommissioning		Construction and Modernisation
	EU	Nat	EU	Nat
Spain	422.6	215.5	435.5	160.7

Fishery Quotas

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 374, on the system of national quotas, what type of derogation the system of national quotas constitutes. [30692]

Mr. Morley: The system of national quotas under the Common Fisheries Policy derogates without time limit from the principle of equal access.

Genetically Modified Rapeseed

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the application for national seed listings submitted to his Department by Plant Genetic Systems, for genetically engineered varieties of oilseed rape, known as Socrates and Archimedes (PHY31 and PHY35), has been stopped. [31088]

Mr. Morley: No, the applications have not been stopped. However, no decision about whether to place these varieties on the National List will be taken until the appropriate marketing consents have been issued by the French authorities in accordance with Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the release of genetically modified organisms to the environment. In December 1996, Member States voted in favour of this genetically modified oilseed rape being placed on the market and the decision was published in the Official Journal. However, the French Competent Authority, who have responsibility for giving these consents to Plant Genetic Systems, have not yet implemented the decision.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 608, concerning IACS forms, if he will establish systems to (a) monitor the effectiveness of the use of IACS and similar forms and to (b) improve the accuracy of information supplied on the forms and the efficiency of its processing. [30684]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 February 1998]: These issues are being considered as part of a study currently underway into the processes used by the Department to deliver CAP scheme payments. The results of the study, which is being carried out by Coopers & Lybrand Management Consultants working with the Department and the Efficiency Unit of the Cabinet Office, will be considered by Ministers as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the outcome of which will be made public later this year.

Poultrymeat

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the poultrymeat residue testing programmes of Thailand and Brazil together with the test results. [30943]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Under EC Directive 96/23/EC, any third country wishing to export fresh meat to the European Union (EU) must submit residue testing plans to the EU Commission, as the Commission has competence in this area. The Commission does not publish the residue testing programmes of third countries or the test results that derive from them.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated annual cost of the residue testing programme for the United Kingdom poultrymeat sector as required by Directive 96/23/EC; and what estimate he has made of the total cost to the sector of the EU fixed standard charges. [31101]

Mr. Rooker: The Charges for Inspections and Controls Regulations 1997 implement in GB the provisions of Directive 96/43/EC. This Directive requires member states to recover the actual costs of surveillance arising from the requirements of Directive 96/23/EC from the industry affected and lays down minimum charges in respect of redmeat, poultrymeat, farmed fish, game and milk. In the case of poultry, the income raised by setting the charge at the EU minimum will exceed the cost of the surveillance programmes and in this situation the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) is obliged by Directive 96/43/EC to levy the EU minimum charge.

The VMD currently estimates the cost of the surveillance programme in Great Britain to be £0.811 million and the cost to the industry, based on a charge of £1,0461 per tonne of poultrymeat produced, to be £1.3 million.

The Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland is responsible for the implementation of Directives 96/23 and 96/43 in Northern Ireland.

Milk

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend the pasteurisation of milk; what species will be included; and if he will make a statement. [30729]

Mr. Rooker: We have no definite plans. We are consulting on a proposal to ban sales of raw cows' drinking milk throughout the UK, and will consider the issues in the light of the consultation responses and the scientific advice.

Beef Imports

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 350, on beef imports, when he will be able to provide figures for January 1998. [30452]

Mr. Rooker: Overseas Trade Statistics for January 1998 will be available towards the end of April 1998.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list his Department's power to control the conditions under which animals destined for use in experimentation are imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [31098]

Mr. Morley: All animals imported into the UK are subject to the new animal transport rules that were introduced last year. Importers are required to give a written undertaking that arrangements have been made to comply with the terms of EU Directive 91/628 on the protection of animals during transport. The animals must not be transported in a way that causes or could cause injury or unnecessary suffering, and strict rules covering the construction and maintenance of the receptacles and means of transport used must be complied with. In addition, under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats, and Other Mammals) Order 1974 (as amended), rabies susceptible mammals imported into the UK must be licensed and must undergo 6 months quarantine on arrival at an authorised quarantine premises, with the exception of certain traded animals from other EC Member States that comply with the requirements of Council Directive 92/65/EEC.

Fishing Industry

Ms Osborne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of discussions with the fishing industry on arrangements to implement United Kingdom obligations under MAGP IV, with particular reference to the introduction of effort controls in the pelagic and beam trawl segments; and if he will make a statement. [31038]

Mr. Morley: As I explained to the House on 17 December 1997, Official Report, columns 227–29, the progress made during negotiations with the European Commission on the UK's detailed plans for implementing MAGP IV, together with the results of the 1997 Decommissioning Scheme, mean that, provided fishing effort in other fleet segments does not increase, immediate further action in 1998 can be limited to the introduction of effort controls in the pelagic and beam trawl segments.

I also explained that the Government's preference was for such controls to be managed by the industry itself and that detailed discussions with the fishermen concerned would be held without delay. As a result of those meetings, it has been possible for the fishing effort available in 1998 to be allocated between the various Producer Organisations (POs) or groups of fishermen concerned. The allocations are, however, provisional and will need to be reviewed as definitive information about activity in 1997 becomes available.

All POs and groups have been invited to manage their uptake of effort to stay within these allocations on whatever basis they and their members consider appropriate within their constitutions. The Government are not seeking to impose any particular formula for this and are not making any allocations of effort to individual vessels. POs and groups will therefore have the flexibility to respond to local circumstances and, within their allocations, to take account of any special factors affecting particular members. I would expect them to do this in a fair and responsible way in accordance with their rules. These arrangements are expected to cover virtually all vessels definitively assigned to both segments this year. There may, however, be a few vessels which remain outside PO or other membership, for which a separate non-sector effort allocation will operate.

Where POs or groups remain within their effort allocations no further action by Government will be needed. But in cases where monitoring shows risks that allocations will be exceeded, POs or groups will be warned and fishing by their members suspended, through the licensing mechanism, if no appropriate response is made.

Guidance on the arrangements for measuring and monitoring fishing effort is being issued to all fishermen concerned and copies will be placed in the Library of the House shortly, together with details of the provisional effort allocations.

In addition to the above, certain limited changes are being introduced for distant water vessels, which were the subject of a separate consultation exercise with those concerned. These are designed to reflect the possibility of effort outside EU waters being varied in line with fishing opportunities, as provided for in Article 8 of Council Decision 97/413/EC. But any such requests need also to be cleared with the European Commission and will be subject to examination on a case by case basis.

All the above changes are without prejudice to the further consultations on the operation of the licensing system, which I announced on 17 December, and to the review of the current moratorium on the issue of distant water licences, which will be taking place shortly.

The Government recognise that the introduction of these effort management measures represents a new development in fisheries policy. We are alive to the concerns of the industry and will be seeking to ensure that the details of implementation are as practically devised as possible. The arrangements will be kept under review and, in particular, we shall want to consider the possible need for changes at the time of the Commission's interim review of MAGP IV in the first quarter of 1999.

BSE

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to implement the recommendations in the SEAC Review. [31499]

Dr. John Cunningham: The review recommended a number of additional appointments to the Committee including an expert from the Institute for Animal Health and a representative of the public interest. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health, for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland and I have made the following appointments to the Committee:

Professor Adriano Aguzzi;

Professor Roy Anderson FRS;

Professor Anne Ferguson;

Dr. Peter Goodfellow FRS;

Mrs. Harriet Kimbell, Representative of the public interest;

Dr. Christopher Bostock, Representative of the Institute for Animal Health.

The review recommended that members not on fixed-term appointments who had served fewer than three or six years should be formally appointed up to the end of the 3rd and 6th year respectively; and that those who had served more than 6 years should be put on a fixed appointment for one year, all with the possibility of extension in individual cases. The following additional terms on the Committee commencing on 1 January 1998 have been offered to, and accepted by, members:

Professor Sir. John Pattison (Chairman) and Dr. Robert Will, Director of the CJD Surveillance Unit, (Deputy Chairman), a further 3 years;

Professor Fred Brown FRS, Dr. Richard Kimberlin, Mr. David Pepper and Dr. William Watson, who have served on SEAC for more than 6 years, a further one year;

Professor William Hueston, who has served on SEAC for more than 4 years, a further two years.

The review also recommended that SEAC meetings should be attended by; a technical adviser from the Central Veterinary Laboratory of the Department's Veterinary Laboratory Agency; an observer from the Health and Safety Executive; and an observer from the Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy (TSE) Research and Development Funders' Co-ordination Group, which represents the major funders of TSE research.

All other recommendations of the review have been implemented. An Annual Report will be published later this year and we will announce proposals for the participation of the Food Standards Agency in the Secretariat in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the rates of absenteeism in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if he will make a statement. [26662]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Statistics about sick absence in the FCO will be available later this year and could not be provided now except at disproportionate cost. While the FCO has always collected data on sick absence for individual monitoring and pay purposes, the system has been computerised only since the beginning of 1997. Since then we have been keying in back data from January 1994 which will allow us to make comparisons with previous years, to identify any patterns and to benchmark against other organisations. Software to generate statistical reports of staff absences during a specified period (including the lengths of absences and the number of staff who have taken sick absence, broken down by grade and post) will be developed and tested this year.

My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, will send the hon. Member sick absence statistics for the FCO as soon as they are available.

Correspondence

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy for responding to letters received in the (a) Scottish Gaelic, (b) Welsh, (c) Urdu, (d) Hindi and (e) Chinese languages. [28057]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 10 February 1998]: We respond to any letters received no matter in what language. We normally reply in English to letters dealt with in the UK and, where appropriate, in a local language to letters dealt with by our Posts overseas.

NATO Headquarters, Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of NATO headquarters from Gibraltar. [30808]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 298.

Iraq

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost to the United Kingdom in terms of (a) manpower and (b) finance for each year of operation of the UN Special Commission on Iraq. [30932]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We support UNSCOM by providing expert personnel on a cost-free basis. The breakdown of costs for each year of our support is:

Year	£ million to date
1997–98	1.2
1996–97	0.9
1995–96	1.1
1994–95	1.0
1993–94	0.6
1992–93	0.9

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government has taken, other than seeking intergovernmental assurances, to ensure that military equipment sold abroad by British companies is not used for (a) internal repression and (b) acts of extra-border military aggression. [30831]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, in which he announced criteria to be used in considering licence applications for conventional arms exports. These specified inter alia that an export licence would not be issued if the proposed export might be used for internal repression or aggressively against another country. All applications since then have been considered against these criteria.

Israel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to ensure Israel implements United Nations Security Council resolutions passed in respect of Israel and her neighbouring states. [30832]

Mr. Fatchett: We will continue to give our firm support to the Middle East peace process to bring about a comprehensive settlement based on clearly stated positions of principle and international legality with regard to Israel. We have made clear to Israel that the implementation of existing agreements, based on UN Security Resolutions 242, 338, and 425 and the principle of 'land for peace' is fundamental to a just and lasting peace with her neighbours.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the size of Israel's (a) nuclear and (b) chemical weapon arsenal. [30833]

Mr. Fatchett: We remain concerned about reports that Israel may have a nuclear weapons programme and chemical weapons. We continue to urge Israel to allay international suspicions on both fronts: by, acceding to the Non-Proliferation Treaty as a non-nuclear weapon State and concluding a full-scope safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency; and by ratifying the Chemical Weapons Convention which Israel signed in 1993.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to secure the release of Mordechai Vanunu. [30834]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no formal standing to intervene in this case as there is no evidence of any illegality prior to Mr. Vanunu's departure from the United Kingdom. However, we do take opportunities to raise with the Israeli authorities the matter of Mr. Vanunu's solitary confinement. I did so during my visit to Israel last month.

Caribbean (Nuclear Waste)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received during his recent visit to the Bahamas from his Bahamian counterpart on the risks of nuclear waste and materials shipments through the Caribbean. [30835]

Mr. Fatchett: Shipments of vitrified nuclear waste and spent fuel through the Caribbean were discussed fully at the UK/Caribbean forum in Nassau on 13 February. Many Caribbean countries were represented at ministerial level. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary reassured countries in the region about concerns over safety and liability.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the proposed International Criminal Court. [31448]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully support the creation of an effective International Criminal Court to try those accused of the most serious crimes of international concern. We are continuing to play an active part in the negotiations which aim to agree the establishment of such a Court at the Diplomatic Conference in Rome this summer. To assist the negotiating process we are convening, as the EU Presidency, a group of EU experts on the subject at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 25–26 February. We are also contributing $100,000 to a UN Trust Fund to assist representatives of the 48 Least Developed Countries to attend the Diplomatic Conference and the remaining meeting of the Preparatory Committee. I have today placed in the Libraries of the House a paper setting out our policy on the Court in greater detail.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what examination he has made of the application of UN General Assembly Resolution No. 1514 to the former residents of Diego Garcia; and if he will make a statement. [30966]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory are British, and have been since 1814 when ceded by France. We do not accept that they were ever an integral part of Mauritius. We do not therefore consider that General Assembly Resolution 1514, which was concerned with the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country, has any application to the Territory.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the situation of former residents of Diego Garcia in Mauritius; if he will take steps to enable them to return to Diego Garcia; and if he will make a statement. [30794]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Successive British Governments have given generous financial assistance to help with the resettlement of the Ilois in Mauritius. It is possible for the Ilois to apply for contract work at the defence facility on Diego Garcia. But given the absence of infrastructure needed to sustain inhabitation, a wider return by them to the other islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory is not a realistic prospect.

Kuwait

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Kuwait concerning (a) democratic rights and (b) the rights of non-Kuwaitis legally resident; and if he will make a statement. [30767]

Mr. Fatchett: During my visit to Kuwait in June 1997 and in meetings with senior Kuwaiti visitors since, I have discussed democratic development and commended the role of the directly elected National Assembly. We raise other issues, including the rights of non-Kuwaiti nationals, as appropriate.

Bosnia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations relating to human rights were made to his Department's Ministers during visits to Bosnia; and if he will make a statement. [30768]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regularly discuss human rights issues in Bosnia with the Bosnian authorities and others concerned with this aspect of implementation of the Dayton Agreement. The issue figured prominently in discussions during my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's visit to Bosnia in July 1997 and my own in October. The human rights agenda in Bosnia is moving forward but much remains to be done, especially on refugee return to all parts of Bosnia, a free media and transfer of war crimes indictees to the International Criminal Tribunal in the Hague. Respect for human rights is crucial to full implementation of the Dayton Agreement, a fact which was underlined strongly at the Peace Implementation Conference in Bonn (December 1997). Together with our partners and Allies, we are keeping up the pressure on all the parties in Bosnia to meet their obligations in this regard.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the powers the Governor of St. Helena has relating to planning permission and the erection of buildings independently of any resolution passed or act done by the Legislative Council of the island. [30991]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Governor, St. Helena, has no powers relating to planning permission and the erection of buildings outside any resolution passed or act done by the Legislative Council of the island.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

East Africa

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the level of aid to East African countries in 1997. [30475]

Clare Short: The figures for calendar year 1997 are not yet available. However, it is expected that in the 1997–98 financial year the total amount of UK bilateral development assistance to the East African countries of Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda will be over £100 million. This figure does not include the UK's share of multilateral development assistance to the region.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of aid to East Africa is being used to finance Government-sponsored (a) public health projects and (b) education projects. [30476]

Clare Short: Calendar year figures for 1997 are not yet available. However, it is estimated that in 1997–98 financial year the proportion of UK bilateral development assistance to the East African countries of Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda used to finance health and education improvements will be between 23 per cent. and 26 per cent. for each sector.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC Officers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 14 January 1998, Official Report, column 333, if she will list the perceived religion of (a) sergeants and (b) inspectors in the RUC in percentage terms. [24106]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The perceived religion of sergeants in the RUC as at 2 February 1998 was 90.4 per cent. Protestant, 7.81 per cent. Roman Catholic and 1.79 per cent. undetermined. For inspectors, at the same date, the figures were 86.78 per cent., 9.92 per cent. and 3.3 per cent. respectively.

Bombings

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of which terrorist organisation planted the recent bombs at Market Hill, Banbridge and Enniskillen; and if she will make a statement on each incident. [26742]

Mr. Ingram: The police believe at this time that the Continuity IRA were responsible for these bombing attacks.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of members of the judiciary and other consultees who were asked for an opinion on the suitability of applicants for silk, declined to express an opinion in the last year for which figures are available. [30384]

Mr. Ingram: Records are not maintained in a form that would permit this question to be answered.

RUC, Antrim Road

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when and who signed the contract on behalf of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland for the purchase of land at Antrim Road, Belfast, where RUC Antrim Road now stands; if the Common Seal was applied; and if the transaction was numbered and recorded in the book provided. [29220]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The purchase of land at Antrim Road, Belfast, for the RUC Antrim Road complex was acquired in two parts. The first part consisting of 10 properties was acquired by way of a Vesting Order, signed by the Secretary of State on 14 October 1974.

The second part consisting of two properties was acquired by Private Treaty in 1979. The contracts for both properties were signed by Senior Officials of the Police Authority. The Common Seal was not applied as there was no provision nor requirement to do so for this type of transaction. Transactions are numbered and recorded only where the Common Seal has been applied.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will place in the Library copies of the (a) correspondence, (b) surveys, (c) contracts, (d) minutes of the Police Authority and (e) other relevant material concerning the purchase of land at Antrim Road, Belfast, for the building of a police station. [29221]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The correspondence, surveys, contracts, minutes and other relevant material requested contain information which should not be disclosed for security reasons. Therefore the information requested will not be placed in the Library.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which members of the Police Authority declared a pecuniary or other interest in the purchase of land at Antrim Road, Belfast, for the building of a police station. [29222]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The late Sir Myles Humphreys, the then Chairman of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, declared an interest in No. 11 Cavehill Road, a property the purchase of which was under consideration by the Police Authority.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who were the vendors of land at Antrim Road, Belfast, purchased for the building of RUC Antrim Road, Belfast; and what was the purchase price paid by the Police Authority. [29223]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The following properties 274, 276, 278, 280, 282, 286 and 288 Antrim Road and 9 and 35 Cavehill Road—were vested by the Secretary of State in 1974. Two further properties—11 and 13 Cavehill Road—were purchased by the Authority in 1979. The names of the vendors cannot be released for security reasons. Records for prices paid for the properties are incomplete. However prices paid for eight of the twelve properties totalled £61,750.

Police (Personal Equipment Purchases)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list by item and amount the personal fitness equipment purchased since June 1989 by (a) the Police Authority and (b) the RUC from public funds for the use of chief officers at RUC Headquarters Brooklyn; and what is the present location and value of the equipment. [29224]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Since July 1989 two items of personal fitness equipment have been purchased by the Police Authority for use by Chief Officers at RUC Headquarters, Brooklyn. No items have been purchased by the RUC. The individual items comprised a ski machine costing £699 and a rowing machine costing £600.

The ski machine has since been disposed of due to its dilapidated condition. The rowing machine is now located within a police station fitness room and has an estimated residual value of £300.

Seapark Complex

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which estate agents and surveyors were involved in the identification and sale of the Seapark Complex at any stage; to whom commissions were paid; and what was the amount. [29964]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: No estate agents or surveyors were involved in the identification and sale of the Seapark Complex. The Valuation and Lands Agency act for and on behalf of the Police Authority in such matters and it is not possible to segregate the fee paid as the charge levied by the Valuation and Lands Agency was part of an annual fee.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will place in the Library copies of the (a) correspondence, (b) surveys, (c) contracts, (d) minutes of the Police Authority and (e) other relevant material concerning the purchase, development and subsequent asbestos problems at the Seapark Complex. [29216]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The correspondence, surveys, contracts, minutes and other relevant material requested contain information which should not be disclosed for security reasons. Therefore the information requested will not be placed in the Library.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who signed the contract on 4 March 1988 on behalf of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland for the purchase of the Seapark Complex, Carrickfergus; if the Common Seal was applied; and if the transaction was numbered and recorded in the book provided. [29215]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: A Senior Official of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland signed the contract for the purchase of the Seapark Complex. The Common Seal was not applied as there was no provision nor requirement to do so for this type of transaction. Transactions are numbered and recorded only where the Common Seal has been applied.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which members of the Police Authority declared a pecuniary or other interest in the purchase of the Seapark Complex between 1986 and 1989. [29217]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Mr. T. Rainey, the then Chairman of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland (and former Managing Director of Rothmans International Tobacco (UK) Ltd.) declared an interest in the Authority's considerations relating to the purchase of Seapark.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons professional surveys carried out at the Seapark Complex before purchase by the Police Authority failed to reveal the presence of an asbestos problem. [29218]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Professional surveys carried out at Seapark prior to its purchase by the Police Authority indicated the presence of asbestos based materials in a number of areas within the complex. The survey concluded that in the majority of cases the material did not constitute a hazard to health and could remain until such times as planned building works required its removal. In those cases where the material was considered to constitute a hazard to health, it was removed.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the cost and remit of each of the professional, architectural, structural, mechanical and electrical surveys carried out before the purchase of the Seapark Complex; and what steps are being taken to establish the reasons for the failure to identify the subsequent problems with asbestos material. [29219]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 February 1998]: In February 1987 the Police Authority commissioned the Department of the Environment to carry out an urgent property condition report on the Rothmans Carreras Factory at Seapark. The Police Authority indicated that it would be content to receive a report based on preliminary findings relating to the condition of the property, both architecturally and structurally, and on the standard of mechanical and electrical services.

The presence of asbestos material was recorded in the initial condition survey and all subsequent decisions took this into account.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) he and (b) other Ministers within his Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23755]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 19 January 1998]: None.

Private Water Supplies

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the potential environmental implications in respect of private water supplies associated with the withdrawal of the rendering industry support scheme; what discussions he has had with SEPA on the issue; and if he will make a statement. [30548]

Mr. Macdonald: The withdrawal of Government support to the rendering industry should have no implications for the water supply, either public or private, provided existing guidelines on the disposal of animal carcases are observed by the agricultural community. My officials are monitoring the situation and are in regular contact with SEPA and other enforcement interests.

Children's Hearings

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on what measures he is taking to speed up the throughput of cases entering the children's hearing system. [31501]

Mr. Galbraith: Last July I invited Mrs. Sally Kuenssberg, Chairman of the Scottish Children's Reporter Administration, to form a working group to investigate what could be done to reduce the time interval between a case being referred to the children's reporter and disposal by a children's hearing. The group has now reported and I have today placed a copy of the report "Just in Time" in the House Library.

The report is a valuable analysis of the delays experienced in the hearings system and puts forward many constructive suggestions for overcoming them. I have endorsed the general approach in the report and have written to the key agencies concerned to encourage inter-agency co-operation wherever possible.

The report makes 74 recommendations, some of which can be implemented immediately through the Administration. For the remainder, I have asked Mrs. Kuenssberg's group to take forward this work in consultation with the agencies concerned and to consider what practical measures might be taken to implement these in the medium and long term. The group will initially have one year to undertake this work and I have asked for an interim report by September.

Land Reform Policy Group

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Land Reform Policy Group plans to consult on its work. [30916]

Mr. Dewar: I am pleased to announce that tomorrow the Land Reform Policy Group is issuing its first consultation paper.

The Group, chaired by my noble Friend the Minister for Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries, is undertaking an assessment of proposals for land reform in rural Scotland. Excellent progress has been made since the Group was established last October, and its first consultation paper seeks views on what are the most significant problems and issues in relation to land reform. In the summer, the Group will consult again on what are the best solutions. I know that these are issues that raise great interest and concern in Scotland and I hope that as many people as possible will take the opportunity to respond.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teacher Training

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new entrants into teacher training have been recorded since the launch of the publicity campaign, No-one Forgets a Good Teacher; and what proportion of those new entrants had expressed an interest in the profession prior to the launch. [30986]

Ms Estelle Morris: The response to the Teacher Training Agency's (TTA) advertising campaign has been very positive. Between October 1997 and January 1998 the TTA's Teaching Information Line received 25,418 inquiries, a 76 per cent. increase above the same period in the previous year. And in January 1998 there were on average 53,000 hits per week to the TTA's website, compared to around 13,500 hits per week in September 1997. We will not know how many new entrants have entered teacher training until the autumn, which will be the first intake following the publicity campaign and we have no information on the proportion of such entrants who may have expressed an interest in teaching prior to the launch of the campaign.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications for places were received by grammar schools for 1997–98; and how many places were available. [30731]

Mr. Byers: This information is not held centrally.

Higher Education

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will implement the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education recommendations for additional funding for the higher education sector in 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [31246]

Dr. Howells: We have announced a package of measure which will allow the higher education sector to spend an extra £165 million in 1998–99. This includes an additional £125 million for universities and colleges in England to maintain and improve quality and standards, and to make a start on the backlog of maintenance and equipment replacement. The package meets the Dearing Committee's first priority of limiting the real terms reduction in funding per student to 1 per cent.

Decisions for 1999–2000 and beyond will be taken in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. But we have made clear that savings from the new funding arrangements for higher education would be used to improve quality, standards and opportunities for all in further and higher education.

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of pupils from (a) grammar schools, (b) independent schools, (c) grant-maintained schools and (d) comprehensive schools went into higher education in 1997–98. [30732]

Dr. Howells: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table gives the prior educational establishment of students who accepted full-time and sandwich undergraduate places through the Universities & Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) in Autumn 1997.

Numbers of students accepting[1] places in higher education in autumn 1997 by prior educational establishment

	UCAS acceptances
	Number	Per cent.
Total maintained, of which:	100,226	40
Grammar schools	18,643	7
Comprehensive schools	77,241	31
Other maintained	4,342	2
Independent schools	31,342	12
Further education colleges	103,894	41
Other	16,959	7
Total[2]	252,421	100

[1] Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) data cover students of all ages accepting places on full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses throughout the UK.

[2] The total excludes 51 thousand students whose prior education establishments are not known.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will reassess the budget allocation to Welfare to Work schemes for (i) unemployed (a) disabled people, (b) lone parents, (c) young people and (ii) long-term unemployed people to take account of changes in unemployment levels over the last six months. [31057]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are keeping the budgets of our Welfare to Work programmes under review in the light of the numbers of eligible people, the effectiveness of the programmes and any further policy developments.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of disabled people who will benefit from the Welfare to Work scheme for disabled people in its first year of operation. [31096]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Many people on sickness and disability benefits wish to work but lack the necessary support or encouragement to do so. Through the New Deal for Disabled People we will be exploring the forms of practical help that are effective in helping disabled people to work. Until we see the results of the first year pilots it would not be sensible to predict the likely numbers of those who will secure work through this approach.

WALES

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26614]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 5 February 1998]: There have been no empty Welsh Office properties in the years 1995–96 to date. Information is not held centrally for agencies and public bodies.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27740]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The available figures are as follows:

	Welsh Office	Cadw
May 1997 to date	9,734	147

Records for expenditure by NDPBs are not held centrally.

St. David's and Glan Hafren Secondary Schools

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much funding St. David's and Glan Hafren secondary schools are receiving in the current year; and what these amounts are per pupil. [30798]

Mr. Hain: St. David's RC Sixth Form College and Coleg Glan Hafren are further education institutions.

In the current academic year, the Further Education Funding Council for Wales has allocated £1,925,152 to St. David's RC Sixth Form College and £9,386,568 to Coleg Glan Hafren. The amounts per students, based on full-time equivalents, are £2,137 and £2,617 respectively.

Bill Boards (Schools)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what regulations govern the raising of revenue by schools through the erection of bill boards on their premises. [30949]

Mr. Hain: None. The right of a LEA maintained school to raise and retain income from fees and charges is controlled by the terms and conditions contained in the Local Management of Schools scheme of the relevant authority.

Inward Investment (LG)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the financial assistance offered to LG to invest in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [31014]

Mr. Hain: The total value of the assistance package offered to LG is estimated to be £247 million.

The LG project is an exceptional one promising over 6,000 direct new jobs and is likely to generate thousands more indirect jobs.

Flax

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to encourage the planting of flax; and if he will make a statement. [30955]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Flax is a useful alternative crop grown to produce renewable raw materials. Provided it is planted on suitable land, its cultivation is environmentally friendly. It receives support under a specific CAP regime of which farmers are aware.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Junior Board

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) when the first meeting of the junior board for the Millennium Experience is scheduled; and if he will publish the agenda; [29557]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 399, when he expects to make a statement on the membership and terms of reference for the junior board of the Millennium Experience. [29783]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) on 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 517.

Millennium Experience

Ms Oona King: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the ways in which the Millennium Experience project at Greenwich will reflect the Government's environmental priorities. [27922]

Mr. Mandelson: There will be a number of zones with an environmental theme. In "Living Island" visitors will be able to see what they can do to make a difference to our environment in the future through everyday choices. The "Atmosphere" zone will allow visitors to experience the natural wonders of our planet. The National Programme of events associated with the Millennium Experience will offer further opportunities for making a difference on the local environment, through understanding, maintaining and protecting our environment and natural treasures.

A multi-modal integrated public transport system will provide a variety of means of reaching the Experience, including the Jubilee line extension and river boat services. The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is also working in partnership with the Environment Agency and English Partnerships (the Government's urban regeneration agency) to regenerate the Greenwich Peninsula site. As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 18 February, the Millennium Village on the southern end of the site will be a flagship urban development scheme, designed to be a showpiece of environmental sustainability.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when he has met (a) Mr. John Birt and (b) Ms Elisabeth Murdoch; and what was the (i) purpose and (ii) outcome of each meeting. [30609]

Mr. Mandelson: I have met Mr. Birt in my official capacity on 5 December 1997, and Ms Murdoch on 20 February 1998, to discuss issues relating to the Millennium Experience.

Sponsorship

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what level of sponsorship has to date been achieved in respect of the Millennium Experience at Greenwich. [31195]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is today announcing its first four Founding Partners: BT, Manpower, Sky and Tesco. These four companies are each committing a minimum of £12 million value to the overall Millennium Experience. The Company is also announcing signed confirmation of the commitments of British Airways and BAA. Together, those six companies are making a direct private sector contribution of nearly £59 million.

The New Millennium Experience Company also has commitments coming up for detailed negotiation which would add a further £16 million, taking the overall level of support to £75 million; and the Company is in serious negotiation with 40 other potential sponsors.

The NMEC is also announcing today that it has reached agreement in principle with Camelot to be the official distributor of tickets for the Millennium Experience at Greenwich. This will mean that there is a ticket outlet within 3 miles of 95% of the population of the United Kingdom.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the National Audit Office is subject to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information; and if it will be subject to the proposed Freedom of Information Act. [30467]

Dr. David Clark: The National Audit Office is not within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and is therefore not subject to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The position of the National Audit Office with regard to the proposed FOI Act is still under consideration.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Pension

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the effect on gross expenditure on the basic state pension in each of the five financial years from 1999–2000 onwards if, with effect from April 1998, employees who paid national insurance contributions on earnings above the national average over the course of a given year after April 1998 were regarded as having satisfied the contribution conditions for half a year instead of a full year in respect of that year. [24982]

Mr. Denham: The effects on gross expenditure in the fist five years would be negligible[1].

[1] Less than £50 million gross expenditure on the basic State pension in 1999–2000 is estimated at over £31 billion.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) number and (b) proportion of pensioners did not claim their state pension at age 60 years for women or age 65 years for men in 1997 because they (i) deferred claiming it or (ii) failed to make their claim. [24809]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available. People are not required to inform the Department that they wish to defer claiming their pension, although some 6,000 people in 1995/96 did let the Department know that they were doing so. Increments are earned in all cases where someone puts off receiving their pension for at least seven weeks during the five years starting on the day they reach pensionable age.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish an analysis for each quintile of pensioner income for single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner households on the same basis as that given in the answer of 3 March 1997, Official Report, columns 525–56, for the latest year for which figures are available. [25125]

Mr. Denham: The information has been placed in the Library.

Lone Parents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the 433 lone parents who she announced in October had gained employment through the New Deal for Lone Parents are (a) in the same employment as they were then, (b) have changed to other employment or (c) are no longer in employment. [24591]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Information is not available in the form requested.

Of the first 433 lone parents who gained employment through the New Deal for Lone Parents 49 are now in receipt of Income Support and have no earnings.

The evaluation report on the New Deal for Lone Parents, which will published in 1999, will contain information on these three issues.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what powers she has after April 1998 to make supplementary payments of premiums to lone parents presently with maintenance from absent parents where variations or cessations of such maintenance cause the income of the lone parent with care to fall below income support entitlement levels. [22982]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All lone parents making a new claim for Income Support on or after 6 April 1998 will receive the same level of family premium as couples with children. Existing recipients will continue to receive the higher rate. There will be no cash losers.

We are looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support Agency to ensure that it provides a modern, efficient and effective service. The receipt of regular maintenance is a key part of the Government's strategy for helping lone mothers into work and one of our key objectives for the Child Support Agency in the coming year is that it chases up fathers who avoid paying maintenance.

Appeals

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what have been the costs to her Department in each of the last five years in respect of appeals against (a) Benefits Agency benefit determinations, (b) War Pension Agency determinations and (c) Child Support Agency determinations; and what elements are taken into account in those figures. [22864]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Financial allocations made for processing appeals work within the Benefits Agency (BA) for the four financial years from 1994–95 onwards

Year	£ million
1994–95	3.5
1995–96	9.0
1996–97	13.3

Note:

The figures take into account the whole cost of administering appeals including non-staff costs. The rising costs during the first three years are attributable to a large increase in the number of appeals and an increase in salaries. The basis upon which the cost estimates have been provided may not be consistent across the years. The reduction in the figures for 1997–98 is accounted for by increased Information Technology usage, which has reduced the unit cost of appeals, and a forecasted reduction in volumes.

The Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) has provided the following cost data in respect of BA appeals it has cleared:

Year	£ million
1994–95	34.2
1995–96	39.8
1996–97	50.6

Note:

The figures quoted have been calculated by dividing the total annual cost figures for ITS by the total number of appeals cleared, and then multiplying by the number of BA and Child Support Agency (CSA) appeals. ITS are unable to split the costs accurately between BA and CSA appeals and the figures quoted do not take account of the differing cost of each type of tribunal.

Direct costs in respect of appeals against war pensions agency (WPA) determinations since April 1994

Year	£ million
1994–95	3.5
1995–96	2.8
1996–97	3.0
1997–98	2.9

Notes:

1. The above figures are made up of staff cost and associated non-staff expenditure.

2. WPA appeals are heard by the Pensions Appeal Tribunal which is funded by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Financial allocations made to the CSA's central appeals unit for appeals processing for the three financial years from 1995–96 onwards

Year	£ million
1995–96	3.1
1996–97	3.6
1997–98	3.4

Note:

The above figures are made up of staff cost and associated non-staff expenditure.

The Independent Tribunal Service has provided the following cost data in respect of CSA appeals it has cleared:

Year	£ million
1995–96	2.7
1996–97	3.4
1997–98 (forecast)	3.5

Note:

The figures quoted have been calculated by dividing the total annual cost figures for ITS by the total number of appeals cleared, and then multiplying by the number of BA and CSA appeals. As stated in above, ITS are unable to split the costs accurately between BA and CSA appeals and, again, the figures quoted do not take account of the differing cost of each type of tribunal.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26618]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 5 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) on 9 February 1998, Official Report, columns 16–17.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis, in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27746]

Brain Injuries

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the impact of the Welfare to Work policies on people suffering from brain injuries. [27952]

Mr. Denham: The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. We have set aside up to £195 under the New Deal for people with a disability or long-term illness to fund a programme improving opportunities for those who want to work. Participation in the New Deal, which will be voluntary, will not be restricted to people suffering from any particular disability or long-term illness. People suffering from disabilities arising from brain injuries will be eligible, along with other groups. The impact of our Welfare to Work programme will be evaluated in due course.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research she has commissioned into the employment prospects of people suffering from brain injuries. [27950]

Mr. Denham: The Department has funded a substantial programme of research into people with disabilities, including information on their employment prospects, but none of the recent studies focuses specifically on people suffering from brain injuries.

State Pensions (Women)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women over the age of 60 years are solely reliant on half state pensions. [27251]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Of those women receiving the basic State pension at 30 September 1997, 0.7 million received £31.23 or less per week (that is half the basic State pension of £62.45 per week). A further 2.2 million women received a basic Retirement Pension of £37.35 (equivalent to the married women's rate) or less per week.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of people formerly receiving incapacity benefit whose cases have been evaluated under the Benefit Integrity Scheme and who are (a) continuing to receive incapacity benefit, (b) in full-time employment, (c) in part-time employment and (d) receiving some benefit other than incapacity benefit which they were not receiving at the time of the evaluation. [27165]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project does not include Incapacity Benefit.

Working Mothers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 566 what is the average age of lone mothers included in each survey used for the table on Lone Mother Labour Participation. [27114]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out. The original data source for the written answer on 21 January 1998 "The employment of lone parents: a comparison of policy in 20 countries" by J. Bradshaw, S. Kennedy, M. Kilkey, S. Hutton, A. Corden, T. Eardley, H. Holmes and J. Neale also gives figures for the percentage of lone parents under the age of 25 in paid employment for some EC countries.

Spain: 78 per cent.

Portugal: 68 per cent.

Italy: 67 per cent.

Germany: 53 per cent.

Netherlands: 22 per cent.

UK: 19 per cent.

Norway: 17 per cent.

Welfare Reform (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will represent the interests of Wales on the Cabinet Committee on Welfare Reform. [27149]

Mr. Field: The Secretary of State has responsibility for the Social Security system in Wales as in the rest of the United Kingdom. It falls to her therefore to represent interests across the UK within the Ministerial Group.

Benefits Take-up

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage take up for each benefit; and what would be the additional cost, by each benefit, if there were full take up. [28560]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Estimates of the percentage take-up and the additional cost of 100 per cent. take-up for each of the income related benefits in 1995–96 is set out in the table.

Information is not available for other benefits.

Note:
The single point estimates for Family Credit should not be regarded as any more accurate than the range estimates presented for other benefits. Ideally range estimates would be produced for Family Credit as well but this is not possible.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) of 6 February 1998, Official Report, columns 813–14, on the jobseeker's allowance, if she will revoke the Jobseeker's Allowance (Amendment) Regulations 1998 (S.I. 1998 No. 71) made on 15 January 1998. Social Workers

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the policy of the Government in respect of sections 111 and 112 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 as amended by sections 13 and 14 of the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Act 1997 with particular reference to the duties of local authority social workers. [29246]

Mr. Denham: Sections 13 and 14 of the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Act 1997 introduced new offences of dishonest representation and failure to report a change of circumstance. The measures are aimed at people who set out to defraud the benefit system, including those who intentionally collude with claimants to commit Social Security fraud. Third parties, such as social workers and welfare advisers, who act in good faith, have nothing to fear.

Benefit Registration Period

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of those registering for social security benefits did so within one month of being eligible in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [30177]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the forecast financial savings from reducing the registration period for benefits claims; and if she will make a statement. [30178]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The estimated savings for the proposed measure in the Social Security Bill to align the maximum backdating period for benefit claims at one month are £42 million in 1998–99 and £58 million in subsequent years. The estimate is based on a start date of June 1998 for all benefits except Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit which will be October 1998.

Income Support

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent on income support for lone parents and their children in Wales in the year to 31 December 1997 or the nearest date for which figures are available. [28894]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Expenditure on Income Support for lone parents and their children in Wales for the financial year 1996–97 is estimated to be £235 million.

Note:

This figure is based on the estimated expenditure on lone parents for 1996–97 for Great Britain consistent with the 1997 Departmental Report (£4,205 million) multiplied by an estimate of the proportion of expenditure on lone parents going to lone parents in Wales. This is derived from the Quarterly Statistical Inquiries for the period May 1996 to February 1997.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it her policy that she and her Ministers personally read the letters sent to them by hon. Members on constituency matters. [27676]

Mr. Denham: Ministers read correspondence received from hon. Members on constituency matters and sign all responses issued.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to reply to questions from the hon. Member for Pendle on statutory maternity pay tabled on 26 January. [30383]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer on 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 633.

Adoption

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assistance is provided by the Contributions Agency to adopted people and those separated at an early age in searching for their natural parents; and if she will make a statement. [28678]

Mr. Denham: Social Security records are confidential and the circumstances in which personal information can be disclosed to a third party are limited. The Department will release information where legislation allows for it, where a court order has been obtained or where the individual concerned has consented to the disclosure.

There are no special arrangements in place to assist adopted people and those separated at an early age in searching for their natural parents.

Disabled Cars

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the cost of the provision or subsidy of cars for the disabled provided by her Department in each of the last five years for which figures are available; [28713]

(2) what are the criteria for the provision or subsidy of cars for the disabled provided by her Department; [28712]

(3) how many individuals in the United Kingdom benefited from the provision or subsidy of a car for the disabled in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [28714]

Mr. Denham: The Department makes no direct provision of cars for disabled people. However, recipients of the higher rate mobility component (HRM) of Disability Living Allowance (DLA), and of War Pensions Mobility Supplement (WPMS), are eligible for the provision of a car, on contract lease or hire purchase terms, under the Motability scheme if the period of their benefit award covers at least the period of the prospective agreement. They pay for the car, provided on beneficial terms, by assigning all or part of the benefit to that scheme.

There is no direct cost to the Department of the provision of cars under Motability, although the Department pays most of the administration costs of Motability Ltd. by grant. Motability Ltd. is a registered charity. Grants are also made to the Mobility Equipment Fund (MEF), incorporating the Drivers Fund (DF), for adaptations to vehicles to allow the most severely disabled to drive or be driven. These funds are administered on behalf of the Government by Motability Ltd. The amounts of the grants paid by the Department are shown in the table. Grants made to Motability Ltd. in respect of the business carried on in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Exemptions from Vehicle Excise Duty is available to recipients of the HRM component of DLA, and WPMS. Certain groups in receipt of Attendance Allowance prior to 12 October 1993 have preserved rights to exemption under the Disabled Passenger Scheme.

The number of cars provided under the Motability scheme, the number of MEF/DF grants and the number of VED exemptions granted are shown in the table.

In addition to the above there is the Invalid Vehicles Scheme run by the Department of Health but administered on their behalf by the Benefits Agency. Drivers of invalid three-wheelers provided under the scheme have underlying title to the HRM component of DLA but may not receive the benefit in addition to their three-wheeler.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of disability living allowance in the Stoke-on-Trent area are currently in work. [27661]

Mr. Denham: This information is not available because the sample sizes would be too small to yield trustworthy figures for an area such as Stoke-on-Trent, therefore there is no regional breakdown of recipients in work.

The following gives the National proportions of those customers who have earnings, split by components:

7 per cent. of all DLA recipients received earnings;

of this 7 per cent:

30 per cent. receive DLA care only (ie 2 per cent. of all DLA recipients);

37 per cent. receive DLA mobility only (ie 3 per cent. of all DLA recipients); and 33 per cent. receive both components (ie 2 per cent. of all DLA recipients).

The figures are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey (FRS) which is the latest available. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non response.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the outcome of the review of the decision to withdraw disability living allowance from Mrs. C. J. Archer of Queen's Road, Brixham, Devon. [30791]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefits Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 23 February 23 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what was the outcome of the review of the decision to withdraw Disability Living Allowance (DLA) from Mrs. Archer of Brixham, Devon.

The outcome of the review to withdraw DLA was notified to Mrs. Archer in the revised decision of 4 February. This informed Mrs. Archer that the DLA mobility component has been reinstated at the higher rate for life. However, the Adjudication Officer maintained the decision relating to the care component, in that there was no entitlement. Details of Mrs. Archer's right to appeal against the decision not to reinstate her care component were notified and included in this decision.

Arrears of benefit, amounting to £830.40, were authorised on 4 February. These covered the period from 27 August 1997 to 10 February 1998.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the number of people in the Wrexham area who, during the latest six months for which figures are available, have had their award of disability living allowance (a) stopped, (b) decreased and (c) increased; and within the categories (a) and (b) how many people have requested a review and (i) had their awards reinstated, (ii) had partial reinstatement and (iii) been refused reinstatement. [30857]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Disability Living Allowance (DLA) awards decreased and increased in Great Britain during six months ending 30 November 1997

	Number
Awards decreased	16,400
Awards increased	54,300

Note:
The sample sizes would be too small to yield trustworthy figures for an area such as Wrexham.

Welfare Reform

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations her Department has received since 1 May concerning the proposal to replace state-funded welfare with a birthright portfolio; and what assessment of these proposals has been made by the welfare review team. [28643]

Mr. Field: The Department has received representations from one person proposing a birthright portfolio scheme. We have not yet examined the proposal in detail but will be considering it within the context of the current programme of welfare reform.

Reduced Benefit Directions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reduced benefit directions are currently in force; how many of these directions have been issued since the increase of the benefit penalty on 7 October 1996; what are the estimated resulting benefit savings; and what amount of child support maintenance is received by (a) family credit claimants and (b) former income support claimants which is not offset by benefit reductions. [30134]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 18 February 1998]: We think it right that lone mothers should co-operate wherever possible in requesting maintenance for their children from the father.

As of May 1997[1] there were around 6,000 reduced benefit directions in force on Income Support recipients. Figures for reduced benefit directions in force on parents with care in receipt of Family Credit or Disability Working Allowance are not available.

The number of reduced benefit directions implemented between 1 October 1996 and 31 January 1998 was 42,694. The estimated benefit savings of the increased 40 per cent. rate was £1.5 million up to May 1997.

It is estimated that in 1997–98 around £120 million in child maintenance will be received by parents with care on Family Credit. Information is not available on the amount received by former Income Support recipients.

This is the latest information available.

Fishermen (Redundancy Fund)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the amount contributed annually to the redundancy fund by fishermen made redundant as a result of the loss of Icelandic fishing in 1976. [30231]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available.

Women's Issues

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the annual cost of the proposed citizens juries to evaluate public opinion on issues related to women. [31094]

Ms Ruddock: As Minister for Women I am exploring ways of strengthening our dialogue with women, and in particular how we might extend that dialogue to reach women who are not part of a women's organisation. I am currently talking to women and to women's organisations about how we might best achieve this, and we are considering a range of options to identify the most effective means of reaching some of the women whose voices are not usually heard. I expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she intends to publish the results of her review of the habitual residence test. [30987]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are currently considering all aspects of the habitual residence test. We expect to bring forward proposals before the Summer.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made for payment of benefit to claimants pending appeal following failure under the habitual residence test. [30988]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Benefits, including interim payments of benefit, are not paid to claimants who are appealing against a decision to refuse the award of that benefit. This applies to claimants who have failed the habitual residence test.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total level of social security expenditure in each year since 1978–79; and how much of the total in each year would fall under the current classification of cyclical social security expenditure. [31103]

Mr. Field: The information is set out in the table.

Women's National Commission

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her plans for the Women's National Commission. [31324]

Ms Harman: One of my priorities as Minister for Women is to establish a new dialogue with women. I presented a framework of principles and goals for a renewed Women's National Commission to their members earlier today.

Our statement on the framework of principles and goals is as follows:

Government Review of the WNC

Statement from the Ministers for Women

1. The Government review was launched in September 1997. Its aims are:

to examine the objectives, membership and funding of the WNC in the light of the Government's need to ensure that there is an effective, efficient, independent channel of communication between women's organisations and Government for the 21st century; to assess costs and benefits; and to develop, if appropriate, options for change.

2. This statement sets out a framework of principles and goals which have been agreed by the Government team reviewing the WNC for consideration by the WNC at its plenary session on 24 February 1998. Draft specific terms of reference for the WNC, incorporating the principles and goals set out in this paper, will be available in May for discussion at the next available plenary session of the WNC.

3. The WNC provides a channel for the views and experience of women's organisations to be conveyed to Government. However, far greater precision and clarity is needed about the role of the WNC and the terms of its relationship with Government. To be an effective and efficient channel for communication between Government and women's organisations, the renewed WNC must be:

modern and dynamic—geared to meet the needs of women's organisations and Government in the 21st century, both at home and abroad; strong and influential—capable of adapting and maximising the opportunities presented by rapidly changing circumstances; broadly based and widely known—representing a wider range of organisations and with a high profile among organised women; fully accountable for its use of public resources—entering into mutual agreements with Government which specify tasks, objectives and timetables, and reporting on an annual basis, so that performance can be monitored and outcomes evaluated; able to speak with a genuinely independent voice—steps will be taken to increase independence by evolving into a non-government organisation and relocating outside Government;

free to grow and change in directions of its own choosing—functions specified under agreement with Government will be publicly funded; the WNC will be given practical encouragement to generate funds to support other activities; given clear and settled funding arrangements—protected against risks commonly faced by similar voluntary and/or umbrella organisations.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 500, on Queen's Counsel, what steps he plans to take to ensure that all consultees reply. [30394]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has no plans to take steps to ensure that all consultees reply. In making his decisions on silk applicants, he relies only on the views of those consultees who know the applicants well enough to make the necessary assessment of their abilities.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Countryside Access

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government will publish their consultation paper on Access to the Open Countryside. [31325]

Mr. Meacher: I am pleased to announce that the Government are issuing today their consultation paper setting out proposals for giving people greater access to the open countryside in England and Wales. Copies have been placed in the Library of both Houses.

The consultation paper reflects the Government's determination to fulfil their manifesto commitment to give greater freedom for people to explore our open countryside.

Our proposals have the potential to benefit the millions of people who already enjoy, or who will in future enjoy, walking in the countryside. Current arrangements for access to areas of open countryside, rather than rights of way, have not been used extensively and are not generally well understood. In many cases, people are understandably confused about the areas of land on which they are entitled to walk or the circumstances under which they may do so. We need to secure more and better quality access with greater clarity and certainty for all concerned.

Our proposals are about giving greater access to open countryside, not to developed or cultivated land. Our first priority is to increase access to mountain, moor, heath, down and registered common land. In total, these cover no more than 12 per cent. of the land in England and Wales. We also wish to see more access to other areas of open country such as woodland, cliffs and foreshore, and will introduce measures to encourage this if necessary.

In developing our proposals, we intend to ensure that a proper balance is struck between the rights and responsibilities of those who will benefit from greater access and of others affected by it. We are determined that those who will enjoy greater access should be responsible: the countryside and people's property and livelihoods must continue to be respected and properly protected. The Government recognise the need for sensible restrictions on the freedom of access to take account of the genuine needs of owners and other users of the land. Similarly, we recognise that access to some areas or at some times needs to be limited for reasons of health or safety, nature conservation, or archaeology.

We are prepared to consider all options, including voluntary arrangements, for achieving our objective of substantially greater access, and will consider carefully all responses to the consultation paper before reaching a decision on the best way forward. Assessment of the costs and benefits of different options will be a key part of our consideration. Costs to Government (central and local), to owners and occupiers, and to the relevant statutory agencies will certainly be taken into account in considering how best to proceed. We do not expect that management of greater access will have major financial implications as, in most places, no changes will need to be made to accommodate walkers. We shall be making an environmental assessment and regulatory appraisal of our proposals, as necessary.

We are keen to ensure that the consultation process provides a genuine opportunity for all those interested to put forward their own ideas and views. We shall be allowing three months for consultation, ending on Friday 5 June. As well as considering written responses to the paper, we plan to hold meetings with organisations representing walkers, farmers and other owners and occupiers, and others with an interest. We shall also be drawing on the experience and expertise of the relevant statutory agencies and local authorities in firming up our ideas, and may need to consult further on some issues before announcing our conclusions, which we hope to do later this year.

Official Cars

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 15, what was the make, model and cost of the new official car acquired since 1 May; and for which Minister it has been acquired. [27702]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The car is a Jaguar 4.0i LWB, which has been provided for the use of the Deputy Prime Minister. The capital cost of the car was met by the Cabinet Office.

Sewerage System (Fats)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to reduce the amount of fats from catering outlets entering the sewerage system. [30468]

Mr. Meacher: Under the Water Industry Act 1991, the water companies are responsible for management of their sewerage systems and discharges to them. It is an offence under the Act to interfere with the free flow of a sewer.

I understand that water companies undertake a number of initiatives to control the amount of fats entering the sewerage system. These range from educational initiatives to prevent careless disposal of fats, encouragement of installation of fat traps to prevent entry into the sewerage system and development of technology to break down fats once they have entered the system.

A49

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the feasibility studies undertaken to improve the A49 between Shrewsbury and Ludlow. [30784]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 25 February 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson has asked me to reply to your recent question about feasibility studies undertaken to improve the A49 between Shrewsbury and Ludlow.

In 1994 a study of accidents was carried out on the A49 south of Shrewsbury. This identified the need for a number of safety improvements which were subsequently put in place.

Currently we have two feasibility studies under way in your constituency, one examining options for traffic calming at Leebotwood and the other into the possible provision of a pedestrian crossing at Dorrington. Reports on both of these studies are expected next month.

We are also carrying out feasibility studies at Craven Arms, Church Stretton and Ashford Bowdler. Reports on all of these studies are expected by the end of March.

If you would like more details on any of these proposals Tom Barry, the Area Manager for the A49, would be pleased to provide them. Tom can be contacted on 0121–678–8366.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) road traffic accidents, (b) resultant fatalities and (c) resultant injuries were recorded on the A49 between Shrewsbury and Ludlow for each year since 1977. [30783]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is available from 1979 and is shown in the table.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to sign the Kyoto Protocol. [30744]

Mr. Meacher: It is our intention that the UK will sign the Kyoto Protocol at an early date. We are in discussion with our EU colleagues with the aim of maximising the participation of Member States and the Community in signing the Protocol at the same time, before the end of the UK Presidency of the EU at the end of June.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to what depth the site of the Millennium Dome has been cleared of contaminants. [30516]

Mr. Caborn: The depth of contamination on the site to be occupied by the Millennium Dome varied widely. The majority of contamination was contained within the surface layer, which varied between 2 and 4 metres in depth. In isolated instances the contamination extended up to a maximum of 14 metres. The treatment applied to each part of the site depended on the type and depth of the contamination. No part of the site was treated to a depth of less than 2 metres and in places the treatment extended to 14 metres.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contaminants were present on the Millennium Dome site. [30515]

Mr. Caborn: A large proportion of the Millennium Dome site has been chemically contaminated to varying degrees as a result of former industrial activities, principally the generation of coal, gas and associated by-products. By-products include the manufacture of sulphuric acid and ammonium sulphate fertiliser in a dedicated chemical works as well as the production of coal tar and a range of organic chemicals such as benzene and naphtha in a separate tar works.

As a result, the principal contaminants found on the site were:

Wastes from tar production and distillation including coal tar and a variety of derivatives;

Materials from gas purification including foul lime, clinker waste and spent oxide;

Carboniferous materials including coal, coke and clinker.

The contaminants were identified during a comprehensive site investigation undertaken both by the original site owners (British Gas) and by the current owners, English Partnerships.

The approach to the treatment of the site has been approved by both the Environment Agency and the London Borough of Greenwich and is consistent with Government policy on the treatment of contaminated land.

Contaminated Land Register

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many acres of land are covered by the Contaminated Land Register; [30946]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the Contaminated Land Register. [30948]

Mr. Meacher: There is at present no contaminated land register. Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 (inserted by section 57 of the Environment Act 1995) will place a duty on enforcing authorities to maintain registers containing prescribed particulars of enforcement action taken with respect to contamination and of remediation works carried out on that land. I would also refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman) of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 439.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the total amount spent on derelict land grant in the last five years. [30947]

Mr. Caborn: My Department ceased to accept further applications for Derelict Land Grant (DLG) in March 1994 when the programme ended. Since April 1994, transitional arrangements have been in place whereby English Partnerships make payments to local authorities on behalf of the Secretary of State for all DLG projects which had been approved at that time. Annual payments have, inevitably, decreased, with an annual breakdown as follows:

1993–94 £103.780 million (paid by former DOE)

1994–95: £84.633 million

1995–96: £65.402 million

1996–97: £25.000 million

1997–98: £18.000 million (estimated outturn).

Since April 1994 all DLG applications from local authorities have been handled within the framework provided by English Partnerships' overall development programme (Investment Fund), largely as part of its Land Reclamation and Partnership Investment Programmes. The operation of this Fund places greater emphasis on flexible partnerships and funding mechanisms and on maximising private investment.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the extent of public liability in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [30937]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are committed to grant payments worth £1.8 billion NPV overall. If London and Continental Railways are unable to fulfil their obligations under the CTRL Development Agreement awarded to them by the previous Government, Eurostar (UK) Limited, its assets and liabilities, would revert to the Government. This would include accumulated debt worth in the region of £400 million, which would be met from future Eurostar revenues.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the development agreement signed between the Government and London and Continental Railways. [31031]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Reasons of commercial confidentiality prevent copies of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Development Agreement with London & Continental Railways (LCR) being placed in the Library. The previous Government issued a memorandum about the Development Agreement and other contracts with LCR in March 1996. Copies were placed in the Library at that time.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the reduction of road freight transport from the North West and West Midlands Regions to mainland Europe that would be achieved by (a) the completion of the high speed rail link from the Channel Tunnel to central London, connecting to the West Coast main line and (b) a scheme between the Channel Tunnel and Ebbsfleet; and if he will make a statement. [31192]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No such assessment has been made. The Channel Tunnel Rail Link is primarily intended to provide for passenger services, though it would also facilitate rail freight both directly and through freeing capacity on existing lines.

Code of Practice on Conservation, Access and Recreation

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) on what date the Standing Committee on the Code of Practice on Conservation, Access and Recreation last met; how many times it has met; and what reports it has made on the operation of the code; [31005]

(2) what plans he has to standardise the process of independent validation of conservation, access and recreation reports produced by the water industry; [31006]

(3) what plans he has to review the Code of Practice on Conservation, Access and Recreation to take account of the Environment Act 1995. [31007]

Mr. Meacher: The Standing Committee has so far met seven times, the latest meeting being in November 1995. A report by the Standing Committee on the effectiveness of the Code of Practice was published in July 1993. Annual reports by the water companies on their conservation, access and recreation activities are considered by the Standing Committee, which includes representatives from the main conservation and sports bodies. There are no plans at present to change this process. The Code of Practice is currently being reviewed, with a view to producing a revised Code later this year.

National Air Traffic Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the annual salary of each member of the Board of the National Air Traffic Services. [31186]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Ltd. formed its own Board, separate from that of the Civil Aviation Authority, in April 1996. My Department holds information on salaries only for those members of the NATS Board who are also members of the CAA Board. These members are the following:

Mr. Malcolm Argent: (2 days per week)

Mr. Derek McLauchlan: (Full time until June 1997, when he was replaced by Mr. Semple)

Mr. William Semple: (Full time—appointed 1 July 1997)

Mr. Anthony Herron: (2 days per week)

Mr Roderick Lynch: (2 days per month).

I have listed Mr. McLauchlan's salary for the last five years of his appointment in a separate reply. The salaries of the other NATS Board Members for which my Department holds information, since the Board was set up in April 1996, are as follows:

Member	Salary 1996–1997	Salary 1997–1998
Mr. M. Argent	45,441	46,804
Mr. W. Semple	100,000	103,000
Mr. A. Herron	46,575	47,972
Mr. R. Lynch	7,886	8,122

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the annual salary paid to Derek McLauchlan for each of the last five years of his employment as Chief Executive of National Air Traffic Services. [31185]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Mr. McLauchlan was the Chief Executive of National Air Traffic Services Ltd until June 1997. His annual salary for each of the five years leading up to his departure from NATS Ltd was as follows:

1992–1993: £83,200

1993–1994: £84,450

1994–1995: £86,140

1995–1996: £87,000

1996–1997: £87,870.

Full details of the emoluments of Board Members of the Civil Aviation Authority are set out in the CAA's Annual Report and Accounts. These documents are available in the House Library.

Japanese Cars

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the emission levels of cars manufactured in Japan to run on low sulphur fuels imported into the United Kingdom for sale as second-hand cars relative to cars manufactured in the EU; and if he will make a statement. [30721]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 23 February 1998]: None. The proportion of such second-hand cars compared with cars manufactured directly for the EU market is very small. Any disparity between emissions levels will decline markedly from the year 2000, when new EU fuel standards are due to be introduced.

Mornington Crescent

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when Mornington Crescent London Underground station will be reopened. [30953]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is an operational matter for London Underground Ltd, but I understand that they are aiming to re-open Mornington Crescent station towards the end of next month.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31177]

Ms Glenda Jackson: These data are not held centrally and cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. Officials attend and speak at conferences as appropriate to fulfil their duties.

Rolling Stock Leasing Companies

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to investigate the profits levels of train rolling stock leasing companies. [31008]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 21 January that he had asked the Rail Regulator to conduct an urgent and wide-ranging inquiry into the operation of the rolling stock market. The Regulator has been asked specifically to examine the scope for the rolling stock companies to abuse their market power either through excessive pricing, through inadequate investment in new or refurbished rolling stock or more generally through their response to the requirements of train operators to secure improvements in performance. The Regulator has been asked to report by the middle of April. The Government will then consider, in the light of the Regulator's recommendations, whether further action should be taken.

Health and Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps have been taken by his Department in conjunction with the trades unions and Employers' Federation to promote improved health and safety practice at work. [30829]

Mr. Meacher: I am kept regularly informed by the Health and Safety Commission (HSC), whose members include representatives of both employees and employers organisations, of measures and action taken to promote improved health and safety practice in the workplace. Much of HSC's work is done in consultation with their industry advisory committees which encourage the joint participation of all representative organisations in the improvement of health and safety at work and draw on the expertise and advice available on both sides of industry. These committees give the problems of particular industries close and more detailed attention.

I have recently allocated to the HSC/E an extra £4.5 million and I look forward to receiving their Plan of Work for 1998/99 which sets out detailed proposals of how resources will be used to achieve their aims and key priorities for the coming year. One of the HSC's key priorities will be to improve health and safety at work by promoting the full participation of key intermediaries and principal stakeholders, namely employers, employees and their representatives.

Energy Efficiency Bill

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Abbey National Plc on the subject of the current Energy Efficiency Bill. [31010]

Mr. Meacher: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle) will shortly reply to a letter about the Energy Efficiency Bill which Abbey National Plc sent to my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the (a) timetable and (b) scope of the national debate on the achievement of the Government's (i) legally binding target set at the Kyoto conference and (ii) own target for reductions in CO2 emissions by 2010; who will be consulted; and when and how the Government will report on it. [31011]

Mr. Meacher: The Government plan to publish a consultation paper on delivering their climate change targets in the summer. This will focus on our legally binding target under the Kyoto Protocol, but will also discuss policies that could help to go beyond that target and deliver our domestic aim. We have already started to consider a range of options for reducing greenhouse gas emissions with key players. We will continue this debate in the run up to publication of the consultation paper and afterwards, as we develop our national programme.

Road Signs

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions Order 1994 (SI 1519) to add the words "Except Cycles" to No Entry signs. [29588]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. We do not believe it is generally safe or desirable to allow or encourage cyclists to ride past No Entry signs. We recommend that, wherever possible, a segregated cycle facility should be provided at the entry to a contraflow cycle lane. The Traffic Signs Regulations (which are made by Ministers in England, Wales and Scotland acting jointly) already contain positive signs to indicate that pedal cycles only may use particular routes, as well as signs to indicate that motor vehicles are prohibited from certain routes.

Highway Code

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses have been received so far to the consultation on the revised Highway Code. [29589]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received some 420 responses to date.

Air Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of airline passengers and flight crew aboard (a) United Kingdom aircraft and (b) aircraft flying to and from the United Kingdom injured by turbulence while not wearing their seatbelts in each of the last five years. [31255]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority does not hold information on injuries occurring on foreign registered aircraft. The number of injuries to passengers and flight crew on United Kingdom registered aircraft resulting from turbulence in each of the last five years is listed in the table. None of these injuries were serious. It is not known whether or not those injured were wearing seat belts.

	Passengers	Cabin crew
1994	2	5
1995	2	13
1996	4	9
1997	18	29

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of incidents in each of the last five years where turbulence has affected United Kingdom air carriers. [31256]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority require reports of turbulence encounters by UK registered aircraft when they result in an injury to an occupant of the aircraft or if the commander of the aircraft deems a "turbulence check" of the aircraft to be necessary. The number of reports of turbulence encounters involving UK registered passenger aircraft received by the CAA in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year
1993	46
1994	84
1995	74
1996	49
1997	86

Trust Ports

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to privatise the remaining trust ports. [31252]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no proposals to compel the privatisation of any of the remaining trust ports. We will consider on their merits any applications for voluntary privatisation put forward by individual trust ports under the Ports Act 1991.

Railways Pension Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from members of the Railways Pension Scheme 1994 concerning errors made in the computation of their pension rights; and if he will make a statement. [31027]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since the General Election, we have received 3 queries from members of railway pension schemes about their pension entitlements.

The administration of the Railways Pension Scheme, including the computation of members' pension entitlements, is a matter for the Scheme's independent trustee, the Railways Pension Trustee Company Limited. The Scheme has a formal procedure for settling any disagreements in accordance with statute. Members wishing to use it should write to the Scheme's managers, Pensions Management. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no locus to intervene.

Drainage Area Plan (Bingley)

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will arrange for the full drainage area plan for the Eldwick/Gilstead area of Bingley, West Yorkshire to be (a) published, (b) placed in the Library and (c) made available to the City of Bradford Metropolitan District Council Planning Authority. [30617]

Mr. Meacher: The information requested is not available centrally.

Under section 199 of the Water Industry Act 1991, sewerage companies are required to keep records of the location of every sewer vested in the company. Section 200 of the 1991 Act places a duty on sewerage companies to provide local authorities with copies of those records and any modifications to them. They are also required to make sewer records available for public inspection free of charge.

Highway drainage records are kept by the relevant Highway Authorities and can be inspected at the local offices during normal working hours. With regard to the A650 trunk road which passes through Bingley, highway drainage records can be inspected at the City of Bradford Metropolitan District Council offices in Keighley, West Yorkshire.

The Environment Agency collects information on the risk of flooding from rivers or the sea under the provisions of Section 105(2) of the Water Resources Act 1991. Information on design flood levels can be obtained from the Agency's regional office. Such flood plain surveys are principally to provide guidance on flood risk to inform decisions by the local planning authority on development in flood plains. Internal Drainage Boards may hold similar information about their districts, and this would normally be made available on request.

Watercourse Pollution

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning applications were considered by the Environment Agency in their role as statutory consultee in the last full year for which records are available; and on how many occasions the Environment Agency registered formal advice to local planning authorities to reject applications on the grounds of potential watercourse pollution. [30795]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1996–97, the Environment Agency was consulted on 104,847 planning applications by English and Welsh local planning authorities on both a statutory and non-statutory basis. The Agency advised local planning authorities to reject the application on the grounds of potential watercourse pollution in an estimated 250 cases. The Agency does not collect separate figures on statutory as opposed to non-statutory consultations nor are applications affecting watercourses always recorded separately.

Departmental Headquarters

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's headquarters at Marsham Street are to be (a) vacated and (b) demolished. [31259]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department plans to vacate 2 Marsham Street by the end of May 1998. It will be handed back to Property Advisers to the Civil Estate, who will decide its future.

TREASURY

Inland Revenue

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue SA330 forms were issued between 1 and 19 February. [31097]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 February 1998]: SA330 forms were sent to around 150,000 tax agents in respect of around 4 million taxpayers. The forms provided summary details of whether taxpayers had settled their 1996–97 tax liability for agents to check against clients' records.

Tax Allowances

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers are currently entitled to (a) the basic personal allowance, (b) the married couple's allowance, (c) the non-aged married couple's allowance and (d) the additional personal allowance. [31248]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 February 1998]: It is estimated that, in 1998–99, some 26.2 million income taxpayers will receive the personal allowance. In addition to this, many more individuals will be kept out of tax by their personal allowance. Around 10.8 million individual taxpayers will benefit from the married couple's allowance, of which 9.6 million people will get the non-aged married couple's allowance. About 840,000 will receive the additional personal allowance.

Poorest Nations (Debts)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on tackling the debts of the poorest nations. [29632]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government are firmly committed to supporting debt relief for the poorest countries, including the relief offered under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative. In the IMF and World Bank Executive Boards, we have actively supported granting HIPC relief to Uganda, Bolivia, Burkina Faso and Guyana. We have also pressed for movement on other potential beneficiaries, including Mozambique. We have offered to provide up to $10 million to help Mozambique achieve debt sustainability on top of debt relief and assistance the UK has already committed.

Last September, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Mauritius Mandate statement, called on the international community to commit itself to dealing with the problem of unsustainable debt burdens faced by some poor countries once and for all. This represents a challenge for both creditors and debtors. Creditors should ensure that relief mechanisms are sufficiently flexible to deal with all cases. Debtors should show a commitment to sound economic policies, with a focus on productive expenditures such as basic healthcare and primary education, and demonstrate transparent and accountable decisionmaking. Debt relief is necessary to allow such countries to continue to implement such policies, which are aimed at increasing the pro-poor economic growth that is needed for lasting poverty reduction.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) he and (b) other Ministers within his Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23752]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 19 February 1998]: None.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the expenditure of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if he will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26572]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Figures for expenditure are as in the table:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98 (to date)	1997–98 (full year)

The Office for National Statistics was created on 1 April 1996. The Royal Mint has spent a total of £0.3 million on external consultants over 1995–98.

Consultants are employed not only to reduce costs but also to increase Departments' effectiveness; or to carry out specialised tasks for which Departments neither have nor need the staff to carry them out themselves. They have therefore contributed in several ways to Departments' output; and to the cash reductions in the spending of the Chancellor's Departments in recent years.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27730]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The current estimate of expenditure on hospitality is:

	£000
Inland Revenue (including Valuation Office Agency)	198
Customs & Excise	298
HM Treasury	94
National Savings	11
Office for National Statistics	58
Royal Mint	33

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26574]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Empty properties has been taken to mean fully vacant buildings.

£ million

Department	1995–96[1]	1996–97 Annual cost	1996–97 Total value	1997–98[2] Annual cost	1997–98[2] Total value

Customs and Excise	—	0.8	1.0	0.8	0.9

[1] Prior to 1.4.96 responsibility for the disposal of vacant space fell to Property Holdings for the Common User Estate.
[2] No distinction has been made between the current year to date and the full year.

HM Treasury, National Savings, the Office for National Statistics or the Royal Mint do not have any empty property.

Contingency Reserve

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what allocations from the contingency reserve for 1998–99 to departments have been approved over the last two months and for what purpose; what is the current amount of the contingency reserve for 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [30507]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 23 February 1998]: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member of 10 December 1997, Official Report, columns 562–64. The next forecast of the Reserve for 1998–99 will be published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report in March.

Buildings Refurbishment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if he will make a statement. [26576]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 5 February 1998]: No building refurbishment has been carried out by the Treasury in the years 1995–96 to 1997–98 other than an essential electrical wiring replacement programme in the headquarters building at a cost of £80,000 to date during 1997–98.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26577]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The cost of Ministerial overseas travel for the Treasury for the years requested is as listed.

1995–96: £59,150

1997–98 (to date): £34,846.

VAT

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the European Commission review of the scope of reduced VAT rates. [30687]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The European Commission's recent analysis of the present VAT rates structure and application of reduced VAT rates within the Community concludes that there is no significant distortion of competition brought about by the disparities in VAT rates between Member States. The report makes no formal proposals for revision of the current list of supplies of goods and services which may be subject to reduced rates.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list occasions when he has raised the issue of a wider relief of VAT on energy saving materials with other member states of the EU. [30689]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: We have advised the Commission that we intend to explore the possibility of a reduced rate of VAT for energy saving measures carried out under certain Government-funded schemes and to explore the possibility of a reduced rate with wider application than European law presently allows.

City of London Corporation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions the Financial Secretary's office has had with the City of London Corporation since 1 January. [30930]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: My office has had no discussions with the City of London Corporation since 1 January.

Pension Contributions

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the increase in pension contributions British business will need to make to replace the extra tax levied on funds in the last Budget in a full year. [30613]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: It is for companies and their pension funds to decide the level of their contributions.

Mozambique

Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made towards cancelling the debt burden of Mozambique as part of Britain's contribution to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [30926]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The UK has consistently supported a full and final exit for Mozambique from its debt burden under the HIPC initiative. On 17 February, the Chancellor and the Secretary of State for International Development pledged to provide a bilateral contribution of up to $10 million to help Mozambique to this end. This money is in addition to the debt relief agreed through the Paris Club of Government Creditors and other assistance that the UK has already committed.

A final agreement is currently being negotiated at the IMF and World Bank in Washington.

Third World Debt

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposals the Government is making on writing off Third World debt. [30267]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Government are fully committed to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative that was launched by the IMF and World Bank in September 1996. In his speech to Commonwealth Finance Ministers in Mauritius last year, the Chancellor called on the international community to commit itself to dealing with the problem of unsustainable debt burdens faced by the world's poorest countries once and for all. He urged creditors and debtors to undertake concrete action in order to ensure that at least three-quarters of the twenty countries, initially identified by the World Bank and IMF as probably needing debt relief under HIPC initiative, have had decisions on the size and timing of their relief by the year 2000. The Government propose to continue their efforts to ensure that this target is met.

In the IMF and World Bank Executive Boards, we have actively supported debt relief under the HIPC initiative for the four countries that have so far had decisions—Uganda, Bolivia, Burkina Faso and Guyana. The Government have also taken a lead in pressing for action to help another indebted country, Mozambique. We have offered to provide up to $10 million to help Mozambique achieve debt sustainability on top of the debt relief and assistance that the UK has already committed.

Windfall Tax

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of windfall tax receipts in (a) 1997–98 and (b) in total. [31263]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Carmarthen, West and Pembrokeshire, South (Mr. Ainger) on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 378.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Treatment and Testing Order

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the areas that he has chosen to pilot the proposal in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] to introduce a drug treatment and testing order. [31738]

Mr. George Howarth: My hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Joyce Quin) announced in a speech to a conference in York organised by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation this afternoon that the pilots will take place under the management of Merseyside, South-East London and Gloucestershire Probation Services.

Thirty six probation areas expressed an interest in managing the pilot of the drug treatment and testing order. All the proposals were well thought out and enthusiastic and the choice was therefore far from clear-cut.

Public Opinion Research

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts for public opinion research his Department has awarded since 1 May; if he will indicate the (a) purpose, (b) cost, (c) value and (d) duration of each contract; and which companies (i) bid for and (ii) were awarded each contract. [28872]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 10 February 1998]: None. However, the British Crime Survey, which is not "public opinion research" and is primarily used to measure crime against households through interviews with the general public, does include questions about attitudes. The current sweep asks respondents about their attitudes to punishment, the police and victim support.

Police and Judicial Co-operation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the implications of Articles 29 to 42 of the Treaty on European Union as amended by the Amsterdam Treaty for police and judicial co-operation in criminal matters; and what information he has made available to Parliament and the public on this subject; [30523]

(2) what consultations he has had with police authorities on the consequences for their operations and duties of Articles 29 to 42 of the Treaty on European Union as amended by the Amsterdam Treaty; and if he will place in the Library the records of those consultations; [30524]

(3) what assessment he has made of the implications of articles 29 to 42 of the Treaty on European Union; and what plans he has to publish information on their impact on police operations and on the judicial system in the United Kingdom. [31080]

Ms Quin: Articles 29 to 42 of the Treaty on European Union (TEU), as amended by the Treaty of Amsterdam, will replace Title VI of the TEU by new provisions concerned with developing common action between member states in the fields of police and judicial co-operation in criminal matters and preventing and combating racism and xenophobia. The new provisions introduce changes, in particular as regards the scope of the common action to be developed, the legal instruments to be used and the role of the European Commission, the European Parliament and the European Court of Justice. There are also provisions enabling member states to establish closer co-operation between themselves, and on the future role of Europol. Subject to Parliamentary approval of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill, and ratification by all member states of the new Treaty, the Government will seek to participate fully in all aspects of work under the new provisions, consistently with United Kingdom national interests.

The Treaty of Amsterdam was published as a Command paper (Cm 3780) in October 1997. Detailed written statements which cover all aspects of the Treaty have been provided to Committees of both Houses, made available to hon. Members and placed in the Library. Additionally, similar information has been provided to members of the public on request. The Treaty of Amsterdam has, of course, been debated at length in this House.

The police are routinely consulted, through a wide range of contacts which will not necessarily be recorded, on aspects of European Union business which have consequences for them. In particular, the Association of Chief Police Officers are closely involved in relevant discussions and negotiations with our European partners, and often attend meetings to provide advice and support.

Articles 29-42 will not impact directly on police operations and the judicial system in the United Kingdom. They call for closer co-operation between the competent authorities of the member states in these fields, but any further practical arrangements will only be put into place following further negotiation and agreement. For example, the provision in Article 32 for the regulation of the operation of competent authorities in the territory of another member state will require a separate, detailed discussion and agreement by the Council. Information regarding these negotiations shall of course be made available to Parliament in line with scrutiny arrangements for work undertaken in the Third Pillar.

South East Regional Crime Squad

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects reports to be made on the investigations into the conduct of the South East Regional Crime Squad. [30449]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 23 February 1998]: There is no current investigation into the conduct of the South East Regional Crime Squad (SERCS) as a whole. Individual SERCS officers may become the subject of complaint, allegation or report. In such circumstances, the Co-ordinator of SERCS would normally invite an appropriate police force within his region to conduct an investigation.

I have been advised that there are currently seven such inquiries being undertaken by the Metropolitan Police. These investigations are at different stages and their completion dates will depend on the particular circumstances of each case. Three of the seven were instigated by SERCS management. The inquiry which has received most publicity was set in motion after surveillance logs were found to be missing during a trial at Snaresbrook Crown Court. SERCS was inspected by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary during February 1997.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27800]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Expenditure on official hospitality by the FCO, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies for the period 1 May 1997 to 31 December 1997 was as follows:

FCO (£000)	Agencies (£)	NDPBs (£000)
6,533	619	690

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the expenditure of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if he will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26661]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Spending on external consultants[1] by the FCO, its executive agency and non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs):

£ million

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98 to date	1997–98
FCO	17.65	11.80	10.80	15.36
Agency	—	0.06	—	—
NDPBs[2]	0.05	0.03	0.06	0.08

[1] As defined in the 1994 Efficiency Unit Scrutiny.
[2] Excludes the British Council, for whom figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The bulk of FCO consultancy spending is for technical expertise on capital projects and information technology, often for infrastructure projects, designed to promote overall efficiency. Where savings are achieved, the work of external consultants is only one factor to be taken into account. Quantified annual cost savings for such work are therefore not available.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26666]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The total cost of FCO Ministerial overseas travel, including attendance at international conferences, in 1995–96 and 1996–97 was as follows:

1995–96: £1,496,109

1997–98 expenditure, as at 31 December 1997, stood at £1,185,507.

Holiday Insurance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the need for travellers to purchase holiday insurance, with particular reference to activity holidays; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of holiday insurance packages sold with activity holidays; and if he will issue guidance to holidaymakers with regard to insurance packages for activity holidays. [28139]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 9 February 1998]: We have made no assessment of holiday insurance packages but strongly recommend in our consular publicity material that all travellers abroad take out adequate comprehensive insurance. It is essential that the cover includes medical evacuation, especially for activity holidays.

Overseas Visits (Advisers)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 February 1998, Official Report, columns 248–49, if he will list the dates and destinations of the overseas visits undertaken by special advisers at public expense. [30286]

Mr. Robin Cook: Since 1 May 1997, a Special Adviser has accompanied me and other FCO Ministers on the following overseas visits:

Date	Destination
1997
7 May	France, Germany
18–19 May	USA
19–20 May	Netherlands
5–6 June	Sweden
16–17 June	Netherlands
20–23 June	USA
27 June-1 July	Hong Kong
7–9 July	Spain
28–30 July	Bosnia, Croatia
28 July-3 August	Egypt, Occupied Territories, Israel
21–25 September	USA
7–8 October	Gibraltar
20–21 November	Luxembourg, Switzerland
25–28 November	Hungary, Czech Republic, Poland
1998
13–16 January	Israel, Occupied Territories

Iraq

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken to secure reparations from Iraq for Kuwait under United Nations Resolution 687. [30979]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government of Kuwait have made their own claims for reparations through the UN Compensation Commission in Geneva.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last year in pressing for Saddam Hussein to be indicted as a war criminal. [30980]

Mr. Fatchett: We have on several occasions made clear our support for the INDICT campaign which calls for Saddam Hussein to be brought to account in an appropriate court.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of (a) the volume of oil sold by Iraq since the introduction of UN sanctions, (b) the net price paid to Iraq and (c) the comparative free market price for oil. [30762]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 23 February 1998]: On 19 February, the UN estimated that, under UNSCR 986, 119.5 million barrels of oil had been sold, under UNSCR 111, 126.9 million barrels and under UNSCR 143, 38.9 million barrels.

The UN estimates the revenue from these sales at US$2.15 billion, US$2.125 billion and US$0.48 billion respectively.

Prices implied by these revenue figures are US$17.99, US$16.75 and US$12.34 respectively. The fall in prices is in line with the fall in oil prices generally over the period in question.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the work the Government have commissioned on opinion research or focus groups concerning people's views on Iraq; what were the terms of reference; to whom each contract was awarded; what was the cost of each contract; and if he will publish in full the transcripts and conclusions of each piece of research. [30945]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 23 February 1998]: We have not commissioned any survey concerning views on Iraq. We have, however, taken careful note of the results of opinion polls published in the UK press.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reasons other members of the (a) United Nations Security Council and (b) European Union Council of Ministers, who oppose a military attack on Iraq, have given to Her Majesty's Government for their opposition to such action. [30982]

Mr. Fatchett: The agreement reached by the UN Secretary-General, Kofi Annan, was the culmination of intensive diplomatic efforts to resolve the crisis with Iraq. But as the Secretary General himself stated at his press conference in Baghdad, progress was achieved only because diplomatic efforts were backed up by the credible threat of military force.

The vast majority of EU Member States and most Security Council members have said publicly that they would not rule out the use of force against Iraq if efforts to secure a diplomatic solution failed.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the response by the United Kingdom representative to the letter of 16 July 1997 of the Dutch permanent representative in connection with the Schengen Agreement and the Amsterdam Treaty. [31048]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It would not be appropriate to publish this piece of diplomatic correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and another Government.

Roma People

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy regarding (a) human rights and (b) the treatment of Roma people in those European countries likely to be in the next group to join the European Union. [31073]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have made clear our commitment to place human rights at the centre of foreign policy. We will be strict in ensuring that EU applicants comply with the Copenhagen political criteria, including the "respect for and protection of minorities".

This is why we support strongly all efforts to address shortcomings in the treatment of minorities in EU applicant countries, both through bilateral Know How Fund projects and our contributions to the Phare Programme. We have also been working bilaterally with several Central European Governments to help them implement measures to improve the position of the Roma and other minorities.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31176]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The information sought is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Burma-Thailand Gas Pipeline

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the board of Premier Oil Ltd, in relation to their participation in the Burma-Thailand gas pipeline. [31076]

Mr. Fatchett: We do not encourage UK companies to trade with Burma and urge them to think carefully before doing so, pointing out the political and human rights situation in Burma. I made this policy clear to Charles Jamieson, Chief Executive of Premier Oil, when we met on 17 December.

Burma

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the proportion of Burma's GNP being spent on armaments and instruments of repression. [31077]

Mr. Fatchett: The Burmese Government do not release any detailed figures on expenditure on arms, but we estimate that at least 30% of Burma's GNP is spent on general defence expenditure. The EU's Common Position on Burma includes a full-scale arms embargo, the suspension of all defence links and the suspension of non-humanitarian aid.

Defence Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 489, for what reasons it is not his policy to list the British manufacturers of equipment found by inspectors in Iraq. [31273]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: It is not our practice to reveal the identity of British manufacturers whose equipment has been found by UNSCOM in Iraq, because it is UNSCOM's practice to disclose such information to Governments on a confidential basis when it considers this may assist its investigations. That confidentiality must be maintained if UNSCOM is to be able to follow up information on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programmes effectively.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he held on human rights issues during his visit to Saudi Arabia; and what was the response of the Saudi authorities. [30772]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 24 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary held talks with Prince Saud Al Faisal, the Saudi Arabian Foreign Minister, during his visit to Saudi Arabia on 5 February. The purpose of his visit was to discuss the current crisis in the Gulf.

War Crimes

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors underlay the policy of the United Kingdom Government to oppose the inclusion of the use of nuclear weapons as a war crime under the jurisdiction of the proposed International Criminal Court. [31032]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. McCabe) on 10 February 1998, Official Report, columns 139–40.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civil Service

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for each Government Department the total number of (a) posts, (b) non-industrial posts and (c) Grade 6 and above posts (i) outside the Greater Belfast area and (ii) more than 30 miles from Belfast on 1 April of each year since 1995. [30840]

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas and Electricity Industries

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how she will secure equity of treatment between regional electricity companies seeking access to the domestic gas supply market and gas companies seeking to take advantage of competition for domestic electricity supply. [24325]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: I understand that OFFER and OFGAS have issued proposals which the companies are considering.

Photocopier Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answers of 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 611 and 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 95, if her Department will withdraw the statement that the BEUA are advisers to the right hon. Member for Wokingham. [29604]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 16 February 1998]: No. I have already written to the right hon. Gentleman.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on the levels of imports of foreign coal if the 1.2 per cent. sulphur dioxide emissions target is to be met. [30494]

Mr. Battle: The Environment Agency has issued a Consultation Document setting out proposals for the new sulphur dioxide targets. My Department is currently considering these.

Broadcasting

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to bring forward proposals for the regulation and development of broadcasting telecommunications and data. [30403]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The Government are currently considering these issues and expect to initiate a consultation process shortly.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Ms Drown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the legal opinion given to the Canadian Government on reservations under the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [29958]

Mrs. Roche: The Government will make their own assessment of the MAI, taking legal advice where necessary.

Ms Drown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what forms of social protest will be prohibited under the Protection from Strife clause of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [30582]

Mrs. Roche: None.

Ms Drown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment the Government have made of the impact on civil liberties of the provisions of the Protection from Strife clause of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [30581]

Mrs. Roche: The Protection from Strife clause concerns compensation to be given to investors whose investments are damaged during strife. It will have no impact on civil liberties.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has undertaken to investigate the means whereby (a) workers, (b) consumers and (c) others affected by the activities of foreign investors can bring disputes to the Multilateral Agreement on Investment dispute settlement mechanism. [30590]

Mrs. Roche: Investors, like others, are subject to the national laws of the countries in which they operate. Therefore, there is no need for workers, consumers or others to use the Multilateral Agreements on Investment's (MAI) dispute settlement mechanism for disputes against investors.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will seek to delay the finalisation of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment negotiations until the Department for International Development's assessment of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment's impact on poor countries has been completed. [30587]

Mrs. Roche: The Department for International Development's study on the MAI and developing countries will be ready in good time before the conclusion of the MAI negotiations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to consult British companies in respect of competition from foreign companies that are exempted from the provision of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [30591]

Mrs. Roche: The Department has consulted British business extensively throughout the negotiations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI). The competitiveness of UK companies will not be adversely affected by the Agreement. Foreign companies, like domestic ones, will continue to be covered by UK and EU competition law. The MAI will place obligations on states, not on companies; the question of exemption for foreign companies does not arise.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the exemptions from the proposed provisions of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment sought by members of the OECD. [30586]

Mrs. Roche: The UK's draft list of exceptions has already been placed in the Library. It includes exceptions for broadcasting, fishing, marine and air transport, and financial services. The draft lists from other countries have been tabled in confidence; it would not be appropriate for the UK to make them public.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has undertaken on the possible effects of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on regional development policies within the United Kingdom. [30585]

Mrs. Roche: The Multilateral Agreement on Investment's main purpose is to limit discrimination against investors on the grounds of their nationality. It will not constrain regional development policies.

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The President has announced that she proposes to defer decisions on contents for power stations pending the outcome of DTI's review of energy sources for power generation but that she is prepared to consider, on their merits, reasoned requests for exceptions to be made in particular cases. The review is expected to reach conclusions before the end of June.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received regarding the moratorium on gas-fired power-stations. [30940]

Energy Policy

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to conclude her review of energy policy. [30976]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 479.

Accountancy Regulation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the application of the Government's proposed open government measures on the accountancy regulatory structures sponsored by her Department. [31201]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The purpose of a Freedom of Information Act, as proposed in the "Your Right to Know" White Paper (Cm 3818), is to establish a general statutory right of access to official records and information held by public authorities. The White Paper proposes that the Act will apply to a wide range of bodies including private organisations insofar as they carry out statutory functions. The proposals are at present under public consultation, and the closing date for responses is 28 February.

Auditors

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the auditors' duties in respect of reporting money laundering to the regulatory authorities. [31055]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Auditors are subject to the statutory duty in the Criminal Justice Act 1993 which requires all persons to report to the appropriate authorities any suspicions of money laundering related to drug trafficking or terrorist activity, gained in the course of their work. Further requirements on auditors in particular to report other instances of money laundering are applied through the guidance issued by the Auditing Practices Board (APB).

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will provide for a duty of care incumbent on auditors by audit regulations. [31199]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have no statutory powers to impose on auditors a substantive duty of care to any person, or to modify the duties of care currently owed by auditors under the common law.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has for regulatory reform following the publication of the Guinness plc 1985 report. [31072]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: There are no proposals following directly from the publication of the Guinness report. However, the information gathered by the inspectors and their interim report have made a valuable contribution to the ongoing consideration of the corporate and financial regulatory systems.

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those of her Department's inspectors' reports which (a) are complete but will not be published and (b) are finalised and are being considered for publication, together with the total cost and fees paid to each of the inspectors in respect of each report. [31056]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: There has been no publicly announced appointment of inspectors under the Companies Act 1985 where their final report has been completed and not published.

Departmental Pay

Mr. Duncan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people employed by (a) her Department and (b) the agencies for which his Department is responsible earn (i) less than £3.20 per hour, (ii) between £3.20 and £3.60 per hour, (iii) between £3.60 and £4 per hour and (iv) between £4 and £4.62 per hour. [30758]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 23 February 1998]: No staff employed by the Department or its Agencies earn less than £3.60 per hour. Five staff employed by the Department and 135 staff employed by its Agencies earn between £3.60 and £4 per hour. Nine staff employed by the Department and 88 staff employed by its Agencies earn between £4 and £4.60 per hour.

Internet

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy on the adoption of a multiannual action plan on promoting safe use of the Internet as set out in COM (97) 582. [31284]

Mrs. Roche: The Government support the actions to be promoted by the action plan, whose approach builds on the UK's successful experience with the Internet Watch Foundation. The Government consider that international co-operation between national hotlines, and in the development of filtering systems, is crucial to the control of illegal and harmful content on the Internet.

Oil and Gas Licensing

Jacqui Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the outcome of the Eighth Landward Round of Oil and Gas Licensing. [31750]

Mr. Battle: I am pleased to announce the award of 35 licences to 27 companies for onshore oil and gas exploration covering 120 blocks. Licensees will now need to obtain any necessary consents from local planning authorities, who will take account of any environmental concerns, and to agree access terms with landowners before carrying out on-site activities under these licences.

The round has attracted particularly strong interest from companies targeting the UK's gas reserves, including conventional natural gas and coal-related methane resources.

I would like to see coal bed methane reserves—gas trapped in coal seams—exploited wherever possible, particularly in coal which is unlikely to be mined but also from potentially recoverable coal where extracting the gas beforehand can enhance mine safety. I recently consented to the UK's second coal bed methane development, at Arns Farm in Fife, and I hope to see further projects brought forward for approval in coming years.

I am concerned that interest by companies in coal bed methane has been hindered by the present licensing system which was designed to manage conventional oil and gas exploration. So I have asked my officials to open consultation later this year on proposals for a new form of onshore licence designed to encourage the exploitation of both conventional coal bed methane and other forms of coal-related gas.

There would be environmental benefits from using the considerable quantities of gas from abandoned coalworkings which escapes to atmosphere, where it is seventeen times more potent as a greenhouse gas than the exhaust from burning it would be. Although unsuitable as feed to the national gas grid, this gas can be burned locally to generate electricity or to power industrial processes and is a resource which the Government are keen to see used.

All exploitation of coal-related gases is carried out in consultation with the Coal Authority and the operators of active mines in the vicinity. The safety of properties on the surface is also taken fully into account.

The majority of all the awards announced today are in the East Midlands and south-east England, areas which both have previous oil and gas discoveries, including the recent oil find at Fiskerton Airfield near Lincoln, and a number of producing fields.

The awards cover 43 out of 50 applications received for licences—some of which competed for the same blocks. Seven applications still have issues outstanding but I have decided not to keep other applicants waiting and will make a further announcement when these issues have been resolved.

Duty Free Sales

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the procedures available for member states to request a European Commission investigation into (a) the impact on business of the abolition of intra-EU duty free and (b) the levels of spirit duty in EU states; whether it is her policy to request such investigations; and if she will make a statement. [29457]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 February 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

A European Commission investigation into the impact of abolition of intra-EU duty free is likely only if requested by the Council of Finance Ministers. The Government's position is as set out by the Prime Minister in his reply on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 265.

The European Commission is already required under the relevant directive to examine the rates of excise duty on alcohol and alcoholic beverages every two years, and report to Council. The current report is overdue.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions in the last 10 years on which the Prime Minister has travelled abroad to meet heads of state or government and been accompanied by (a) the Foreign Secretary, (b) the Home Secretary and (c) other Ministers. [27155]

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27809]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 February 1998]: I hold a range of meetings with outsiders within 10 Downing Street on policy matters. These vary in size. I have held two gatherings, which might be termed conferences, when there were more than 40 people present.

The first was an education summit held on 4 September 1997 to enable practitioners in schools to contribute to Government thinking on raising standards in schools. The cost of this seminar was £400.

The second, on 4 December 1997, was a summit which brought together senior businessmen, scientists and others to discuss how business could help in tackling climate change. Any costs incurred were minimal.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31170]

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy for responding to letters received in the (a) Scottish Gaelic, (b) Welsh, (c) Urdu, (d) Hindi and (e) Chinese language. [28052]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 February 1998]: Normal practice under this and previous Administrations has been to refer letters to the relevant Department for reply. This means that such correspondence would be responded to in accordance with standard Departmental practice. If a Prime Ministerial reply were warranted, replies would usually be sent in the English language, with a translation if practicable.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those Ministers who in order to avoid potential conflicts of interest have assigned to other Ministers responsibility for part of their portfolios, and list the areas of each Minister's responsibility which have been so assigned. [28723]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 February 1998]: This information is not held centrally. In accordance with the Ministerial Code, where it is proper for a Minister to retain a private interest, it is the rule that he or she should disclose that interest to Ministerial colleagues if they have to discuss public business in any way affecting it, and that the Minister should remain entirely detached from the consideration of that business. Observing this rule is an individual responsibility of each Minister.

Rural Affairs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to set up a Ministry of Rural Affairs following the reorganisation of MAFF; and if he will make a statement. [29739]

The Prime Minister: The question of any transfer of responsibility between Departments is being considered in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. No decisions have yet been reached.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what restrictions are placed on Ministers' powers to withhold information relating to themselves under the terms of the Official Secrets Act 1989; and what arrangements he has made to monitor the effectiveness of those restrictions. [30299]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 February 1998]: Under the Official Secrets Act 1989, Crown servants, including Government Ministers, must withhold information if they believe that such information is protected under the Act and they do not have lawful authority to disclose it—otherwise to disclose it would constitute an offence.

The Act protects specific categories of official information, documents or articles which a Crown servant, including a Government Minister or Government contractor, has or has had in their possession by virtue of their position as such. This might in some circumstances include information relating to their official duties.

It is an offence to disclose information in the following categories if the disclosure is made without lawful authority and is damaging (as defined in the Act):

security and intelligence

defence

international relations

foreign confidences

information which might lead to the commission of a crime

the special investigation powers under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 and the Security Service Act 1989.

There are no restrictions on refusing to provide information covered by the Act if the disclosure of such information would constitute an offence.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister under what circumstances Ministers have the power to require members of the public to agree to abide by the terms of the Official Secrets Act 1989; and what steps he takes to ensure Ministers do not abuse this power for personal reasons. [30295]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 February 1998]: Under the Official Secrets Act 1989 a Crown servant, including a Government Minister, can require anyone who is not a Crown servant or Government contractor under the Act, including a member of the public, to hold in confidence official information which falls into any of the six categories covered by the Official Secrets Act and which has been entrusted to them.

The six specified categories of official information covered by the Act are:

security and intelligence

defence

international relations

foreign confidences

information which might lead to the commission of a crime

the special investigation powers under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 and the Security Service Act 1989.

It is an offence to disclose such information without lawful authority, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that it is protected by the provisions of the Act and that the disclosure is damaging (as defined by the Act).

Mr. Gavyn Davies

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 473, what was the nature of the seminar attended by Mr. Gavyn Davies in Washington; who were the United States participants; and if he will make a statement. [30765]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 February 1998]: This seminar was to discuss common challenges faced by the US and UK Governments.

A number of US academics and officials attended.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to set the budget for the Strategic Communications Unit. [31104]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The budget for the Strategic Communications Unit will be set as part of the overall budget-setting process for the Prime Minister's Office and Cabinet Office in the usual way.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what projects have been undertaken by the Strategic Communications Unit since its inception. [31108]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1998]: Since its inception in January 1998 the Strategic Communications Unit has provided general advice and briefing for the Prime Minister on a range of issues. It has also worked on the following specific projects: upgrading the ministerial strategic planning computer system; preparing the Government's first Annual Report and redeveloping the No.10 website.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to apply the work of the Social Exclusion Unit to issues of rural poverty and deprivation; and if he will make a statement. [30024]

The Prime Minister: I have placed a copy of the Unit's work priorities in the libraries of the House. Most of them impact on the socially excluded wherever they live.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 25 February. [30616]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. Later today I shall have further such meetings.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Palestine

12. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the effectiveness of European Union development aid to the Palestine National Authority. [29621]

Mr. Foulkes: EU aid has helped the peace process in Palestine to survive under very difficult circumstances. The Commission is undertaking an evaluation of its programme to the Palestinians. We will be seeking to ensure that lessons learned from this evaluation are taken fully into account in the programme.

Ukraine

13. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures her Department plans to take to assist the Ukraine; and if she will make a statement. [29622]

Mr. Foulkes: In 1997/98, the Know How Fund is providing around £9 million in technical assistance for Ukraine notably in the energy and agriculture sectors. Last November, I saw for myself its effectiveness particularly in restructuring in coal mining areas.

We are currently restructuring our Know How Fund better to address the needs of the poor in transition countries.

Aid Co-ordination

14. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has for co-ordinating British aid with other Commonwealth countries. [29623]

Clare Short: At the 1997 Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in Edinburgh, the Government sought increased Commonwealth support for the international development strategy which is seeking to develop an internationally agreed basis for aid co-ordination among both developing and developed countries.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

15. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress she is making on the multilateral agreement on investment. [29624]

Clare Short: My Department has commissioned Queen Elizabeth House, Oxford to produce a study of the implications of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) for developing countries which will be ready in good time for the MAI Negotiating Group meeting in April. This initiative has been welcomed by the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development's (OECD) Development Assistance Committee and by NGOs. It will be made available to the governments of developing countries.

Aid (Good Government Criteria)

16. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the policy of her Department in respect of linking good government criteria to the provision of aid. [29625]

Clare Short: The Government want to develop long-term partnerships with developing countries which are committed to the elimination of poverty and pursue policies which promote responsive and accountable government. Good government is a prerequisite of sustainable development. We seek to support good government in all our work.

Montserrat

17. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on future funding from her Department for Montserrat. [29627]

Clare Short: I refer to the statement made to the House by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary on 18 February 1998, Official Report, columns 1019–22.

Tibet

18. Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received concerning the provision of aid for the indigenous people of Tibet. [29628]

Clare Short: There have been representations from a number of sources about the provision of aid to Tibet. My officials met the Dalai Lama's UK Representative on 4 February to discuss possible training scholarships and health sector needs. As I assured my hon. Friend at questions on 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 331, we make it an objective of our own and EU programmes to ensure that indigenous people are the main beneficiaries.

Baltic States

19. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what new proposals she has to extend the work of the know-how fund in the Baltic states. [29629]

Clare Short: I am planning a slight decline in the Know How Fund programme spending in the Baltic States. This is in accordance with our policy document "Support for Transition: A New Strategy", a copy of which is in the Library, and takes account of the relatively advanced progress which the Baltics have made. Our priority sectors there are public administration and (increasingly) rural development.

Zimbabwe

20. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made about the possible illegal seizure of farmland by the Government of Zimbabwe. [29630]

Clare Short: I have informed the Government of Zimbabwe that we are prepared to support a land reform programme that is properly planned, transparent, and intended to benefit the poor, but we will not support the programme they have announced.

Arms Sales

21. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department has had with the Foreign and Commonwealth

Office regarding the development criteria to be included in the proposed European Union code of conduct on arms sales. [29631]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID), together with other interested Government Departments, was consulted by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the drafting of the draft EU Code of Conduct on Arms Sales.

Dependent Territories

22. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to change the funding mechanism for overseas dependent territories. [29633]

Clare Short: Reasonable assistance to the dependent territories continues to be the responsibility of my Department. I have since May 1 made a number of changes in the Department's administrative system in order to stream-line decision making.

27. Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations her Department has received about future funding arrangements by her Department for British overseas territories. [29638]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier answer today to the hon. Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring). We have received a number of representations on this issue.

Urbanisation

23. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's role in combating problems of urbanisation and concentration of population in developing countries. [29634]

Clare Short: My Department is addressing these issues both with the multi-lateral organisations and within our programmes. The UN Global Conference on Human Settlements, "Habitat 2", discussed the issues of urbanisation in 1996 at Istanbul, and set out "The Habitat Agenda" for national and local governments to help facilitate a better life for people in towns. We are continuing to work in collaboration with the UN Centre for Human Settlements, UNDP and the World Bank to implement this Agenda.

Ethical Trading

24. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are her Department's plans for promoting ethical trading; and if she will make a statement. [29635]

Clare Short: I am keen to do all I can to support the ethical trading movement which provides a channel through which the working conditions of poor people in the supply chains of UK importers can be improved.

In the UK, we have provided £500,000 to support the work of the Ethical Trading Initiative which includes many of the major UK retail chains and other private sector partners, NGOs and trade unions. They are working together on methods of monitoring the implementation of voluntary codes for ethical sourcing and on developing a positive engagement between importers and their suppliers. I am also promoting fairly traded goods. We are working with partners overseas on these issues and, as our ideas on ethical trading develop, I envisage this aspect of our work expanding.

International AIDS Vaccine Initiative

25. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department has had regarding the international AIDS vaccine initiative. [29636]

Clare Short: Officials in my Department maintain regular contact with the administrator of the Initiative. We are currently exploring opportunities for greater collaboration.

Land Mines

28. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the progress of programmes for clearance of land mines; and if she will make a statement. [29639]

Clare Short: I signed the Ottawa Convention on behalf of the UK. We are doubling our expenditure on demining and we are working for greater international co-operation and more local capability in order to speed up demining worldwide.

Development Projects

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to encourage the private sector to become more involved with the support of overseas development projects. [29637]

Clare Short: We announced in the White Paper that we will develop a new partnership with the business sector, based on a shared approach to the eradication of poverty and in particular to strengthen support for investment and trade. The Department for International Development is actively taking forward this agenda and putting in place better mechanisms for consulting the private sector. I intend to set out further progress on this in a speech in the Summer.

EU Co-operation

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are the priorities of her Department in respect of EU co-operation for the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Union; and if she will make a statement on how she intends to take them forward. [29626]

Clare Short: During the UK Presidency, we will seek to improve the poverty focus and effectiveness of the EC's programmes. Our top priorities are to agree the EU negotiating mandate on the future of the Lomé Convention, which governs the aid, trade and political relations between the EU and 71 African, Caribbean and Pacific States, and to secure the EU's commitment to the OECD's 21st Century Strategy for poverty eradication.

Negotiations on the content of the EU's Lomé negotiating mandate are under-way in Council and we are seeking to ensure that poverty eradication is at the heart of the mandate. We are planning to discuss how to put the 21st Century Strategy into practice in the EU's programmes at a high level seminar which will be held on 17 March in Brussels with Development Ministers from Member States, appropriate European Commissioners and representatives of European Parliament Development Committee.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many meetings have been requested with her Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31299]

Clare Short: Records of the number of requests for meetings with Ministers are not kept. I have met with 10 Labour Members and three Conservative Members. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary had meetings with 11 Labour Members, three Conservative Members, and one Independent Member.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many of her officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31175]

Clare Short: Given the nature of our business, a large number of DFID staff have attended conferences over the past year. They would have done so only where DFID has a substantive interest and therefore all would have contributed to the discussions. However, detailed figures are not recorded centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

British Army of the Rhine

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual running cost of the British Army of the Rhine; and what were the figures for (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1988 at current prices. [3267]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1997, c. 86]: On the costs of the Army's garrisons in Germany, further information has been drawn together on the sum of these costs for the current financial year.

I regret that in calculating the figures for my original answer, I inadvertently omitted the costs of some minor, centrally funded units which are also based in Germany, but included those for our contribution towards some of the NATO headquarters in the country. I have now reassessed the estimated running costs of the Army in Germany to account both for these factors and for a revision of those costs for the formations which I properly included in my earlier answer. The net effect of these changes is that I now estimate the cost of the Army in Germany in 1997–98 to be £1,139 million.

The British Army of the Rhine ceased to exist as a formation from 1 April 1994 when 1(UK) Armoured Division and the United Kingdom Support Command (Germany) became fully operational. I regret that I remain unable to provide comparable costs for 1974, 1979 and 1988 as these were compiled on a different basis.

Defence Budget (Germany)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the defence budget in (a) cash and (b) percentage terms is taken up by the cost of maintaining the Army and RAF in Germany in the current financial year. [8134]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1997, c. 236–37]: On the costs of maintaining the Army and Royal Air Force's garrisons in Germany, further information has been drawn together.

I regret that the calculations given in my original answer inadvertently omitted the running costs associated with some minor, centrally funded units which are based in Germany, but included those for our contribution towards various NATO headquarters in the country. The estimated running costs of the Army and Royal Air Force in Germany to account both for these factors and for the revision of those costs for the formations which were properly included in my earlier answer. The net effect of these changes is that the estimated running costs for financial year 1997–98 for the Army and Royal Air Force in Germany are now £1,139 million and £169 million respectively. These costs represent about 5.2 per cent. of the Defence budget in the case of the Army and 0.8 per cent. for the Royal Air Force.

I am sorry that it has been necessary to make these corrections.

Research Programme

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, under his applied research programme he will list technology demonstrator projects by value, stating in each case (a) the spin off benefits of defence research into the private sector and (b) civil technologies applied to defence. [29521]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 18 February 1998]: Technology demonstration within the Applied Research Programme, as opposed to that technology demonstration which is part of project development, is not separately identified. The information requested is therefore not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 66, what are the current security classifications of (a) the last three annual environment, safety and health reports, (b) the last four quarterly health and safety reports and (c) the last five monthly reports to the Environment Agency on discharges from AWE which have been produced by the AWE Directorate of Environment, Safety and Health. [30564]

Mr. Spellar: The last three AWE Environment Safety and Health Reports have been unclassified. The last Report published was for 1996. Copies are provided to, among others, local council representatives and members of the general public who express an interest.

The last four quarterly health and safety reports were produced in two versions, unclassified and classified. They differ only in terms of the degree of detail included. The unclassified version provides the same essential safety information without breaching security regulations.

Monthly reports made by AWE to the Environment Agency on discharge over the last five months have all been unclassified. These reports are placed on the Public Register by the Environment Agency.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Warhead Hydrodynamics Division at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston, was set up; what is the purpose of this division; how many series of technical papers or reports are currently being produced by this division; and what are the names of each series. [30563]

Mr. Spellar: The Warhead Hydrodynamics Division was set up in 1955. In 1995 it was subsumed into a new Directorate and retitled the Hydrodynamics Department. Its purpose is to undertake research into high explosive detonation processes and the response of materials when subjected to explosive shocks. It produces a variety of working documents, but only one series of technical papers which is known as "Hydrodynamics Department Technical report, R Series".

Storm Shadow

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Storm Shadow stand off missile is expected to enter the RAF service; and what is the current estimated cost of the programme. [30824]

Mr. Spellar: The Storm Shadow Conventionally Armed Stand Off Missile is expected to enter RAF service in December 2001. The current estimated cost of the programme is £934 million.

Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the location of the new NATO headquarters for GIBMED. [30809]

Dr. Reid: As part of the implementation of NATO's new command structure GIBMED, the NATO headquarters based in Gibraltar is due to close. Gibraltar will be located in Regional Command South. In the new structure, NATO command of Gibraltar will be the responsibility of Commander-in-Chief Allied Forces South Europe, based at Naples. The Commanders of Allied Naval and Air Forces South, also based at Naples, will exercise region-wide air and maritime responsibilities on behalf of the Commander-in-Chief. Regional Commanders will also be able to propose the establishment of areas of responsibility for particular Joint Sub-Regional Commanders in specific contingencies or missions. Such proposals will require the approval of all NATO nations. NATO's Joint Sub-Regional Commands, once implemented, would have no permanently established boundaries or areas of responsibility.

Torpedo Testing Facilities

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the medium to long-term need for United Kingdom torpedo testing facilities; and if he will make a statement. [30028]

Dr. Reid: Current plans for in-water testing of United Kingdom new production torpedoes assume the continuing use over the next ten years of the British Underwater Test and Evaluation Centre (BUTEC). This facility is situated in North West Scotland and is managed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency on behalf of the Secretary of State for Defence. In addition to testing of new production torpedoes, the BUTEC facilities are used for in-service trials and exercise firings, which are expected to continue for the foreseeable future.

HEALTH

Secure Mental Health Units

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many secure mental health units there are in the United Kingdom; and how many patients are in each. [29541]

Mr. Boateng: There are 33 secure units in England with 1,504 places. This does not include the high security hospitals. Information on the number of places occupied is not kept, but anecdotal evidence suggests that most medium secure units are running at capacity most of the time.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what trends he has identified in the incidence of TB in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; if he will make extra resources available for the detection and treatment of TB; and if he will make a statement. [30466]

Ms Jowell: The numbers of notifications of tuberculosis (TB) in the United Kingdom are published in the Annual Abstract of Statistics. Information for the years 1987 to 1997 are given in the table:

Year	Number of notifications of tuberculosis in the UK[1]
1987	5,745
1988	5,778
1989	6,059
1990	5,897
1991	6,078
1992	6,441
1993	6,564
1994	6,228
1995	6,174
1996	6,238
1997	[2]6,430

[1] Annual Abstract of Statistics.
[2] Provisional.
Sources:
Scottish Health Service Common Services Agency; Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland); and Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

There was a 90 per cent. decrease in notifications of TB in the UK between 1948 and 1987. There was a small increase in cases after the late 1980s, but figures have now levelled out and the latest full year provisional figure is 6,430. This success is against a worldwide resurgence in TB in recent years which is having a small but important impact on trends in the UK. Data suggest that certain parts of the community—older white people who were exposed to TB when they were younger, homeless people, HIV infected individuals and certain ethnic minority populations—are at an increased risk from TB. Many of these groups are harder to reach, and inner city areas—London, in particular—do see a disproportionate amount of TB due to a concentration of risk groups in those areas.

No resources have been specifically identified for TB detection and treatment. Health authorities are given general allocations for hospital and community health services to commission health care services for their resident population. All 100 health authorities in England will receive a real terms cash boost in 1998–99. The 1.9 per cent. real terms increase in general allocations is the largest for five years. It is for individual health authorities to decide the level and type of services purchased, taking account of local circumstances and national policies and priorities. TB is an important public health concern and purchasers of health care need to ensure that adequate resources are provided to meet this in their contracting for TB services. While the details of local TB policies depend on local factors, local policies must be considered within a national context (especially for Bacille-Calmette-Guérin (BCG) immunisation) and national policy should prevail. The importance of this has been brought to the attention of health authorities. The Department continues to purchase the BCG vaccine and make it available free to the National Health Service. The Department is also funding the Public Health Laboratory Service, with around £400,000, to conduct a detailed Survey of Notifications of TB in 1998. The survey will provide important information on trends and incidence.

The UK has an excellent record of TB control and we are determined that this should remain the case. The BCG immunisation programme, treatment of identified cases and screening of their close contacts, screening and treatment for immigrants from countries with a high prevalence of TB and active surveillance of TB continue. We are responding positively to new adverse developments in other countries and strengthening policies to protect the health of the nation against TB.

Tinnitus

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned, and at what cost, into the alleviation of tinnitus. [30738]

Mr. Milburn: The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC and Trent Regional Office were supporting research specifically into tinnitus at the MRC Institute of Hearing Research in Nottingham at an annual level of approximately £100,000 per year until the end of 1992.

Since then, there have been two studies on the quality of life of those who report tinnitus and there is continued work in this area. In addition, a study of young people's lifestyles has shown an association between those reporting tinnitus and those who have experienced high levels of leisure noise from, for example, discos and personal cassette players. This work is currently being prepared for publication, although it has been presented at several conferences during 1996–97. It is expected that future clinical and epidemiological studies at the Institute of Hearing Research will continue to incorporate a tinnitus aspect.

The MRC also currently funds a number of researchers to investigate at a basic level the mechanisms through which the ear analyses, and the brain interprets and attends to, sound. New approaches to tinnitus, including treatments for the sensory neural hearing losses that underlie most cases, are expected to result from such work. The cost of this research is unavailable at the current time.

Consultant Episode Costs

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the annual average cost for completed NHS consultant episodes since 1987–88 in real terms. [31226]

Mr. Milburn: The average costs per finished consultant episode for acute care, for each year since 1987–88, are listed in the table. Costs prior to 1990–91 are not comparable to later years owing to a discontinuity in accounting practice.

Average cost per acute finished consultant episode (FCE) in real terms (at 1995–96 prices)

Year	Cost per acute FCE (£)
1987–88	1,091
1988–89	1,134
1989–90	1,111
1990–91	1,093
1991–92	1,087
1992–93	1,087
1993–94	1,033
1994–95	1,022
1995–96	995

Trust and Authority Boards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) chairpersons and (b) other board members on (i) NHS trusts, (ii) Ambulance NHS trusts and (iii) health authorities previously served on a community health council in a volunteer capacity; [31043]

(2) how many chairpersons of (a) NHS trusts, (b) Ambulance NHS trusts and (c) health authorities were, prior to their appointment, chair of a community health council. [31044]

Mr. Milburn: This information is not collated centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Abortion

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residents of England who met the requirements for an abortion as specified by the Abortion Act 1967 were unable to obtain an abortion paid for by the NHS in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [31110]

Ms Jowell: This information is not collected centrally. Information on whether an abortion was purchased by the National Health Service or privately is collected. In 1996, 72 per cent. of abortions in England were purchased by the NHS. Statistics for 1997 are not yet available.

Suicides

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce the number of suicides. [31061]

Mr. Boateng: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 437. The Green Paper, Our Healthier Nation, published in February 1998, makes clear the importance we place on reducing the burden of mental health problems. The Green paper proposes a target to reduce the suicide rate by one sixth by 2010 and sets out examples of what action needs to be taken at government, community and individual level. Consultation on the Green Paper proposals will last until 30 April 1998.

Mental Health

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to protect mentally ill patients from harassment within their community. [31060]

Mr. Boateng: We recognise the vital importance of tackling discrimination against mentally ill patients. The Department's impact strategy aims to increase knowledge and understanding about mental health among the general public, thereby promoting a positive image of mental health and combating stigma. We are adopting a variety of approaches to take forward the strategy including collaboration with the voluntary sector; the targeting of resources on key "at risk groups" such as young men; influencing the media; and expanding the Health Education Authority's World Mental Health Day campaign. This year, we are spending more than £1.4 million nationally on public health information and mental health promotion. Mental health services have a responsibility to proceed with sensitivity and adopt an informative, open approach in handling their plans for community developments in order to convince people that they have nothing to fear.

SCOTLAND

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27769]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information requested is as follows:

Conference on Traditional Building Materials

This conference was organised by Historic Scotland to raise awareness of the value of traditional building materials, to promote Scottish resources and to encourage revival of the skills needed for their manufacture, extraction and use. The cost of arranging the conference, which ran at a profit of £29,000, was £42,000.

Safer Communities Through Partnership

This conference was held at the Scottish Police College, Tulliallan and involved The Scottish Office, local councils, the police and voluntary organisations. The cost was £2,000.

Superhighways For Learning—Making it Happen

The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department, in association with the Scottish Council for Educational Technology, ran a series of 3 conferences. The main aims of the conferences were to promote the findings from the Education Department's Superhighways Initiative and to highlight the work of the newly formed Superhighways Task Force. The total cost to the Department of these 3 conferences was £25,000.

Risk Assessment of Offenders

This conference was sponsored by The Scottish Office Social Work Services Group under the auspices of the Association of Directors of Social Work. The aim of the conference was to inform the debate on offender risk assessment and its cost was £6,000.

Scottish National Rural Partnership

A series of 3 conferences was held on (1) Effective Partnership Working, (2) Tackling Rural Crime, and (3) Food, Local Communities and Rural Development. The conferences were aimed at those involved in Rural Scotland—Scottish Homes, Rural Forum, SCVO, Scottish Agricultural College etc.

As an attendance charge was levied, there was no cost to the Department.

Better Data Through Partnership and IT Conference

The purpose of this conference was (1) to raise awareness of current developments and issues in the field of electronic information transfer, (2) to promote partnership between central and local government in relation to the exchange of information, and (3) to promote the use of information technology and information systems. The cost of the conference was £1,500.

The NHS in Scotland Conference

This is an annual conference held for the Minister of Health and officials to meet with a wide range of senior personnel throughout the NHS in Scotland to discuss policy, service and developmental change in the NHS in Scotland in the year ahead. This year's conference cost £25,000.

Health Board and Trust Chairmen's Conference

This is an annual conference where the Minister of Health and senior officials meet with Health Board and Trust Chairmen to discuss major policy and strategic issues for the NHS in the coming year. This year's conference cost £12,000.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31169]

Mr. Dewar: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27770]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, expenditure on official hospitality by The Scottish Office and its departmental agencies has amounted to £52,330 and £16,916 respectively.

Information on hospitality spending by non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of British-registered foreign-owned fishing vessels at each Scottish fishing port. [30497]

Mr. Macdonald: There are 38 vessels which are regarded as wholly or partly owned or controlled by foreign interests and administered by Scottish ports. These vessels' ports of administration are Ayr (23); Peterhead (10); Aberdeen (two); Buckie, Fraserburgh and Kirkwall (one each). Some may, however, operate predominantly out of foreign ports.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beam trawlers are based at each Scottish fishing port. [30530]

Mr. Macdonald: The information is as shown in the table:

Port of administration	Number of vessels in the beam trawl segment
Aberdeen	2
Ayr	2
Buckie	3
Fraserburgh	2
Peterhead	11
Total	20

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated total cost of acquiring the Holyrood site for the Scottish Parliament. [30854]

Mr. McLeish: The estimated total cost of acquiring and preparing the Holyrood site is approximately £4 million.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when (a) he and (b) his officials first became aware of the asbestos contamination on the Holyrood site. [30851]

Mr. McLeish: Neither the Department nor the Secretary of State are aware of any asbestos contamination at the Holyrood site.

Contamination would arise only if the asbestos was mishandled. The Secretary of State became aware on 16 February 1998 that Scottish and Newcastle plc had undertaken to remove asbestos from their building in Holyrood before transferring the property. Officials had been informed on 16 January 1998.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the estimated cost of clearing the Holyrood site (a) at the time the contract for purchasing the site was agreed and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available. [30852]

Mr. McLeish: The estimated cost of clearing the Holyrood site is about £500,000. This estimate has not changed since the purchase price was agreed.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimated total cost of establishing the Scottish Parliament, separately identifying provision for temporary accommodation for the Parliament pending completion of the Holyrood Parliament building. [30855]

Mr. McLeish: The estimated construction costs of the building at Holyrood will be around £55 million, including site acquisition costs and demolition costs, but not including fees and VAT. The actual costs will depend on the final design, the level of fees negotiated and the price of construction, which will be determined by competitive tender.

A number of venues are being considered for the interim accommodation. Until a venue is chosen it is not possible to say what the estimated costs will be.

Funicular Railway, CairnGorm

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase his Department's contribution to the CairnGorm funicular railway following agreement of the level of the Objective 1 grant. [31240]

Mr. Wilson: The Scottish Office it not making a direct financial contribution to the CairnGorm funicular railway project.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will ask Highlands and Islands Enterprise to publish the option appraisal regarding the proposed funicular railway on CairnGorm referred to by the Scottish Office Minister of State in his recent letter to Aberdeenshire Council; [31229]

(2) what provisions have been made by Highlands and Islands Enterprise for expenditure that may be incurred under Clause 10(d) of the S.50 agreement relating to the proposed funicular railway on CairnGorm; [31231]

(3) what projects will receive a reduction in support as a result of proposed HIE expenditure on the proposed funicular railway. [31238]

Mr. Wilson: These are operational matters for Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the Chairman of that organisation to write to the hon. Member.

Unpasteurised Milk

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many outbreaks of food poisoning in each year between 1986 and 1996 were related to the consumption of unpasteurised milk, broken down by infective agent, if known; and if he will make a statement. [30726]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 24 February 1998]: Sixteen outbreaks attributed to unpasteurised cows milk were reported to the Scottish Centre for Infection and Environmental Health between 1986 and 1996. Thirteen were of salmonella infection and three of campylobacter infection. None have been reported since 1992.

1986: Two outbreaks: salmonellosis.

1987: Five outbreaks: two salmonellosis, three campylobacteriosis.

1988: One outbreak: salmonellosis.

1989: None.

1990: Two outbreaks: salmonellosis.

1991: Four outbreaks: salmonellosis.

1992: Two outbreaks: salmonellosis.

1993: Two outbreaks: campylobacteriosis.

1994: None.

1995: The outbreak surveillance system did not operate in 1995.

1996: None.

In addition to the above there was one case of food poisoning (E.coli 0157) associated with raw goats' drinking milk in 1996. The question of pasteurisation of milk from goats and sheep was the subject of a recent consultation. No decisions have yet been taken on this.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the advantages of extending the compulsory pasteurisation of milk to milk from (a) goats and (b) sheep; and if he will make a statement. [30730]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 24 February 1998]: These issues were considered in the consultation exercise on the sale of raw sheep and goats' milk in Scotland, conducted during the Autumn 1996. The consultation paper included a number of possible options for the course of future policy. No decisions have yet been taken on this policy.

Earnings Arrestments

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will (a) institute research into and (b) review the usage of earnings arrestments introduced by the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987. [31015]

Mr. McLeish: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has commissioned a study into the operation of the procedures introduced by the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987. This research includes a review of the usage of the earnings arrestment procedure. The final results of this study are expected imminently.

The Government will give consideration to the study report when it is available and will consider whether further legislation on the earnings arrestment procedure is desirable.

Cancer

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent research he has evaluated on the correlation between the incidence of cancer and related illnesses and methods of production and working practices in the electronics and information technology industry; and if he will make a statement. [30774]

Mr. Galbraith: The Chief Scientist's Office at The Scottish Office Department of Health has not funded any research projects on the correlation between the incidence of cancer and related illnesses and the electronics industry.

The Health and Safety Executive will, however, be publishing on 4 March 1998 a report of its investigation into the risk of miscarriage for women working in the UK semiconductor industry.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the incidence of (a) cancer and (b) related illnesses in communities which provide the labour force for companies engaged in the electronics and information technology industry; and if he will make a statement. [30773]

Mr. Galbraith: None. I am aware however of recent media coverage in Scotland about the incidence of miscarriages among women working in the electronics industry. The Health and Safety Executive, which has responsibility for workplace issues, has recently completed a five year study into miscarriage rates in the semiconductor industry. The findings of the study will be published on 4 March 1998.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the incidence of cancer and related illnesses in the Inverclyde Council area in each of the past 10 years; what is the average incidence for similar-sized populations elsewhere in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [30775]

Mr. Galbraith: The table shows the incidence of cancer in Inverclyde and selected other local government districts in the west of Scotland between 1986 and 1995.

Incidence of cancer in Inverclyde and several other local government districts in 1986–95: Numbers of new cases (incidence) and incidence rates per 100,000 by sex and year of diagnosis All malignant neoplasms (ICD-9 140–208, excluding 173)

Scheduled Offences

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individuals from (a) loyalist and (b) republican backgrounds have served prison sentences following conviction for scheduled offences in each of the past 10 years; how many of these persons are still in prison; and if he will make a statement. [30967]

Mr. McLeish: Details of prisoners convicted under the Prevention of Terrorism Act and released before 1996 are not available. No prisoners were convicted under the Act in 1996 or 1997; one prisoner was convicted in 1998. He has no known loyalist or republican links.

White Fish Landings

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress towards deciding upon designated ports for the purposes of white fish landings. [30025]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency, together with UK Fisheries Departments, are currently giving consideration to steps which can be taken to improve the effectiveness of fisheries enforcement in the UK. Details of their proposals for a related scheme of designated landing ports for other than pelagic landings, for which separate arrangements apply, will be set out in a consultation paper to be issued shortly.

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received over his decision to initiate a review of the future opportunities for digital broadcasting of Gaelic, with particular reference to potential conflicts of interest; and if he will make a statement. [30027]

Mr. Wilson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Perth (Ms Cunningham) on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 369.

Prison Officers

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will report on progress towards implementation of section 28 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 in respect of prison officers; and if he will make a statement. [30029]

Mr. McLeish: This matter is under consideration, with consultations taking place between the Scottish Prison Service and the Prison Services for England and Wales and Northern Ireland to determine what arrangements might be made for reaching agreement on the pay of prison staff.

Parliamentary Answers

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department intends to provide an answer to the question from the hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (reference 20060) tabled on 5 December 1997. [31123]

Mr. Galbraith: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 73.

Higher Education

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the Government's response to the report of the Scottish Committee of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education. [31500]

Mr. Wilson: I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses copies of the Scottish Office response to the report of the Scottish (Garrick) Committee of the National (Dearing) Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education.

I would like to commend Sir Ron Garrick and his committee for their work in producing such a comprehensive report in a comparatively short time. The Government look forward to working with the higher and further education sectors in Scotland in implementing the agreed recommendations and those of the main Dearing Report to which it relates.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Products

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the potential redefinition of British yoghurt products containing fruit and/or nuts under Codex proposals. [30696]

Mr. Rooker: The UK is opposed to any definition of 'yoghurt' which might unreasonably restrict product innovation and diversity, without providing any clear benefit to our consumers. The UK believes that the definition of composite yoghurt products, containing ingredients such as fruit or nuts, is unnecessary in the draft Codex text.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received from (a) consumers and (b) retailers in respect of the Codex proposals on the labelling of bio-yoghurt products; [30695]

(2) what representations he has received from (a) the Dairy Industry Federation and (b) the International Dairy Federation following the Codex proposals regarding the labelling of bio-yoghurt products. [30694]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has received no formal representations from consumers, or the International Dairy Federation, concerning the draft codex text covering yoghurt. However, the Provision Trade Federation, who represent some retailers, and the Dairy Industry Federation have written to express their opposition to the draft text as it restricts the use of the term yoghurt to products which contain cultures of Streptococcus thermophilus and Lactobacillus delbrueckii subsp. bulgaricus only. Both organisations would like the definition broadened to include all products currently sold legally in the UK as yoghurt.

Consumer groups, and industry and retail bodies, will have a further opportunity to express their views on the issue to officials prior to European and worldwide meetings scheduled for May this year.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with (a) EU countries and (b) the USA about the labelling of bio-yoghurt products. [30699]

Mr. Rooker: Officials had discussions with EU Member States, but not the USA, on the definition and labelling of yoghurt in 1996. Views vary from those who want the term yoghurt to be restricted to fermented milk products containing cultures of Streptococcus thermophilus and Lactobacillus delbrueckii.subsp. bulgaricus only, to those, such as the UK, who want a broader definition to reflect products currently sold legally in the Member State. Further discussions, both in Europe and worldwide, are scheduled for May this year.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the means of funding of the Food Standards Agency. [31277]

Mr. Rooker: Chapter 8 of the White Paper, "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change", sets out the Government's proposal to pass a greater proportion of the cost of funding food safety work from the taxpayer onto the food industry. The Government will consult with the main interested parties on detailed options for achieving this before drawing up final proposals.

Cattle Passport Centre

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which locations were considered for the siting of the cattle passport centre; and if he will publish the results of the operating and capital cost analysis conducted in respect of the location exercise. [28857]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 10 February 1998]: Some 80 sites were considered against selection criteria such as whether there was sufficient space. Seven sites were visited. These were in Exeter, Guildford, Huntingdon, Manchester (two sites), Sheffield and Workington.

Three sites were shortlisted. These sites were at Guildford (a MAFF site), Manchester (a vacant Government Office outside the MAFF Estate) and Workington (a British Steel site).

At the time of the decision to locate in Workington, it was clear that running costs for that site were likely to be lower than elsewhere. Subsequently, a cost benefit analysis was carried out which took account of the site specific costs, the set up costs and the running costs of each site, as estimated at that stage, over a fifteen year period. The analysis did not include the common costs of the whole Cattle Tracing System project, for instance procuring specialist equipment.

The results showed that Workington was the lowest cost of the three sites analysed. The comparative costs over 15 years (discounted to present day terms) were:

Workington: £14.3 million;

Manchester: £15.6 million;

Guildford: £17.7 million.

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27774]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Conferences organised by the Department since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the rates of absenteeism in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if he will make a statement. [26587]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Information in the form precisely requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, a comprehensive analysis of sickness absence in the Civil Service is produced annually by OHSA Ltd. and copies of their 1995 and 1996 reports have been placed in the Library of the House.

The 1995 report indicated an average of 9.1 days sickness absence per staff year for this Department (including some smaller Agencies) but in 1996 the average was reduced to 7.8 days. Information in respect of 1997 is not yet available.

Responsibility for attendance matters within the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, the Central Science Laboratory Agency, the Veterinary Laboratories Agency, the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, the Meat Hygiene Service Agency and the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Agency has been delegated to the Agency Chief Executives and I have asked them to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Information in respect of the Non-Departmental Public Bodies is given in the table.

Letter from Michael Finnigan to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 25 February 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the estimated rates of absenteeism within the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA).

FRCA is a new agency which was launched on 1 April 1997, and has no absence figures prior to this date.

Between 1 April 1997 and 31 December 1997 2,689 days were lost through sickness absence. This gives an average figure of 4.8 days per employee, which would suggest an annualised rate at 6.4 days per employee.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 25 February 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your Parliamentary Question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food requesting information about the rates of absenteeism for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 to date has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency.

The percentage rates of absenteeism for the Meat Hygiene Service are as follows:

1995/96: 4.1 per cent.

1996/97: 4.23 per cent.

1997/98 (to date): 3.10 per cent.

The above percentages represent the number of days lost in comparison to total possible worked.

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 25 February 1998:

As Agency Chief Executive, I am responding to your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries & Food regarding the rates of absenteeism with the Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science.

Selected aggregated data in relation to sickness absence is provided by the Civil Service Occupational Health & Safety Agency (OHSA) on an annual basis, but does not identify data by financial years. The 1995 report for the core Department included the Directorate of Fisheries Research (DFR) (now the CEFAS Agency). This shows an average of 9.1 days sickness absence per staff year for 1995, but there are no separate figures for the Agency. At the present time there are no figures available for 1996 onwards.

Sickness absence is monitored on a continuous individual basis within the Agency, to ensure that any individual's problems are identified and managed. Absence details are held on the Chessington Computer Centre payroll system, and individual records can be accessed. However, it is not possible to interrogate the system for aggregated figures. Records could be accessed and aggregated manually, but not in the time available. CEFAS is presently setting up a Personnel Database, and when fully operational it is intended that the database should provide sickness absence data for routine management purposes and for general enquiries on summary data for the Agency.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 25 February 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on rates of absenteeism in 1995–96, 1996–97 to date, in the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA).

By way of background, the VLA was launched as an Agency on 1 October 1995 as a result of the merger between the Central Veterinary Laboratory (CVL), an Agency since April 1990, and the Veterinary Investigation Service (VIS), formerly part of the State Veterinary Service.

Information in the form that has been requested is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

However, selected aggregated data in relation to sick absence is provided by the Civil Service Occupational Health and Safety Agency (OHSA) on an annual basis. This data shows an average of 9.4 days sick absence per staff year in 1995 in the CVL. At the present time there are no figures available for 1996 onwards.

Figures for the VIS would have been included with MAFF figures prior to 1996.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 25 February 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about rates of absenteeism for the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 to date in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

The rates of absenteeism in the VMD for the periods requested are:

i) 1995–96: 2.4%

ii) 1996–97: 2.9%

iii) 1997–98 to date: 3.4%

The increase in absenteeism in 1997/98 is attributable to one member of staff on long term sick leave. Discounting this absence the rate would be 2.7% which is comparable with the rates for previous years.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 25 February 1998:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning rates of absenteeism.

Information on sick absence is not presently available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

I am, however, able to provide details for the 1995 calendar year in which an average of 5.6 days sick absence were taken per staff year. This data is provided by the Civil Service Occupational Health & Safety Agency on an annual basis but at the present time no data is available for 1996 onwards.

A separate exercise, undertaken by CSL, indicates an average of 5.4 days sick absence for the period 1 October 1996 to 30 September 1997 and 1.8 days sick absence for the period 1 October 1997 to 31 December 1997.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his Department's policy on the (a) class and (b) mode of travel abroad for Ministers and public servants. [25553]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The rules for DCMS Ministers, as for Ministers generally, are that the Secretary of State is entitled to use the best available class of air travel for all journeys by air. Junior Ministers may travel by the best available class for flights lasting longer than 2½ hours but should normally travel by Club or equivalent class, or economy class when an intermediate class is not available, on flights of less than 2½ hours.

The rules for Officials are set out in the DCMS Staff Handbook and I shall write to the right hon. Member to let him have a copy of the relevant pages. Copies of my reply will be place in the Libraries of the House.

The objective throughout is to secure value for money, striking a suitable balance between economy and convenience.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Lifelong Learning

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will publish his consultation paper on lifelong learning; and if he will make a statement. [31351]

Mr. Blunkett: I am today laying before Parliament copies of a Green Paper on lifelong learning, The Learning Age (Cm 3790). I am also placing in the Library copies of the Government's response to the report of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education under the chairmanship of Sir. Ron Dearing and my response to the report of the Further Education Funding Council's Widening Participation Committee under the chairmanship of Helena Kennedy QC, now Baroness Kennedy, all of which are being published today.

Lifelong learning is at the heart of the Government's education and training policies. Higher education and further education play key roles in lifelong learning. The Learning Age sets out the Government's vision for a learning society in which learning is easily available, valued and enjoyed—an everyday feature of life for all people of all ages—and we have skilled and qualified workforce that will be essential in the 21st century.

The Learning Age aims to engage employers, trades unions, individual men and women and those who deliver and plan education and training to work with us to develop a "learning society". I hope our proposals and the questions we pose will stimulate a large response.

Education Spending

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the proportion of gross domestic product spent on education in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country in the last financial year. [30839]

Dr. Howells: Information on the proportion of gross domestic product spent on education in each OECD country is contained in table B1.t of 'Education at a Glance OECD Indicators 1997' published in December 1997, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. The latest year for which comparative information is available is 1994. Comparisons across countries are complicated by the need for consistency of definition: the OECD figures for the UK may differ from the main UK measure as published in "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses".

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the capital expenditure on education by each local authority in England in 1997. [30863]

Mr. Byers: In the financial year 1996–97, capital expenditure on education by each local authority in England was as follows:

Jobseekers

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the discretion open to local job centre managers in respect of those in receipt of the jobseeker's allowance wishing to participate in local job clubs; and if he will make a statement. [30026]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Charles Kennedy, dated 25 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question on the discretion open to local Jobcentre managers in respect of those in receipt of Jobseeker's Allowance wishing to participate in local Jobclubs. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

The eligibility requirement for entry to a Jobclub is that a person must be continuously unemployed for at least 26 weeks. This means they must have been signing at an Employment Service Jobcentre claiming Jobseeker's Allowance and/or National Insurance Credits, unless they have been in receipt of Income Support or Incapacity Benefit which do not require them to be signing on (for example, if they are sick or a lone parent). However, exceptions to the six months unemployment requirement are made for people with disabilities, ex-prisoners, former members of HM forces, people with literacy or numeracy difficulties, people needing basic training in English (and Welsh/Gaelic), labour market returnees and those who have become unemployed as a result of large scale redundancies.

I understand there are no plans currently to review these eligibility conditions.

I hope this is helpful.

Careers Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what responsibilities the Careers Service has under the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds. [29208]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 12 February 1998]: Responsibility in the delivery of the New Deal rests locally with New Deal partners. We have encouraged Careers Services to play a full role, either as individual companies or as part of consortiums, notably in the provision of careers advice during the Gateway.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on his proposals in the Green Paper, Excellence for all Children, Meeting Special Education Needs to end the current consent arrangements in respect of placing individual children with a statement at non-approved independent schools. [29704]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department is still analysing the responses to the Green Paper. When we have a fuller picture, I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many EBD special schools there are in each local education authority area in England. [29709]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department's most recent estimate, based on material held on the Register of Educational Establishments, is that some 280 maintained and non-maintained special schools cater wholly or mainly for children with emotional and behavioural difficulties in England. The distribution is contained in the following table:

New Deal

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers have been contacted by the Employment Service in respect of the new deal for young unemployed people; how many have agreed in principle to take part; how many have signed new deal contracts; and if he will give each figure broken down by size of employer. [26227]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employment Service and New Deal partners have made initial contact, including sending promotional material and setting meetings, with over 70,000 employers. The Large Organisations Unit has held meetings with 164 businesses. So far, some 7,000 firms have expressed interest in taking part in new deal and over 1,100 have signed Employer Agreements, with more to follow suit shortly. The disaggregation by size of employer is not yet available, but the majority of agreements are at local level, with small and medium businesses.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) young people unemployed for more than six months and (b) people unemployed for more than two years he has assumed will participate in the New Deal in 1998–99, broken down by travel to work area or other suitable locality. [29688]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Each New Deal programme will offer help to those who become eligible.

Our New Deal programmes are being delivered through local partnerships. For planning purposes, the Employment Service has provided its partners in each local unit of delivery with an indicative assumption for the numbers of young people who might join the New Deal for 18–24 year olds in 1998–99. Those planning assumptions are based on current unemployment levels. They are not forecasts of the actual numbers who will participate in the New Deal for 18–24 year olds. They do, however, enable the Employment Service and its partners in each local area to conduct better informed negotiations with organisations bidding to deliver New Deal programmes and services, and help to ensure that adequate resources are in place locally to meet potential demand.

I will shortly be placing in the Library a list showing the indicative planning assumption for the New Deal for 18–24 year olds in each unit of delivery. We have yet to finalise planning assumptions for participation in the New Deal for long-term unemployed people aged 25 or over.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if in-house company training schemes which do not lead directly to an NVQ will be accepted as the training element in the private employment option for 18 to 24 year olds and the long-term unemployed under the New Deal. [30493]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Employers may provide New Deal participants with in-house training in cases where it has been agreed with the Employment Service that the training is of a standard which meets the quality requirements of the New Deal. In these cases, the in-house training received by the New Deal participant will be mapped against NVQ frameworks for the appropriate occupational sector and, based on this, the young person would be registered for an NVQ.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of (a) young unemployed and (b) long-term unemployed participants in the New Deal are expected to have a criminal record. [30489]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Each New Deal programme is designed to offer help to all those who become eligible. The claimant unemployment statistics do not provide information on previous criminal records.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people have been assisted by the New Deal in the South Humber area. [29927]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for young people in South Humber will begin on 6 April 1998. At this stage no young people in South Humber have entered the New Deal.

Further Education

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students in further education colleges were engaged on franchised courses in each of the last four financial years; and what proportion of total students this represented in each case. [29299]

Dr. Howells: The following table sets out the number of students on franchised provision funded by the Further Education Funding Council for 1994–95 (the first year for which figures are available) to 1996–97. The figures are collected by academic, not financial, year.

Academic year	Number of students on franchised provision	Percentage of the total number of students
1994–95	140,000	5
1995–96	545,000	18
1996–97	660,000	19

Unemployment (Exeter)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) unemployed people aged under 26 years and (b) unemployed people out of work for over six months will be eligible for assistance under the New Deal in Exeter. [27657]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the numbers of young people aged 18–24 or the numbers of long-term unemployed people aged 25 and over who will benefit from our New Deal programmes for these groups.

In January 1998, some 118,000 18–24 year olds were recorded as having claimed Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for six months or more; each month about 15,000 to 20,000 18–24 year olds reach six months' claimant unemployment. In the same month, some 216,000 people aged 25 or over were recorded as having claimed JSA for more than two years; each month between 5,000 and 10,000 people who are 25 or over reach two years' claimant unemployment. It is not possible to provide fully comparable figures for Exeter. In January 1998 in Exeter, 185 18–24 year olds were recorded as having claimed JSA for six months or more, and 391 people aged 25 or over were recorded as having claimed JSA for more than two years.

I will shortly be placing in the Library a list showing the indicative planning assumption for participation in the New Deal for 18–24 year olds in 1998–99 in each local unit of delivery. These planning assumptions are based on current unemployment levels. They are not forecasts of the actual numbers who will participate in the New Deal for 18–24 year olds. We have yet to finalise planning assumptions for participation in the New Deal for long-term unemployed people aged 25 or over.

University Applications

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish by university each course of study for which there has been a reduction in the numbers of applicants of over 25 per cent against last year's figures. [30173]

Dr. Howells: The information is not available centrally. However, figures from the University and College Admissions Service (UCAS) giving the percentage change of applications from last year for degree courses attracting more than 10,000 applicants show that there have not been reductions of over 25 per cent. in any subject.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many long-term unemployed people in Bury, North (a) under 25 and (b) over 25 years he estimates will participate in the New Deal (i) by 1 April and (ii) in the course of 1998–99. [29930]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for 18–24 year olds will begin in Bury, North on 6 April, and the New Deal for over 25s in June. It is not possible to provide precise national or local estimates of the numbers of young people aged 18–24 or the numbers of long-term unemployed people aged 25 and over who will benefit from our New Deal programmes for these groups,.

In January 1998, some 118,000 18–24 year olds were recorded as having claimed Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for six months or more; each month about 15,000 to 20,000 18–24 year olds reach six months' claimant unemployment. In the same month, some 216,000 people aged 25 or over were recorded as having claimed JSA for more than two years; each month between 5,000 and 10,000 people who are 25 or over reach two years; claimant unemployment. It is not possible to provide fully comparable figures for Bury, North. In January 1998, in Bury, North, 41 18–24 year olds were recorded as having claimed JSA for six months or more, and 29 people aged 25 or over were recorded as having claimed JSA for more than two years.

I will shortly be placing in the Library a list showing the indicative planning assumptions for participation in the New Deal for 18–24 year olds in 1998–99 in each local unit of delivery. These planning assumptions are based on current unemployment levels. They are not forecasts of the actual numbers who will participate in the New Deal for 18–24 year olds. We have yet to finalise planning assumptions for participation in the New Deal for long-term unemployed people aged 25 or over.

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from organisations participating in the Environmental Task Force option of the New Deal on the effect of payment in arrears on their financial viability. [29963]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This issue has been raised by some environmental and voluntary groups. The Chief Executive of the Employment Service has approved a system whereby voluntary organisations can seek an advance payment of part of their first year's anticipated contract value. Employment Service regional contract managers received guidance about start-up funding at the beginning of the month; the guidance was designed to provide a reasonable amount of advance funding which can be expected to be repaid during the first year of operation. In so doing, we have tried to balance the risks to Employment Service with ensuring that small voluntary organisations are not prohibited from participating in New Deal.

PE (National Curriculum)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the implementation of National Curriculum PE between 1988 and 1997. [30422]

Ms Estelle Morris: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reports to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, on schools' compliance with the National Curriculum, which includes physical education.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has given to local education authorities on the requirements of the Education Act 1988 in respect of provision of physical education. [30439]

Ms Estelle Morris: None. However, the Government's advisory body on matters related to the curriculum has made available to local education authorities, schools and other bodies, a range of materials to support teaching of the National Curriculum for physical education.

Inspectors

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many inspectors have had contracts of employment terminated, or not renewed, by Ofsted in each year of its existence on grounds of incompetence. [30289]

Mr. Byers: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Iraqi Students

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 440, concerning Iraqi students at British universities, what assessment he has made of Iraqi Government financial or other support for the Iraqi students who are not receiving United Kingdom funding or official Iraqi funding; and, of the 16 receiving Iraqi Government funding, what proportion are funded by the Iraqi ministries of (a) Defence, (b) Trade and Industry or equivalent, (c) Science and Technology, or equivalent and (d) Communications. [30390]

Dr. Howells: No assessments of this kind have been made. Iraqi students attending UK higher education institutions who are not supported by funds from the United Kingdom are responsible for making any appropriate fee payments direct to the institutions concerned.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 440, concerning Iraqi students at British universities, what assessment he has made of the potential for studies undertaken by Iraqi students in each subject of study to be of assistance to the Iraqis' military, chemical and biological capability. [30416]

Dr. Howells: Her Majesty's Government seek to prevent the transfer of technology related to weapons of mass destruction in the higher education sector through the operation of the Voluntary Vetting Scheme which is administered by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. This scheme applies to post-graduate students and post-doctoral researchers from certain countries, including Iraq, and covers those scientific disciplines relevant to weapons of mass destruction technologies or the missiles to deliver them. Under the scheme, universities and higher education colleges are asked to refer potential students from specified countries who are seeking to undertake research in particular disciplines to the Government. The Government provide advice on individual applicants and the universities and colleges then make the final admission decisions. This is a voluntary arrangement and there is currently no law in place to oblige higher education institutions to contact Government over admission matters.

British Sign Language

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if information produced as part of the New Deal promotion campaign will be available in British Sign Language. [30456]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Information from the New Deal campaign will be included in the next two editions of the Public Scene video magazine, which uses the British Sign Language and English subtitles, and is sent to contacts working with deaf people throughout the UK. The editions will appear in April and October 1998.

The New Deal advertisements can be viewed with teletext subtitles that include a text phone number which can be used to obtain printed information about New Deal. Audio cassette and Braille versions of the New Deal young people's booklet are also available on request.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many modern apprenticeships are currently being undertaken in the United Kingdom. [30577]

Dr. Howells: As at 30 November 1997, there were 113,900 people in training on Modern Apprenticeships in England and Wales.

Class Sizes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria will determine how money is allocated to reduce class sizes; and what sums he will allocate for this purpose to Gloucestershire during (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [30268]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 23 February 1998]: On 12 February, the Government announced allocations of £21.32 million under the Standards Fund to 65 LEAs to reduce infant class sizes in 1998–99. Those allocations were made on the basis of applications put forward by LEAs and according to criteria published in September last year and sent to all authorities. Further significant funding will be available in future years. Although Gloucestershire has not been allocated specific funding to reduce class sizes in 1998–99, I would urge the authority to continue to develop its plans for reducing class sizes to ensure that it attracts funding in the future. By the end of this Parliament, all infants in Gloucestershire, as in the country generally, will be in classes of 30 or fewer.

Departmental Expenditure (Entertainment and Travel)

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what sums were spent on entertainment and travel by (a) the Department for Education, (b) the Department of Employment and (c) the Department of Education and Employment for each of the financial years from 1992–93 to 1996–97. [30742]

Dr. Howells: The Department's expenditure on entertainment and travel are detailed separately in the following tables. The travel figures include subsistence costs which could be separated from travel only at disproportionate cost.

Disruptive Pupils

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which representatives of the teaching profession he has met to discuss the disciplining of disruptive pupils. [30480]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met representatives of the teaching profession specifically to discuss the disciplining of disruptive pupils. However, officials of the Department have discussed this and related matters with such representatives on several occasions.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers were disciplined for using force against disruptive pupils in 1997. [30481]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received in respect of guidelines for teachers for the use of force in disciplining disruptive pupils. [30479]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department issued draft guidance about the powers of teachers and other staff to use reasonable force to control or restrain pupils, for consultation, on 16 February. We have not, as yet, received any representations about the draft guidance. The consultation period ends on 24 April.

Teacher Training

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people entered courses of initial teacher training broken down by gender, for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the year 1996–97. [30848]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the number of people entering initial teacher training in 1996–97, broken down by gender and phase.

1996–97 recruitment[1] to initial teacher training (ITT) courses, England

	Male[2]	Female[2]	Total
Primary	1,703	10,592	12,295
Secondary	6,559	9,038	15,597
Total	8,262	19,630	27,892

[1] New entrant figures exclude School Centred ITT but include Open University.
[2] The number of new entrants by gender has been estimated using gender splits from 1996–97 HESA data and the total number of new entrants from the 1996–97 TTA Survey of ITT Providers.

Hairdressers (Training)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many hairdressers have been trained to NVQ standard in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; [30576]

(2) how many hairdressers are at present being trained to NVQ standard in the United Kingdom. [30578]

Dr. Howells: The Awarding Bodies have not recorded information in this form over the full 10 year period. A total of 213,287 people have registered for S/NVQs in hairdressing since 1989–90, of whom 98,499 have been awarded qualifications. The remainder are either still working towards qualifications or have ceased their training. The most up to date figures available on the number of hairdressers registered for S/NVQs in hairdressing each year between 1989–90 and 1996–97 are listed in the following table:

Year	Number
1989–90	22,650
1990–91	15,746
1991–92	16,786
1992–93	23,548
1993–94	29,960
1994–95	28,657
1995–96	28,401
1996–97	33,310
1997–98 (first quarter only)	14,229
Total	213,287

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the state pension as the sole source of income. [31062]

Mr. Denham: The key objective of our review of pensions is to ensure that pensioners should have an adequate income in retirement; that they should share fairly in rising national prosperity; and that public finances should be both sustainable and affordable.

For most people, security in retirement will come from a combination of the basic State Pension and a second pension. However, for people receiving only the basic pension it is likely that they would be entitled to Income Support on top of their basic pension.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it her Department's policy to provide advice for those planning their pensions. [31065]

Mr. Denham: Our aim is to provide people with the clear and concise information they need to help them make informed decisions about pensions and to raise awareness of the importance of pensions planning throughout their working lives.

The Department has reviewed the information and publicity material that it produces for consumers with the objective of making sure that it sets out clearly how pensions work, and what questions they should ask before deciding what is the best option for them. We will be issuing new publicity material in the Spring.

Developing greater financial literacy and economic awareness is crucial to give everybody, men and women, young and old, the confidence to make informed choices and take control of their financial future. The pensions review is addressing this challenge through our Pensions Education Working Group.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will take steps to remove disadvantages in the pensions structure for women changing jobs. [31063]

Mr. Denham: One of the major challenges facing the Government's Pensions Review is to narrow the pensions gap between women and men to give women more security in retirement. Many pensions are simply not flexible enough to cope with women's working patterns and the fact that they are more likely to have caring responsibilities. We are therefore considering many of the obstacles that currently prevent women from developing good pension rights.

We are committed to introducing pension sharing for divorcing couples from April 2000, and our proposals for Stakeholder Pensions and a Citizenship Pension will be of particular benefit to women. Stakeholder Pension schemes are a central part of our plans to modernise the pensions system and the Government recognise that there is a need to develop new, value-for-money second pension schemes that do not penalise those who change jobs frequently, or who take breaks from work, particularly women.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will make it her policy to reform current bankruptcy law to allow the self-employed and employees who are not members of an occupational pension scheme to receive the same exemption upon becoming insolvent as is presently enjoyed by persons who, as employees, were members of an occupational pension scheme; and if she will make a statement; [31025]

(2) if she will make a statement on the implications of the decision in the Landau case for the differing treatment upon insolvency of (a) the self-employed, (b) employees who are not members of an occupational pension fund and (c) employees with occupational pensions, in the event of their becoming insolvent. [31026]

Mr. Denham: The issue of pensions and bankruptcy is currently being considered as part of our wide ranging Pensions Review.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to make allowance for the consequence of divorce in pension provision. [31064]

Mr. Denham: Courts are required to take into account pensions in reaching a divorce settlement. Provision exists to allow a woman who divorces before State pension age to substitute her former husband's National Insurance contributions record for her own record for specified periods, and to receive a Basic Retirement Pension on this basis when she reaches State pension age. The earmarking provisions introduced by the Pensions Act 1995 enable courts to require a private pension scheme to make payments (once the pension is in payment) directly to a former spouse on behalf of the scheme member.

Our Manifesto committed us to introducing pension sharing for divorcing couples and we aim to do so from April 2000. We are working through the detailed issues and implementation arrangements with representatives of the pensions industry, family lawyers and others, and plan to publish draft legislation for consultation during this Parliamentary session. Pension sharing will allow fairer settlements on assets on divorce and is an important step towards meeting the Government's objective of closing the pensions gap between women and men in retirement.

Correspondence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is her Department's policy always to answer either by way of an acknowledgement or a substantive reply every letter received from the public; and on how many occasions during the last six months her Department has replied to members of the public that it has been unable to trace original letters about which follow up inquiries are being made. [31286]

Mr. Denham: We aim to send a reply to every letter received from a member of the public. No records are kept of how many replies follow up previous correspondence.

Television Advertising

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, columns 619–20, on television advertising of benefits, if she will list the percentage of (a) planned advertisements for the winter payment scheme which had been shown and (b) the number of payments under the scheme which had been made by (i) 31 December, (ii) 31 January and (iii) 18 February. [31016]

Mr. Denham: It is important that pensioners need to know as soon as possible how much they will receive, as well as how and when it will be paid. The simplest and most cost-effective way is to let them know that a payment will be made is through publicity. The publicity will enable them to plan with confidence and turn up their heating if there is a spell of cold weather.

The percentage of planned advertisements for the winter payment scheme which had been shown by:

(i) 31 December 1997: Nil

(ii) 31 January 1998: 44 per cent.

(iii) 18 February 1998: 96 per cent.

The number of payments made under the scheme which had been made by:

(i) 31 December 1997: Nil (legislation came into force on 16 January 1998)

(ii) 31 January 1998: 1,441,614

(iii) 18 February 1998: 1,441,614.

The remaining payments will be made from the week commencing 2 March 1998.

Vaccine Damage Payment Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damaged children are excluded from the vaccine damage scheme (a) due to the 80 per cent. disablement threshold and (b) because their application was made over six years after the vaccination date. [29266]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Vaccine Damage Payment Scheme is the responsibility of Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will reply to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 24 February 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many vaccine damaged children are excluded from the vaccine damage scheme a) due to the 80 per cent disablement threshold and b) because their application was made over six years after the vaccination.

The information is not available in the format requested. Data is not collected about the age of people who apply for a payment under the Vaccine Damage Payment Scheme (VDPS). However, the majority of claims do relate to children.

Such information as is available is shown in the table below. The data refers to all VDPS claims rejected for the reasons shown.

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Overall disablement is at least 80% but the vaccine damage is assessed at less than 80%	nil	1	1	1	nil
Overall disablement is substantially less than 80% and the cause has not therefore been fully considered	2	4	5	14	12
Application made more than six years after vaccination	18	22	17	19	22

I hope you find this information helpful.

Lone Parents

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in each constituency in Wales were in receipt of income support on 31 December 1997 or the nearest date for which figures are available; and how many children lived in such lone parent families on the same date. [28893]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Julie Morgan, dated 24 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many lone parents in each constituency in Wales were in receipt of Income Support (IS) on 31st December 1997 or the nearest date for which figures are available; and how many children live in such lone parent families on the same date.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA District and these Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries or specific geographical areas.

The BA does not routinely collate information relating to the number of children who live in lone parent families who are in receipt of IS. However, the departmental quarterly statistical enquiry provides the number of dependants within lone parent families in Wales.

The available information is shown in the attached table. The information is provisional and may be subject to change.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Number of income support customers in receipt of the lone parent rate of the family premium and the number of dependants in these households for the Benefit Agency's District in Wales

Benefits Agency Districts in Wales	Number of IS customers in receipt of the lone parent rate of family premium as 30 November 1997 [1,2]	Number of dependents within the households of those IS customers in receipt of the lone parent rate of family premium as at May 1997 [3,4,5]

[2] The figures represent a snapshot in time and do not include those lone parent customers who are pensioners nor those registered sick who qualify for a higher rate premium such as a pensioner or disability premium.

[3] Numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand and subject to a degree of sampling error (sample size 5 per cent.).

[4] These figures do not include those lone parent customers who are pensioners nor those registered sick who qualify for a higher rate premium such as a pensioner or disability premium.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals in Bury, North have been contacted as part of the Benefit Integrity Project; how many of them have had their benefit reduced; and how many appeals have been made against these decisions. [28700]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 24 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding how many individuals in Bury North have been contacted as part of the Benefits Integrity Project (BIP) and how many of them have had their benefit reduced; and how many appeals have been made against these decisions.

The information is not available in the format requested. The comprehensive database of casework has not been designed to extract information geographically during the project. To do so would necessitate high cost and disruption to the processing of ongoing casework. Once the casework has been completed a full evaluation of the data is planned to provide a variety of trend analyses, including geographical, to inform any change to the benefit which may be considered necessary at that time.

However, as at 31 December 1997, a total 40,615 cases, have been examined as part of the BIP. Of the total cases dealt with 978 have had their benefit increased, 31,920 have been unchanged and 7,717 have had their benefit reduced/stopped. The total includes 7,462 renewal cases; of which 242 had their benefit increased, 3,868 remain unchanged and 3,352 have had their benefit decreased.

A total of 311 appeals have been received.

A brief monthly statistical report is produced and a copy of the report for December 1997 and subsequent months can be found in the House of Commons Library.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 9 February 1998, Official Report, columns 75–76, on the Benefit Integrity Project, if it is her policy to re-examine all benefit reductions made to date under the Benefit Integrity Project on the basis of evidence provided solely by the claimant; if she will require the additional evidence to support a decision to include an independent medical test where requested; and if she will make a statement. [29759]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 16 February 1998]: On 9 February the Secretary of State announced that we have taken action to improve the quality of decisions made by the Project which involve a reduction or removal of benefit. No decision resulting in reduction or removal of entitlement to DLA will be made solely on the evidence provided by the claimant—there will always be additional evidence to support the decision.

One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Swinney, dated 24 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in pursuant to her Answer of 9 February, Official Report, columns 75–76, on the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) and, if it is the policy to re-examine all benefit reductions made to date under the BIP on the basis of evidence provided solely by the claimant; if she will require the additional evidence to support a decision to include an independent medical test where requested.

DLA is a complex benefit. It is not compensation for disability. Entitlement is determined by the effect of a disability on a person's need for help with personal care and getting around and even awards made "for life" are conditional on continuing to meet the eligibility criteria for that award. If any customer disagrees with a DLA decision that has been made, a review or appeal can be requested.

From 9 February, no case likely to result in the reduction or removal of benefit will be passed to an Adjudication Officer (AO) for review without further evidence in addition to that supplied by the customer on the BIP questionnaire. This extra safeguard is to improve confidence in the decisions made by the BIP and to help safeguard the position of severely disabled people.

There is no reason to believe that previous decisions are incorrect therefore, there are no plans to re-examine all benefit reductions made to date under the BIP. However in cases which have been reviewed as a part of the BIP, if the decision was reached solely on the basis of what the customer told us on the BIP questionnaire, additional further evidence will be required before the case is passed to the AO for a decision.

Further evidence to seek amplification of a customer's care and mobility needs may include factual medical evidence from a GP or hospital, a full examination or information from carers. the source of the additional evidence will be determined by the individual circumstances of the case.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Child Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security of the total number of CSA accounts with child support maintenance arrears (a) how many are being dealt with by the litigation teams in the CSA centres, (b) how many of the liability orders applied for during 1997 were granted by the courts, (c) how many of these related to self-employed cases and (d) what further action was taken to enforce the liability orders. [30122]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the Chief Executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 24 February 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary question relating to Court action taken in Child Support Agency cases with debt.

Your question mentions "cases being dealt with by litigation teams". Since the introduction of the Agency's Debt Management System this structure has been replaced by Debt Management teams and Enforcement teams. Where a case has debt or an arrangement for paying off debt breaks down, the first stage is progressed by the Business Unit Debt Management Teams. They contact the absent parent, or the absent parent's employer where a deduction from earnings order is in place, to try to establish a voluntary arrangement with the absent parent for paying the debt or resolve difficulties an employer may be experiencing with a deduction from earnings order.

We are taking a far more robust approach to non compliant absent parents. In the case of employed absent parents we are imposing a greater number of deduction from earnings orders and are doing so more quickly.

A case will only be referred on to the Enforcement Team for litigation where it has not been possible to come to a voluntary arrangement with the absent parent, or the employer refuses to implement a deduction from earnings order. In this financial year to the end of January, 2,216 new cases were sent to Enforcement teams. The Enforcement teams apply to the Magistrates Courts in England and Wales and Sheriffs courts in Scotland for liability orders where, despite all efforts, the absent parent refuses to come to a voluntary arrangement.

So far this financial year, the Agency has applied for 1,536 liability orders in England and Wales and 207 in Scotland. In the main these cases referred to self employed absent parents, but there are some employed absent parents included within the figures with a high level of protected earnings for whom a deduction from earnings order is not appropriate. The Agency has been looking at the way that we deal with self employed cases to improve the rate of compliance; difficulties with this client group are not unique to the Agency.

Once a liability order has been granted by Magistrates or Sheriffs there are a variety of methods which can be used to enforce the order. In England and Wales, the Agency decides how to apply liability. This can be by garnishee order, charging order (against capital assets), levying distress with bailiffs or registering the debt as a County Court Judgement on the register. If unsuccessful, the case can be referred back to the Magistrates Court for committal proceedings which may ultimately lead to imprisonment.

In Scotland cases are referred to the Sheriff's Court to decide on liability. If the Sheriff grants a liability order, official Scottish Office solicitors decide on the action to be taken to enforce the order. This can be done by poinding (warrant of sale), arrestments of bank account, a bill of inhibition (forced sale of property or land), decrees; or, if all else fails, cases are referred to the Procurator Fiscal to decide on prosecution.

The Agency looks to use any and all enforcement methods legally available to us, but experiences the same difficulties (as was the case under the previous court based maintenance system) other litigants experience in enforcing a civil debt. So far in 1997–98 we have been successful in registering debt by County Court Judgement in 368 cases. Where all other action has failed, the Agency has pursued cases for prosecution; between November 1997 and January 1998 a total of 6 suspended custodial sentences were imposed.

Throughout the Debt Management and Enforcement process, absent parents are given every opportunity to make a voluntary arrangement to pay off their child maintenance debt. The majority do agree to make an arrangement and only in a very small minority of cases is legal action actually taken.

I hope this is helpful.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Data and Video Network

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the timetable for the connecting up to the PDVN of the remaining parts of the Palace of Westminster. [31534]

Sir Sydney Chapman: The timetable for installation of the Parliamentary Data and Video Network (PDVN) has been planned to coincide with other work such as the new fire detection system, asbestos removal, electrical rewiring and the voice alarm system. The majority of Members' offices will be provided with full access to the PDVN by the end of 2000. However, it has been decided that some areas, such as the offices in Commons Court, St. Stephen's Tower and Norman Shaw South should be connected to the PDVN when they are refurbished. These areas are scheduled for refurbishment after completion of Portcullis house.

To assist occupants of offices in areas of the estate which are not yet connected to the PDVN, temporary connections can quickly be made available to individual hon. Members' offices on request. The Parliamentary Communications Directorate is also experimenting with a wireless system, which, if successful, might provide an additional cost-effective means of connection to the PDVN.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Officers (Suspensions)

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average length of suspension police officers experienced while under disciplinary investigation broken down by police authority in the last five years; [31589]

(2) how many police officers currently have been suspended from operational duties for (a) less than six months, (b) six to 12 months, (c) 12 to 18 months, (d) 18 months to two years and (e) more than two years; [31591]

(3) if he will estimate the current average cost of keeping a police officer suspended from duty for a year. [31590]

Mr. Michael: The information is not available in the form requested. Some information about suspended officers is at present being obtained from the 43 police forces in England and Wales in response to a Question from another hon. Member. When that information has been collated, I will also provide that information to my hon. Friend. The cost of any suspension would depend on the rank of the officer and at what point on the relevant pay range he or she is being paid.

Fleming Case

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request a copy of the report prepared by the Humberside Police into the handling of the Fleming case; and if he will place it in the Library. [31586]

Mr. Michael: No. This report was prepared at the request of the police authority who have yet to complete their consideration of it. My right hon. Friend is the appellate authority for police discipline and should not see any material which bears on possible disciplinary proceedings.

Police Authorities (Investigations)

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that investigatory reports into the running of police authorities are made public. [31587]

Mr. Michael: There is a general requirement for reports by Commissioners for Local Administration into complaints of maladministration by police authorities to be made publicly available under the Local Government Act 1974. However, the Local Commissioner concerned may direct that a report shall not be made available to the public if the Commissioner considers that it would not be in the public interest and the interests of the complainant and others to do so.

The Government are considering extending the range of information available to the public generally. Our proposals were set out in the White Paper "Your Right to Know" which was issued for consultation on 11 December 1997.

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many investigations have been undertaken by outside police authorities into other authorities in each of the past five years; and what was the estimated cost of each investigation. [31592]

Mr. Michael: I am not aware of any such investigations in the last five years. Outside forces carry out investigations into other forces, usually at the request of the police authority for the force of being investigated or that force itself. However, comprehensive information on the number of any such investigations and on their cost is not held centrally.

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the handling of grievances made by serving police officers, by police authorities; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that there is consistency across police authorities. [31588]

Mr. Michael: The management of individual grievances and the provision of effective procedures is a matter for chief constables within the balance of tripartite responsibilities for the management of the police service. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary review police force personnel procedures as part of their Inspection programme, and if Her Majesty's Inspector was dissatisfied with their adequacy, the issue would be drawn to the attention of the chief constable for remedial action.

PA Consulting

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial benefit would accrue to PA Consulting if the PFI contract for providing information technology services to his Department were to be awarded earlier than the proposed date in the current timetable. [30283]

Mr. Straw: PA Consulting have been engaged to provide independent professional advice so as to ensure that we achieve best value for money from the Private Finance Initiative (PFI) contract for information technology services. We are taking all necessary steps to avoid any potential conflict of interest. These include an agreement with PA Consulting that they will not take part in any consortium bidding for the PFI contract.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many doctors have been (a) prosecuted and (b) convicted since 1984 for assault arising from carrying out a cosmetic surgical procedure for which they were unqualified or were incompetent. [30387]

Mr. Michael: Court proceedings information held centrally cannot identify such cases from other offences of assault. However, anyone who attempts to perform a cosmetic procedure, but who is not competent to do so, would expose himself to the risk of civil, and possibly criminal, liability, and to the possibility of professional proceedings for misconduct.

If criminal proceedings are brought for such an offence of assault then they may be instigated under either the more general legislative powers of the Offences Against the Persons Act 1861 (OAPA61) or the Medical Act 1983, section 49—pretending to be registered by taking name or title of a medical practitioner. We are aware of one prosecution in 1996 under the latter provision.

Young Offender Teams

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers he intends to give the proposed young offender teams; and if he will make a statement. [30290]

Mr. Straw: Youth offending teams will play a key role in working with young offenders in the community from point of arrest to completion of sentence. Under clause 30(6) of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords], youth offending teams will co-ordinate the provision in their area of the youth justice services set out in clause 29(3) and carry out the functions assigned to the team in the youth justice plan formulated by the local authority under clause 31(1).

Water Cannons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department possesses (a) water cannons and (b) equipment designed to be adapted into water cannons. [31266]

Mr. Michael: Neither the Home Office nor police forces in England and Wales possess such equipment.

Spray

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned on the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of replacing CS spray with sprays based on CR. [31268]

Mr. Michael: Several possible incapacitant agents, including CR, were considered before CS sprays were adopted for police use. CR was rejected because not enough is known about its chronic health effects and its carcinogenic and genotoxic potential. It also poses particular problems in relation to decontamination because it retains its irritant characteristics in water. The simple decontamination procedures employed for CS involving the use of copious volumes of water would exacerbate the extent of contamination when used against CR.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost to date of the police investigation into the alleged perjury of Mr. Jonathan Aitken. [31081]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner informs me that approximately 61 officer days have been used so far. The nature of the inquiry has meant that it has not been possible to cost the police time more accurately. The Commissioner also tells me that the investigation is continuing and is being pursued as expeditiously as possible.

Football World Cup

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to ensure that known football hooligans are prevented from travelling to France during the World Cup. [31090]

Mr. Michael: The Government are determined to do everything possible to prevent the disruption of the World Cup by football hooligans. Offenders who have been convicted of a football-related offence and made subject to a restriction order by the court are required to attend a designated police station during the period in which matches are taking place. British police, including the Football Unit of the National Criminal Intelligence Service, have established a close working relationship with the French authorities. They will ensure that all relevant intelligence about the movement of potential troublemakers is made available to the French police so that those who might want to cause trouble are identified or monitored to prevent disorder occurring.

Firearms Compensation Scheme

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the anticipated average time for payment of compensation between the submission of a claim and its authorisation in respect of the handing in of .22 target pistols; and what has been the average time achieved to date for the payment of compensation; [31084]

(2) what is the total amount (a) claimed and (b) paid out to date under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997; and what is the anticipated cost of administering the scheme in the first 12 months of operation. [31079]

Mr. Michael: As at 20 February 1998, a total of £36.7 million had been paid under the statutory compensation scheme for large calibre handguns and the ex gratia payment scheme for small calibre pistols voluntarily surrendered. The total amount claimed will not be known until all claims and applications have been examined.

The average processing time for claims and ex gratia applications dealt with from the start of the scheme has been 13.8 weeks. It is not possible to say at this stage what the average processing time will be for claims under the new statutory surrender scheme for small-calibre pistols. Work will begin on these claims as soon as the overall work position permits.

The central administration costs of all three schemes in 1997–98 are £6.4 million including £3.4 million in direct grants to police forces in England, Wales and Scotland.

Money Laundering

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the amount of money derived from criminal activities laundered through (a) the UK and (b) the European Union in the last five years. [31075]

Mr. Michael: I am not able to provide estimates. The extent of money laundering, and measures for dealing with the problem, are being addressed by us in liaison with other governments through the international Financial Action Task Force, established at the G7 Summit in Paris in July 1989.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Entertainment

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's estimate for the cost of official hospitality at 10 Downing Street in the current financial year. [21340]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The cost to my office of official hospitality at 10 Downing Street and Chequers since 2 May is £30,527.

Total expenditure on entertainment at 10 Downing Street during the 1996–97 financial year was £50,126.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister how much has been spent on official entertainment at No. 10 Downing Street since 2 July 1997. [22828]

The Prime Minister: Since 2 July, my office has spent £27,447 on entertainment at 10 Downing Street and Chequers.

Total expenditure on entertainment at 10 Downing Street during the 1996–97 financial year was £50,126.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish an updated list of members of Cabinet committees; and if he will arrange to keep up to date the web-site list of membership of those committees. [26519]

The Prime Minister: I have placed a copy of the current list of Cabinet Committees in the Library of the House. I have also arranged for a copy to be placed on the Cabinet Office web-site which will be updated as and when Parliament is informed of any changes or additions.

Economic Advisers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his (a) paid and (b) unpaid economic advisers; and if he will make a statement. [30764]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 February 1998]: There is an economic adviser in my Policy Unit. He is paid as a special adviser.

Computer Systems

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each major new computer system that (a) his Department, (b) non-departmental bodies and (c) agencies under his responsibility have purchased in the last five years; what was the initial purchase cost and what was the final cost; what was each system's (i) planned and (ii) actual date of commissioning; what major computer systems will be purchased by bodies in categories (a), (b) and (c) in the next financial year; and what is their estimated cost. [27841]

The Prime Minister: My office has not undertaken any major computer procurement projects in the last five years.

Bishops of Liverpool and Southwark

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister by what date he plans to complete his consultation on the advice he will offer on the names of the new (a) Bishop of Liverpool and (b) Bishop of Southwark. [30411]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1998]: The selection process is currently underway in each case and will be completed as quickly as possible. By its nature, it must remain confidential. I will announce the names of the new Bishops as soon as the appointments process is complete.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Iraqi Government concerning the abuse and torture of prisoners of war from Kuwait. [30981]

Mr. Fatchett: We play an active role in the Tripartite Commission which discusses issues relating to Gulf war detainees. Iraq is also a member of the Commission.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who is the United Kingdom representative on the UN Security Council Ad Hoc Committee Security Council Resolution 661 Committee-Iraq; and how often the committee meets. [31250]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 24 February 1998]: The UK representative on the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 661 (1990) Concerning the Situation Between Iraq and Kuwait is the Political Counsellor of the UK Mission to the United Nations.

The Committee meets formally once every six weeks. There are also frequent informal meetings.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) requests to supply materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, (b) applications and contracts for humanitarian supplies and (c) hospital equipment which the Ad Hoc Committee on Security Council 661 Committee-Iraq has vetoed; and if he will make a statement. [31251]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 24 February 1998]: In 1997, over 12,000 applications were submitted to the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 661 (1990) Concerning the Situation Between Iraq and Kuwait. It would therefore be a disproportionate use of resources to attempt to determine the total number of applications which have been blocked since the Committee was established in 1990.

Regarding the status of applications submitted to the Committee under the "oil for food" scheme, the UN produces a document detailing the status of each application and the goods involved. I have arranged for a copy of the latest available version of this document to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

General Affairs Council

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Brussels on 23 February. [31936]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Council adopted the 20 A Points in document 6146/98 and noted the resolutions adopted by the European Parliament in documents 5191/98 and 5188/98. Copies of both documents will be placed in the Libraries of the House as soon as they are available.

There was a brief report from the Commission on negotiations with South Africa on the Trade and Cooperation Agreement. This followed the recent talks with the South African Trade Minister. Further negotiations are scheduled for March.

The Council discussed progress on the negotiations between the EU and Switzerland aimed at reaching agreement on a package covering six sectors including free movement of people, agriculture and transport issues. Ministers noted that progress was being made and expressed the hope that the Transport Council on 17 March could resolve outstanding issues on transport.

The Council welcomed the plan for a high-level EU-China meeting in the margins of ASEM 2. It agreed to continue and expand its human rights dialogue with China by holding at least one meeting per Presidency. Within that dialogue it agreed to continue to raise the cases of individuals, encourage Chinese engagement with the UN's human rights instruments and develop and expand the EU-China cooperation programme. It looked forward to an early and fruitful visit to China by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. In view of the first encouraging results of the EU/China human rights dialogue, the Council decided that neither the Presidency nor Member States should table or co-sponsor a draft Resolution at the next UN Commission on Human Rights (CHR). The EU's opening statement at CHR will refer to the human rights situation in China. If the situation arose, the Council agreed that EU delegations should vote against a no-action motion. The Council agreed to continue to make public its concerns regarding the human rights situation in China, and, to raise these matters as part of its wider dialogue with China. The EU will keep this policy under regular review.

As agreed at the General Affairs Council in January, Ministers reviewed EU policy towards Iran. The Council agreed that a number of recent developments in Iran were encouraging and that the EU should respond by increasing the level of political contact with Iran including by lifting the ban on official bilateral Ministerial visits. The Council invited the Political Committee to submit further recommendations on how political contacts between the EU and Iran—covering both areas of EU concern and issues of mutual interest—might develop. The Council also reviewed progress in the areas of concern to the EU, namely weapons of mass-destruction, terrorism, Iran's attitude to the Middle East Peace Process and human rights including the fatwa against Salman Rushdie. The Council reaffirmed the importance of fully implementing its existing security measures and of its continued vigilance in these matters. Ministers agreed that Iran's willingness to address EU concerns would greatly enhance the success of the EU's political contacts with Iran.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary updated colleagues on the Presidency's plans for handling enlargement during the UK Presidency and on thinking concerning the substance of the European Conference.

The Council welcomed the announcement of an agreement between the UNSG and Iraq and stressed that the EU wanted a diplomatic solution. The Council also expressed thanks to the Secretary-General for his efforts, but noted that agreement was secured only because of the firm resolve shown by the United Nations and the international community. The Council insisted that UNSCOM must be able to resume effective inspections. It also recorded concern at the humanitarian situation in Baghdad and therefore welcomed the recent UN resolution (1153) doubling the oil-for-food programme.

There was a brief discussion about Ukraine. The Commission noted that the Partnership and Cooperation Agreement was due to come into force on 1 March and that there would be Parliamentary elections at the end of March.

The Council discussed the EU's role in the Middle East Peace Process and its future economic assistance on the basis of a communication from the Commission and a report by President Santer on his recent visit to the region. The Council expressed its grave concern at the serious decline in the Palestinian economy, despite the efforts of international donors. It reiterated its view that economic development is a prerequisite for political stability and that the removal of obstacles to Palestinian economic development, including closures, is in the long term security interests of Israel.

The Council agreed that the EU should demonstrate its continued commitment to the peace process through a renewal of its financial assistance to the Palestinian Authority, and requested the Commission to submit proposals to provide a basis for continued assistance after the expiry of the current Regulation at the end of 1998. It also agreed on a wide-ranging strategy aimed at improving the effectiveness of EU assistance to the Palestinians, including:

an evaluation by the Commission of aid provided under the current programme so that lessons learned may be taken into account in the implementation of future assistance;

intensification of the EU/Israel dialogue on the removal of obstacles to Palestinian economic development;

full and rapid implementation of the EC-PLO Interim Association Agreement; exploring ways of improving the effectiveness of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee in tackling the problems faced by the Palestinian economy;

continued efforts to encourage the Palestinian Authority to fulfil commitments made on transparency and accountability;

a constructive and effective EU contribution to international efforts to restore confidence in the peace process and establish a firm basis for a resumption of negotiations, including through improved consultation with the United States;

continued development of the Barcelona Process in parallel to the peace process as a long-term strategy for the stability and economic development of the region.

The Council discussed its growing concern at the situation in Kosovo. It called on all parties to exercise restraint and refrain from all acts of violence. The Council called on the authorities in Belgrade and the leadership of the Kosovo Albanian community urgently to begin a full and constructive dialogue. The Council endorsed, in principle, the Commission proposals to improve aid procedures for Bosnia. This will permit quicker and more effective disbursement of EC assistance, including down to local municipality level, to those supporting the Dayton Accord. It looked forward to the European Parliament's Opinion on this.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary chaired successful inaugural meetings of the EU/Estonia, EU/Latvia and EU/Lithuania Association Councils. Formal sessions focused on each associate's preparations for accession. Over dinner, Ministers discussed a range of political issues.

Visa Applications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications have been (a) made, (b) refused and (c) granted on appeal at the British Consulate in Colombo, Sri Lanka in each of the last three years. [31469]

Mr. Fatchett: Since 1995, in the British High Commission in Colombo, the following visa applications have been (a) received, (b) refused and (c) granted on appeal:

Visa Applications

Year	(a) received	(b) refused	(c) granted on appeal
1995	10,690	742	14
1996	11,917	946	22
1997	12,422	608	25

Immigration

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision will be made on the application for entry clearance by Khaliq Zubair, Islamabad reference C0681. [31532]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our High Commission in Islamabad to provide a detailed account of the position. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Baroness Symons, will write to my hon. Friend within one week of receiving that account.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision will be made on the application for entry clearance by Shayad Arif, Islamabad reference E1921. [31533]

Mr. Fatchett: A decision to grant a visa to Shazad Arif was taken on 25 February. The High Commission at Islamabad will contact Mr. Arif so that the visa can be issued.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Products

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in respect of proposals by C , the World Health Organisation, to require bio-yoghurt to be renamed fermented milk product; and if he will make a statement. [30566]

Dr. John Cunningham: Officials consulted interested parties on a definition of 'yoghurt' in a draft Codex text in 1996 and 1997. Responses were received from UK trade bodies and from individual manufacturers. All were opposed to the definition of 'yoghurt' which restricts the terms to fermented milk products containing cultures of Streptococcus Thermophilus and Lactobacillus delbrueckii. subsp.bulgaricus only. They want the definition to be broadened to include all products currently sold legally in the UK as 'yoghurt'. The Government fully support this approach.

EU Food Surpluses

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the European Union food surpluses in storage in the United Kingdom indicating the individual foods in storage. [30572]

Mr. Rooker: Details of EU and UK stocks of agricultural produce in public intervention and assisted private storage are placed in the Library of the House each month. The latest table gave UK figures as at the end of January for all commodities except beef which were as at 19 December.

As at 13 February, UK intervention stocks were:

Stock	Amount (tonnes)
Beef	98,144
Butter	1,964
Skimmed Milk Powder	46,340
Barley	114,972
Rye	259

Slaughter Process (Public Health)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 373, concerning charges for veterinary inspections and controls, if he will make it his policy to collect the information necessary to allow comparisons of charges across the member states of the European Union. [30944]

Mr. Rooker: No. Given the flexibility of the EC rules which apply to charges for veterinary inspections and controls, as well as likely differences in circumstances prevailing in other Member States, and differences in exchange rates, any such comparisons could be misleading, incomplete or inaccurate. As I explained in my previous reply on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 373 it is the responsibility of the European Commission to ensure that individual Member States comply with their Community obligations.

So far as Great Britain is concerned, I am satisfied that the charges levied by the Meat Hygiene Service in respect of its hygiene inspection are consistent with EC rules, and with the objective that it delivers value for money in the provision of efficient and high quality services.

Agricultural Prices

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the factors underlying the lack of correlation between retail prices and ex-farm prices of agricultural products over the last year. [30836]

Mr. Rooker: Agricultural raw material costs represent a small proportion of the retail value of most food products. Costs of manufacturing, marketing and distribution are collectively of greater importance. As a consequence, changes in ex-farm prices of agricultural commodities have only a small influence on retail food prices. In the short term, this relationship can be further weakened by a variety of factors which may delay the transmission of price changes through the marketing chain.

Milk

Mr. Singh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he (a) has had and (b) plans to have with his EU counterparts on his proposal to ban the sale of unpasteurised milk. [31307]

Mr. Rooker: None. If we proceed with the proposal to ban sales of raw cows drinking milk, we should need to make a formal notification of the proposed draft measure to the European Commission who will be responsible for informing other member states.

Mr. Singh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of medical evidence on the possible transmission of BSE to humans through the milk of infected cows. [31312]

Mr. Rooker: The National CJD Surveillance Unit conducts an epidemiological analysis of CJD and nvCJD cases reported to it in the United Kingdom. This includes details of the diet and occupational history of patients and has shown no evidence of any link between any form of CJD and milk from cows with BSE.

It is also of note that in kuru, which is a form of CJD believed to be transmitted through cannibalistic practices in Papua New Guinea, there is no evidence of transmission from mother to child after cannibalism ceased. This includes instances where mothers showing clinical signs of the disease were suckling infants. Cows' milk from cattle with clinical BSE has been tested for the presence of infectivity by injection into the brain of mice and by feeding to mice and has not transmitted disease. As a precaution in 1988 one of the first steps taken was a prohibition on use of milk from clinical BSE cases other than for feeding her own calf.

Food Research Director

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the Food Research Director of the Central Science Laboratory (Norwich) has been transferred to the position of Head of Environment, Fisheries and the International Science Division; and how he was informed of the decision. [31385]

Mr. Rooker: Civil Service postings are not a Ministerial responsibility. However, the Permanent Secretary informed me of this move in the course of normal business.

Forestry

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to prepare a forestry strategy for England. [31837]

Mr. Morley: Last year, I published an analysis of the responses to the discussion paper on Woodland Creation: Needs and Opportunities in the English Countryside. As I said then, we are committed to increasing the area of woodland in England, and many of the responses to the discussion paper agreed that a forestry strategy would help us implement this policy more effectively.

I have therefore asked the Forestry Commission, in liaison with other relevant Government Departments and Agencies, to prepare a forestry strategy for England. This will set out the Government's priorities and programmes for the creation and management of woods and forests in England. It will help set the context for further work by the Forestry Commission and other organisations aimed at realising the diverse benefits that well planned and managed woodlands can deliver.

I have asked the Forestry Commission to report to me by the end of July, and I expect to publish our priorities and programmes for forestry in the autumn.

I have also decided to set up an English Forestry Forum after the forestry strategy has been published. The Forum will advise on implementation of the strategy. I shall chair the Forum, which will meet twice a year and which will be run along similar lines to the Agri-Environment Forum which has been operating successfully for a number of years.

WALES

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the expenditure of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if he will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26612]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The figures for my Department are as follows:

£000

Year	Amount
1995–96	1,212
1996–97	600
1997–98 to date	700
1997–98 full year	not yet available

CADW: Welsh Historic Monuments, the only Agency for which my Department has sole responsibility, has not incurred any expenditure in the employment of external consultants during this period.

Details of expenditure on consultants by non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are not held centrally; it is a matter for individual non-departmental public bodies to determine as part of the day-to-date management of their affairs.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department and the Welsh Development Agency spent on (a) inward investment and (b) developing indigenous Welsh companies in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [30950]

Mr. Hain: It is not possible to provide a precise breakdown of Welsh Development Agency expenditure because much of it—land reclamation, urban regeneration, environmental improvements, supply chain programmes—benefits inward investors and indigenous companies. Of the £151 million spent by the Agency in 1997, £9.6 million was spent on the activities of the International Division and marketing designed to attract inward investment.

Similarly, general Welsh Office support for business cannot be categorised between help for inward investment or indigenous. The breakdown between the main form of grant assistance—Regional Selective Assistance—to encourage industrial development in 1997 was stage payments of £22.561 million to indigenous businesses on 274 projects to create or safeguard 12,674 jobs and stage payments of £42.341 million to inward investment on 88 projects to create or safeguard 23,301 jobs.

Health Promotion

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate how much money was spent on health promotion in Wales in each of the last five years; and what is planned to be spent in the current year. [30954]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Expenditure by the NHS on health promotion in the last five years is shown in the table. Figures for 1997–98 are not yet available.

Year	£ million
1992–93	7.6
1993–94	7.8

Homelessness

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently estimated to be homeless in each unitary authority. [30952]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information is not recorded centrally on the number of individual people estimated to be homeless. Information on homeless households is shown in the following table:

Homeless households[1] by unitary authority, July-September 1997

Mid-Wales Hospital, Talgarth

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding the future of the Mid-Wales Hospital, Talgarth, Powys, with particular reference to its planned date of closure in April 1999. [31040]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My officials are in close touch with Dyfed Powys Health Authority and the Trust about progress on the reprovision of services from Talgarth. There is, as yet, no agreement on a date for the closure of the hospital and we will want to see appropriate alternative provision in place before the closure takes place.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31165]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information requested is not available centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31292]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information requested is not held centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. My Ministers and I frequently meet hon. Members from all the political parties represented in Welsh constituencies, as well as meeting others who have an interest in Welsh affairs.

Ambulance NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the development of ambulance NHS trusts in Wales. [31836]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There are currently five NHS trusts in Wales providing ambulance services.

My right hon. Friend and I have consulted on proposals for a single ambulance trust, incorporating all of the current ambulance services, to be established from April 1998. Public consultation on the proposals ended on 27 January 1998.

Taking full account of the many representations received, and of the individual merits of bringing the services together, I am today announcing our decision to approve the merger. The 4 existing ambulance NHS trusts will be dissolved on 1 April 1998. The Welsh Ambulance Services NHS Trust will immediately be established also incorporating the Pembrokeshire Ambulance Service. The Chairman of the new Trust will be Mr. Eifion Pritchard, recently retired Deputy Chief Constable of Dyfed Powys Police.

A list of those organisations and individuals that responded to the public consultation, detailing their views, has been placed in the Library of the House.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sport (Governing Bodies)

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the governing bodies for sport indicating the number of places on each. [27160]

Mr. Banks: As at December 1997, there were 414 governing bodies of sport, recognised by the Sports Councils, operating in the UK.

Information on the number of places on each body is not readily available, but I will ask the UK Sports Council to obtain it. I will write to my hon. Friend once this information is available and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the chairpersons or chief executives responsible for the governance of sport, indicating those who have represented their country. [27126]

Mr. Banks: This information is not held centrally, but I will ask the UK Sports Council to obtain it. I will write to my hon. Friend once it becomes available and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Sport (Funding)

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many sports his Department recognises for the purpose of funding. [27125]

Mr. Banks: The Government do not decide what is and what is not a sport. As independent corporate bodies established by Royal Charter, the Sports Councils decide which activities are eligible for support to enable the most efficient and effective use of the funding made available to them.

Currently, 112 sporting activities are eligible to be considered for the full range of the Sports Council's services. There are 414 governing bodies of these sports. Along with the Ministers of Sport for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I have asked the Chairmen of the Sports Councils to review the criteria for the recognition of sports.

PE (National Curriculum)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to discuss with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment the implications of the recent changes to the National Curriculum for the national policy on young people and sport. [30441]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed the implications of the changes to the National Curriculum with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment before the recent announcement was made. The changes are fully consistent with our national policy on young people and sport. We are pleased that PE remains a curriculum subject and we will now concentrate on ensuring that the PE and sport opportunities children get are of the highest standard possible, whether they are delivered through the curriculum or by out-of-school activities. I will continue my discussions with Ministers in DfEE to encourage the development of sport in schools.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30711]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has not awarded any advertising contracts since 1 May 1997.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Diabetics

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each piece of research (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated by his Department into the correlation between diabetes and road accidents. [30035]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Sanders) on 28 November 1997, Official Report, column 694.

The issue of research on this topic was raised at a recent meeting held by my noble Friend the Minister for Roads with the hon. Member for Torbay and others and representatives of the British Diabetic Association. Following that meeting we will be asking the Secretary of State's Honorary Advisory Panel on Diabetes and Driving to consider the research evidence submitted on that occasion by the BDA. We have also agreed to examine whether further information on diabetes and road accidents could be extracted from DVLA records.

Hydrofluorocarbon Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his assessment of the voluntary agreement reached between industry and his Department in 1996 on the reduction of hydrofluorocarbon emissions; what estimate he has made of its contribution to reducing UK greenhouse gas emissions up to 2010; and if he will make a statement. [30531]

Mr. Meacher: The voluntary agreements on the use and emissions of hydrofluorocarbons concluded in 1996 between the Government and the five principal user-sectors were drawn up to help meet our original commitment under the Framework Convention on Climate Change to return emissions of greenhouse gases to 1990 levels by the year 2000. The agreements have been welcomed by industry and reviews of the first year of the impact have been completed. Although it is yet too early to assess the quantitative impact of the voluntary agreements, overall GWP-weighted emissions of hydrofluorocarbons from the UK are expected to fall by around 65 per cent. between 1990 and 2000. HFCs have now been included in the basket of gases for which legally binding targets for the period 2008 to 2012 were agreed in Kyoto. The Government will be consulting on means to achieve their target later this year.

Brown-field Development

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of new houses he estimates have been built on brown-field land in each of the last five years. [30974]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no specific definition of "brownfield" land but it is usually taken to mean land previously developed for urban uses. These uses include residential, transport and utilities, industry and commerce, community services, previously developed vacant land and derelict land. The table gives estimates for England of the percentage of new dwellings (excluding conversions) built on land that was previously developed for urban uses. It also shows the percentage of land for new housing that was previously developed. The figures are for each year from 1989 to 1995 (the most recent available).

This information is included in the policy document "Planning for the Communities of the Future", launched by the Deputy Prime Minister in his statement in the House on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–37.

Association of Train Operating Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when (a) he and (b) his Ministers last met with representatives of the Association of Train Operating Companies; and what plans he has to alter the area of responsibility of ATOC with particular reference to co-ordination of ticketing arrangements. [31211]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have regular meetings with the Association of Train Operating Companies (ATOC) and last met them on 28 January 1998. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport last met ATOC on 23 July 1997. We are currently reviewing the existing railway regulatory framework, as part of our wider review of transport policy.

Air Transport Operators Licence Fund

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the current deficit of the Air Transport Operators Licence Fund; and what proposals he has to reduce this amount. [31190]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The deficit of the Air Travel Trust (ATTF) (which provides back-up to the Air Travel Organisers' Licensing (ATOL) system and to which I believe my hon. Friend refers, is currently £5.38 million. The Government are considering options for eliminating this deficit, including the possibility of legislation to empower the Trustees of the Fund to raise a levy on tour operators.

Ramp Checks

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those airlines which have been subject to ramp checks by the Civil Aviation Authority while at a United Kingdom airport during the last 12 months, indicating those irregularities found. [31188]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) checks aircraft operated by all UK airlines regularly as part of their continuing safety oversight duties. The responsibility for the safety oversight of foreign airlines and foreign-registered aircraft rests with the relevant national aviation authorities. Where evidence suggests that foreign-registered aircraft may not be operated fully in accordance with all ICAO safety standards and recommended practices, the Department instructs the CAA to inspect aircraft from the airline or country concerned.

In the last 12 months, 56 ramp-checks have been carried out on aircraft operated by the following foreign airlines:

ADC
Aeroflot
African International Airlines
Air Atlanta
Air India
Air Malta
Air Mauritius
Air Memphis
Air Moldova
Air Namibia
Air Sofia Alliance
All Nippon Airways
American Airlines
Avianca
Avistar
Azerbaijan Airways
Balkan Bulgarian
Belavia
Biman
CSA
DAS
Espace Aviation Services
Ethiopean Airlines
Gauruda Indonesia
Gulf Air
Hanger 5 Airservices Norway
Inter Trans Air
Iran Air
Islandsflug
Kenya Airways
Kibris Turkis Airlines
Kuwait Airways
Laker Airways
Merchant Express
Middle East Airlines
MK Airlines
Pulkovo Aviation Enterprise
Riga Airways
Royal Jordanian Airlines
Sunways
Tarom
Transarabia Air Transport
Transmediterranean Airways
Tunis Air
Turkish Airlines
United Airlines.

Ramp checks on foreign aircraft provide a limited snap-shot of the aircraft's condition or the airline's operation. Although they often identify a number of minor irregularities, these can generally be dealt with immediately or through normal maintenance procedures. Any irregularities found in ramp checks are drawn to the attention of the foreign aviation authority concerned. Where more serious problems are identified, aircraft are detained until the problems are solved, and, if necessary, permits for further flights by the airline are refused. The results of these checks were generally satisfactory and very few serious problems identified.

Child Safety Seats

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the Civil Aviation Authority has made of the advantage of introducing child safety seats for children under two years of age travelling on aircraft. [31209]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority commissioned a four year research programme by the Cranfield Impact Centre. This study showed that forward facing child safety seats, secured by a static lap belt, could provide a higher level of protection for children between the ages of 6 months and 3 years than supplementary or lap belts. As a result, since August 1991 the CAA has allowed UK airlines to permit children within that age range to be carried in appropriate car type safety seats.

Care of the Elderly

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the percentage of each local authority budget currently spent on care of the elderly services and (b) the amount per capita of the population aged over 65 years for each local authority area. [31227]

Mr. Raynsford: The information has been placed in the Library of the House.

Trams and Trolley Buses

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the number of urban trams and trolley bus systems built in the United Kingdom in the last 20 years, (b) the number of passengers carried by each tram/trolley bus system operating in the United Kingdom in 1997–98, (c) those tram/trolley bus systems currently under construction and (d) the bids submitted to the Government for future construction of tram/trolley bus systems. [31213]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are four principal light rail/tram systems in the United Kingdom which have been built in the last 20 years. Passenger data for 1997–98 are not yet available. The most recent figures available (for 1996–97) are as shown:

millions

	1996–97
Tyne and Wear Metro	33.4
Docklands Light Railway	17.0
Greater Manchester Metrolink	13.4
South Yorkshire Supertram	7.8

Source:
Transport Statistics Great Britain 1997.

Construction work is currently underway on Midland Metro Line One in Birmingham, Croydon Tramlink and the extension of Manchester Metrolink to Eccles via Salford Quays. There are proposals for several more light rail schemes around the country. Statutory powers have already been obtained for Leeds Supertram, Nottingham Express Transit and Manchester Metrolink extensions to Manchester Airport, Dumplington, Trafford Park, East Didsbury, Oldham and Rochdale. A Public Inquiry into the extension of the Tyne and Wear Metro to Sunderland and South Hylton commenced on 27 January 1998 and was concluded on 3 February 1998.

Military Heritage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 425, on historic battlefields, what steps he is taking to protect the battlefield site at Tewkesbury from housing development. [31074]

Mr. Raynsford: On 18 July 1997, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State called in a planning application by Bryant Homes Mercia Ltd. for the erection of 51 dwellings at Gastons Field, Tewkesbury. The site in question is thought to be part of the site of the Battle of Tewkesbury. The public local inquiry into the application is due to start on 10 March. The battlefield is included on the Register of Historic Battlefields compiled by English Heritage and this, together with all other relevant considerations, will be taken into account by my right hon. Friend in reaching his decision on the application.

Passenger Rail Services

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to promote the re-introduction of passenger rail lines in semi-rural areas. [31009]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I expect local authorities, the railway industry and the Franchising Director to work together to develop whatever schemes deliver best value for money for communities. The revised Objectives, Instructions and Guidance (OIG) we issued in November require the Franchising Director to offer guidance and advice to local authorities on how they can develop and secure finance for new investment, and his interim Criteria for the Appraisal of Support for Passenger Rail Services set out the basis on which he would take decisions about proposals to support new projects. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport has recently met hon. Members and Councillors about proposals for schemes in Leicestershire and Nottinghamshire and that that dialogue is now continuing at officer level.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the unpublished Department of Energy Report into the electrical fire on the Piper Alpha oil platform in 1984; and if he will make a statement. [30532]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 February 1998]: I understand the report referred to was made publicly available during the course of the Piper Alpha inquiry in 1990. Various papers associated with that inquiry were passed to the Health and Safety Executive in 1991. I have therefore asked the HSE to place a copy of the report in the House of Commons Library. The HSE advise however that they do not hold the photographs referred to in the report.

Road Accidents (Medicinal Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of road traffic accidents in each of the last 10 years have been due (a) wholly and (b) partly to the consumption of medicinal drugs. [31058]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 24 February 1998]: This information is not available.

Air Pollution

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give details of the 1998–99 charging scheme for local air pollution control under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. [31460]

Angela Eagle: Charges to cover the costs of local enforcing authorities in regulating processes which are subject to Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 were introduced in April 1991.

With the approval of the Treasury, and following consultation with local authority associations and industry, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and for Wales have made a revised scheme specifying the scale of fees and charges to take effect from 1 April 1998.

The main changes are that the standard application fee is increased by £25 to £1,065; the substantial change fee is increased by £15 to £680; and the annual subsistence charge is increased by £20 to £660.

In addition, an adjustment had been made to the scheme this year to introduce a reduced subsistence charge for processes involving the odorisation of natural gas.

The scheme will be laid before both Houses and a copy placed in the Libraries.

Social Housing

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of new units of social housing that will be built in each of the next four financial years as a result of the capital receipts initiative. [31471]

Mr. Raynsford: Where a local authority wishes to use the resources issued under the Capital Receipts Initiative to provide new social housing, we envisage that they will do so in partnership with registered social landlords. Early estimates indicate that authorities intend to use £98 million of their allocations in 1998/99 for payments of Local Authority Social Housing Grant to registered social landlords. This sum covers both provision of new units and renovation of existing units. Local authorities have recently reported on their proposed programmes and more detailed information will be available shortly.

A decision about the role and the funding of our Capital Receipts Initiative after 1998/99 will be taken in the context of our Comprehensive Spending Review. The Review process is scheduled to come to a conclusion in the Spring, and the conclusions will be reflected in our future spending plans.

Council Housing Stocks

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the policy of large-scale voluntary transfer of council housing stocks. [31468]

Mr. Raynsford: Voluntary transfer of council housing stocks is one of the options a local authority may consider in developing its housing strategy. We are, however, engaged in a comprehensive review of all housing programmes, which may lead to changes in the policy context and alter the way we handle transfers.

Housing (Stevenage)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what means are available to enable him to reverse his decision to allow building on green belt land near Stevenage; [31478]

(2) if he has the power to reverse his decision to allow the building of 10,000 houses in the green belt near Stevenage; [31479]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds if he were to reverse his decision to allow the building of 10,000 homes near Stevenage in the least expensive manner; [31480]

(4) on the basis of what unique connection to which traffic corridor he decided to allow building in the green belt near Stevenage. [31481]

Mr. Caborn: The decision to allocate land west of Stevenage for housing development was taken by Hertfordshire County Council and put forward as a proposed modification to their review of the Structure Plan. The Government Office for the Eastern Region wrote to Hertfordshire County Council on 16 January setting out the reasons why the Secretary of State did not wish to object to this proposal. A copy of that letter has been placed in the Library. Among other things, that letter explains why he agreed with the independent Panel that held the Examination in Public that the Stevenage proposal represented the most sustainable solution to meeting housing need in the County, including in relation to transport infrastructure. It is now for the County to consider the various representations it has received on its proposed modifications. The Secretary of State retains his powers to direct modification or to call-in the plan up until the time it is adopted.

Housing (West Surrey)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the savings in public money if he were to withdraw from the legal action brought by the West Surrey County Council and agree to reconsider his decision on housing in the county. [31482]

Mr. Caborn: None.

Record Industry

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last requested representatives of the British record industry to meet him; what was the purpose of the meeting; and who attended. [31618]

Mr. Prescott: I met representatives of the British record industry on 12 February to discuss the deplorable behaviour by a member of Chumbawamba at this year's Brit Awards. This meeting was attended by Rob Dickins, Chairman of the British Phonographic Industry (BPI); John Deacon, Director General of the BPI; and Lisa Anderson, Executive Producer of the Brits Awards Show. I expressed my concerns about the incident—particularly that those who run the British music industry should not be seen to tolerate such aggressive behaviour at this kind of public event.

I welcome the fact that the BPI have publicly condemned this incident as offensive and unacceptable and forcefully stated that such behaviour could not be condoned at what was intended to be a celebration of great British music.

Queensway Hall, Dunstable

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take following representations made to him by the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire in relation to the policy of South Bedfordshire District Council concerning the future of the Queensway Hall Dunstable; and if he will make a statement. [31379]

Mr. Caborn: South Bedfordshire District Council have decided to sell the Queensway Hall site and have invited bids. If the Council propose to accept a bid below the highest offer, as we understand they may do, they must apply to the Secretary of State for permission. We will consider any application on its merits.

Lee Valley Regional Park

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the powers of the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority to levy charges on new unitary local authorities with particular reference to Southend-on-Sea. [31477]

Mr. Caborn: The Lee Valley Regional Park Authority does not have the power to levy charges on new unitary local authorities.

Prisons

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish guidance to local planning authorities on the need for them to make adequate provision for prisons in their development plans. [31935]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has today published a Circular entitled "Planning for Future Prison Development". This Circular provides advice to local planning authorities on the need to make adequate provision through the planning system for new prison developments. It considers the issues which need to be taken into account in selecting suitable locations for prisons and sets out the approach whereby the provision of sites can be taken forward through the development plans system. Given that the ongoing programme of prison development is a matter of national importance, this Circular constitutes guidance of the sort envisaged in paragraph 11 of the recently published Policy Statement "Modernising Planning".

This Circular recognises that there will be a continuing need for new prison development in the foreseeable future and encourages local planning authorities to recognise that the provision of land for the secure accommodation of prisoners is an obligation the Prison Service shares with society at large. However, the Circular does not impose any new duties on local planning authorities or others: it simply sets out how the Prison Service and individual authorities may best work together for the common good.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman), 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 439–40, when he will launch the consultation on radioactively contaminated land. [32077]

Mr. Meacher: I am pleased to announce that I am today launching a consultation on radioactively contaminated land, jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

We are seeking views on the structure and principles that should underlie a regulatory regime for radioactively contaminated land. Copies of the consultation paper have been sent to the Chief Executives and Chief Environmental Health Officers of all local authorities, and to other interested parties, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Responses to the consultation are requested by 1 June 1998.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 28 January 1998, Official Report, columns 461–74, what response he has had from London and Continental Railways in respect of revised financing proposals for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [32207]

Mr. Prescott: I have held discussions with Bechtel, representing the shareholders of London & Continental Railways, and Railtrack, for whom the shareholders envisage a future role. These discussions have resulted in a framework proposal, but one which still needs to be further developed. London & Continental Railways have consequently asked for more time. In light of the complex nature of the framework proposals, and the amount of further work that needs to be done, I have decided that time should be allowed to establish whether there is an acceptable way forward; an extension to 31 March 1998 has therefore been authorised.

DEFENCE

Agency Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of (a) the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency, (b) the Defence Estate Organisation and (c) the Disposal Sales Agency; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [30471]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Malcolm Westgate to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated February 1998:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Disposal Sales Agency (DSA) newsletter as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the DSA.

The newsletter for DSA staff was first produced in July 1995. Since then a further 6 issues have been published, the most recent in January 1998. In future it is planned that the newsletter will be published 3 times a year (January, April and September).

The security classification of the DSA Newsletter is unclassified.

Letter from I. C. F. Andrews to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 25 February 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the security classification and production of newsletters produced for the staff of the Defence Estate Organisation.

DEO produces its own in-house magazine called "ESTATEment". This is a quarterly, unclassified bulletin that aims to keep staff informed about departmental and organisational issues and initiatives. It also contains articles of a human interest nature covering personal experiences and achievements.

The publication was first produced in December 1995 and the latest edition (No. 7) is in production for release in March 1998.

Letter from Michael Roycroft to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 26 February 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about newsletters produced for staff, in so far as it affects the Defence Clothing & Textiles Agency (DCTA), as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as its Chief Executive.

The first Bulletin was published in August 1993 to coincide with the formal announcement of the formation of the DCTA. The Bulletin is, and always has been, an unclassified document. It is now called Threads and is circulated to all staff on a monthly basis.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many receptions have been held in his Department since he took office; how many people have attended; and what was the total cost of these events. [25170]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Ministers in this Department have held nine receptions since taking office. Approximately 1,000 people attended, and the cost was about £14,300.

Water Cannons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department possesses (a) water cannons or (b) equipment designed to be adapted into water cannons. [31267]

Dr. Reid: The Department does not possess any water cannons or any equipment designed to be adapted into water cannons.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31180]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Discipline Acts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the consolidation of the Army, Navy and Air Force discipline Acts. [31474]

Dr. Reid: Work is currently in hand to consolidate these Acts and it is the Government's intention to introduce the necessary Bills in due course.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Primary Schools

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many female non-teaching primary school principals there are in (a) the South Eastern Education and Library Board area and (b) the Borough of Lisburn. [29945]

Mr. Worthington: Since the introduction of the LMS funding arrangements, information in the form requested is not available. Under the Local Management of Schools arrangements, it is entirely a matter for the Board of Governors of each school how their annual delegated budget is spent on running the school. This includes the number of teachers to be employed and whether or not the school employs a non-teaching rather than a teaching principal.

Life Sentence Review Board

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the cases considered in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997 and (d) 1998 by the Life Sentence Review Board; indicating the paramilitary affiliation of the offender; how long he or she had served; and what decision was taken. [30030]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The Life Sentence Review Board's advice to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is confidential. The paramilitary affiliation of prisoners is recorded for prison management purposes, not for classification.

During 1995, the Life Sentence Review Board considered 41 cases (19 Loyalists, 10 Republicans and 12 non-terrorists). Of these, 23 prisoners were recommended for consultation with the judiciary. The remaining 18 cases were deferred for periods of between one and five years for future consideration by the Life Sentence Review Board.

During 1996, the Life Sentence Review Board considered 47 cases (24 Loyalists, 11 Republicans and 12 non-terrorists). Of these, 23 prisoners were recommended for consultation with the judiciary. The remaining 24 cases were deferred for periods of between one and five years for future consideration by the Life Sentence Review Board.

During 1997, the Life Sentence Review Board considered 51 cases (22 Loyalists, 18 Republicans and 11 non-terrorists). Of these, 25 prisoners were recommended for consultation with the judiciary. The remaining 26 cases were deferred for periods of between one and five years for future consideration by the Life Sentence Review Board. Since October 1997, the maximum deferral in any individual case has been three years.

The first Review Board meeting of 1998 is taking place today, therefore comparable statistics for 1998 are no yet available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors determine whether or not a prisoner's sentence is reviewed by the Life Sentence Review Board; what is the statutory basis of the board; and what are the criteria for a life sentence review. [30031]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The cases of life sentence prisoners in Northern Ireland are normally reviewed by the Life Sentence Review Board at the ten year point of sentence but in some cases this review can take place earlier where the individual circumstances warrant such action. The cases of those sentenced to be detained during the pleasure of the Secretary of State are normally considered at the eight year stage of sentence. Again this may be earlier where the circumstances of an individual case suggest that it would be appropriate.

There is no statutory basis for the Life Sentence Review Board.

There are no set criteria for life sentence reviews. Each case is considered on its own individual merits. However, before the Review Board will recommend to the Secretary of State that a provisional release date should be set, it must be satisfied that the offender has served a period sufficient to reflect the gravity of the offence and that release would not present an unacceptable risk to the public.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cumulative total of individuals from loyalist and republican backgrounds who have (a) been subject to executive detention and (b) served prison sentences following conviction for scheduled offences. [30033]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 February 1998]: Since 1981, when records were first computerised, a total of 6,395 prisoners have been received into prison following conviction for scheduled offences.

Information on convictions prior to 1981 and on paramilitary affiliation are not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Across the years 1972–75 a total of 1,491 persons were detained or interned.

[1] Persons detained or interned under Regulation 11 and 12—Civil Authorities (Special Powers) Acts (Northern Ireland) 1922–1943 and detained under Articles 4 and 5 of the Detention of Terrorists (Northern Ireland) Order 1972, and the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973.

New Deal Environmental Task Force

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the maximum weekly fee per participant payable to a lead partner acting as a provider in the New Deal Environmental Task Force Option; and for what reason it differs from the maximum payable in England and Wales. [31314]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 26 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your question about New Deal funding for the Environment Task Force option.

The maximum funding per participant on the Environmental Task Force within New Deal in Northern Ireland is £1,300 which equates to a maximum weekly fee of £50 for a 26 week placement. In addition, £750 per participant is paid as a training fee.

When determining the level of management fee applicable in Northern Ireland the Training and Employment Agency took into account its current experience of funding similar activity under Action for Community Employment (ACE) and the pilot Community Work Programme (CWP) and the existence of an infrastructure of voluntary/environmental groups already delivering Government funded programmes. The level of fee represents a significant enhancements on those paid within ACE and CWP. For comparison purposes the maximum funding in respect of 10 participants over a 26 week period is £8,320 (CWP), £10,218 (ACE) and £20,500 (New Deal Environmental Task Force).

I am satisfied therefore that the New Deal will make available additional resources to providers of the Environmental Task Force option to enable them to deliver good quality opportunities for our young people while ensuring that the Agency lives within its overall New Deal funding allocation and seeks best value for money for the taxpayer.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara), of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 320, on what authority the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights has provided advice on issues beyond those set out in their statutory remit. [31315]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights has provided advice on issues beyond those set out in their statutory remit on the authority of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the recently appointed new members of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights have been members of the SDLP; and which of the new appointees were self-nominated and which had not responded to the advertised request for nominees. [31316]

Marjorie Mowlam: Two new members of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights have been members of the SDLP; this represents 25 per cent. All of the new appointees were self-nominated and responded to the advertisement.

The Commission is funded jointly by the British and Irish governments.

Mr. Milburn: Information about the ethnic origin and disabilities of candidates appointed to National Health Service trust boards is collected from individuals on a confidential basis for monitoring purposes and it can be made publicly available only in aggregate form. Of the 884 NHS trust appointments made in England since 1 May 1997, 12 people considered themselves to have a disability and 80 people stated that they were a member of an ethic minority.

For the information requested on the numbers of trainee occupational therapists who are currently undertaking training at colleges and universities, I refer my hon. Friend to the College of Occupational Therapists.

London Hospitals

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he consulted the Royal Colleges of Surgeons and

Physicians on the clinical costs and benefits of concentrating all services on the Royal London site in a new hospital before making his decision to keep Bart's Hospital open as a cancer and cardiac centre. [30994]

Mr. Milburn: No. However, the review was led by Sir Leslie Turnberg, who is a former President of the Royal College of Physicians.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the World Health Organisation concerning their research into the effects of the long term use of cannabis. [31042]

Mr. Boateng: The Department has had no discussions with the World Health Organisation about the document entitled "Cannabis: a health perspective and research agenda" which was published as a result of an Expert Group on Health Effects of Cannabis Use which met in Geneva in May 1995.

(2) what proposals the Government have for the inspection of residential and nursing homes for the elderly. [31224]

Mr. Boateng: We aim to create new independent arrangements for regulation and inspection which will harness the skills of both health and social services professionals to provide a better regulation service for all who receive care in residential care settings. We are currently considering various structural options for change. Our proposals will be set out in the White Paper we intend to publish later this year.

Millennium Compliance

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if computers (a) serving NHS patient records and services and (b) providing salaries for NHS employees will be fully corrected to accommodate (i) the millennium change and (ii) 29 February 2000. [31616]

Mr. Milburn: A programme of activity is being undertaken by the National Health Service Executive to ensure that all potential risks associated with the millennium change and 29 February 2000 in computer systems for patient records and salaries for NHS employees are identified and either corrected or contingency plans established.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision her Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what subsidy is provided for (a) nursery places and (b) holiday play schemes; if she will list the organisations used by her Department for child care; and if child care vouchers are made available to staff. [30005]

Mr. Field [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The Department and Agencies provide nursery places and holiday play schemes places for staff at a wide range of geographic locations. All nursery places and the majority of holiday play scheme places have a subsidy ranging from 30 to 50 per cent. There are over 600 nursery places across 34 nurseries and over 1,600 places across 56 Holiday Play Schemes. The names of all nursery providers are as listed. The names of the providers of Holiday Play Schemes are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Child care vouchers are not currently available to staff.

The Department recognises that a whole series of measures are needed to enable staff to balance home and work responsibilities. Other child care initiatives include meeting family care expenses while staff are required to be at work outside normal working hours; sponsoring after school clubs; membership of child care information referral services; provision of a creche for the Department's summer school; special paid or unpaid leave to working parents to cover illness or break down of care arrangements; career breaks of up to five years for staff with caring responsibilities with a guarantee of a job on return. We also provide training courses on balancing home and work. A variety of working patterns are also available.

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government are committed to a National Child Care Strategy which will provide high quality, affordable and accessible child care. A consultation paper will be issued in the Spring.

National Insurance

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the three step increases in employers' national insurance were eliminated and this was financed by raising the standard rate of NIC to 12 per cent., how many employees would be liable to (a) higher and (b) a lower marginal rate of contribution on employment than at present. [31391]

Mr. Denham: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the (i) maximum and (ii) expected amount of Treasury grant to the National Insurance Fund for 1997–98 and each subsequent year for which the grant is payable. [31597]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Treasury grant to the National Insurance Fund: maximum grant available and estimated grant required in 1997–98 and 1998–99

	1997–98		1998–99
	Amount (£ million)	Percentage of benefit expenditure	Amount (£ million)	Percentage of benefit expenditure
Maximum Treasury grant available[1]	1,713	4.0	896	2.0
Estimated Treasury grant needed[2]	940	2.2	nil	nil

[1] The maximum Treasury Grant available each year is prescribed as a percentage of benefit expenditure in the relevant Social Security (Contributions) (Re-rating and National Insurance Fund Payments) Order.

[2] Estimates of the Treasury grant need in 1997–98 and 1998–99 are in Table 2 of the Report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Up-rating Order 1998 and the Social Security (Contributions) (Re-rating and National Insurance Fund Payments) Order 1998 (CM 3860). The estimates of benefit expenditure set out in the report have been used to calculate the maximum amount of Treasury grant available by Order.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated reduction in employers' contributions to the National Insurance Fund for 1997–98 and each subsequent year up to 2000–01 resulting from the 0.2 per cent. reduction in the contribution rate in April 1997. [31598]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish her current estimate of national insurance contribution rates for 2000–01 and later years. [31599]

Mr. Denham: The latest published estimates of the National Insurance contribution rates required to produce sufficient income to meet the estimated expenditure from the National Insurance Fund in 2000–01 and later years are those in table 6 of the Government Actuary's report on the 3rd Quinquennial Review of the National Insurance Fund published in January 1995 (HC160), a copy of which is in the Library.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the total saving in each of the last 10 years as a result of the state retirement pension being classified as a weekly instead of a daily benefit in (a) Dumfries and Galloway and (b) Scotland. [31593]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to reclassify state retirement pension as a daily benefit. [31594]

Mr. Denham: Retirement Pension has been paid on a weekly basis since it was introduced in 1948. We have no plans to change the basis for payment, although we have, of course, promised to consider all representations on the future of the basic State pension received as part of the Pensions Review.

Residential Care Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to end the policy of not paying residential care allowance to people in council-owned and non-residential homes. [31470]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 448.

Family Credit

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many additional households would become eligible for family credit if the taper were reduced from 70p to 50p for each £1 of income. [31390]

Mr. Keith Bradley: It is estimated that around 400,000 families would become eligible for Family Credit if the taper was reduced from 70p to 50p for each £1 of income.

Mr. Keith Bradley: Computers involved in the calculation and award of all benefits including State pensions will be fully able to accommodate both the millennium change and the 29 February 2000.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) if he will make a statement on the effect that high wind speed will have on the construction of the Millennium Dome; [29702]

(2) what safety restrictions relating to wind speed have been imposed by the Health and Safety Executive to protect employees working at the Millennium Dome site in Greenwich. [29703]

Mr. Mandelson: I understand that, during the initial unfurling of the roof fabric for the Millennium Dome, which will account for only 10 per cent. of the roof installation schedule, there will be a 12 mph wind speed restriction. For the remainder of the operation, work can be carried out safely in wind speeds of up to 35 mph. The installation of the roof fabric is planned to start in April 1998, with a strict safety regime in place. Throughout the construction of the Dome, the New Millennium Experience Company's contractors will work closely with the HSE to ensure that the highest safety standards are applied to working practices in all weather conditions.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will assess the advantages of locating the large-scale figure for the Millennium Experience outside the dome. [31249]

Mr. Mandelson: The large-scale figure is integral to the plans of the New Millennium Experience company (NMEC) for the inside of the Dome. The company have no plans to locate the figure outside the Dome.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Retirement Ages

Ms Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the age of retirement in the Civil Service; and to what extent (a) policy and (b) the guidelines issued vary between Departments. [31107]

Dr. David Clark: The minimum retirement age for civil servants (i.e. the earliest age at which they can retire with full superannuation benefits) is 60 and staff have a right to retire then. However, government departments and agencies are free to set the normal retirement age for their own staff (i.e. the age at which they have to retire). This can be above 60. Departments and agencies must ensure that they apply their policy consistently to all staff at broadly the same level and they must be satisfied that staff retained beyond age 60 meet the normal standards of health and efficiency. In making such decisions, they will take into account all relevant factors such as the needs of management, present availability of staff and projected staffing requirements.

This policy is set out in Section 11.3 of the Civil Service Management Code, which sets the regulations and instructions to all departments and agencies regarding the terms and conditions of service of civil servants. Since departments and agencies can determine their own age retirement policies, some variation may occur, but must remain consistent with the Code.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Land Registration

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects all land to be registered. [29858]

Mr. Hoon: In England and Wales, there are currently 16.5 million registered titles out of an estimated total of some 22 million. The number of registered titles increases each year through the compulsory provisions which requires the registration of all conveyances and transfers of freehold land, and land held under leases for a term of more than 21 years. From 1 April 1998, the Land Registration Rules 1997 will extend the compulsory 'triggers' to include assents, vesting deeds, conveyances by way of gift, conveyances pursuant to a court order and first legal mortgages. This will accelerate the increase in the number of registered titles. However, land on which there is no change of ownership (such as that held by local authorities) may not be registered at all unless a voluntary application is made. It is, therefore, not possible to make any prediction on when all land in England and Wales will be registered.

SCOTLAND

Health Inequalities

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the ESRC Health Inequalities Programme conducted by the University of Bristol; and if he will make a statement. [29792]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) Health Variations Programme of interdisciplinary research aims to improve understanding of the health inequalities which currently exist between socio-economic groups in the UK. The Programme has two Phases, and 13 projects are underway in Phase 1.

The 2 projects which are being taken forward at the University of Bristol focus on housing and community health, and on methods for studying socio-economic position and health in different ethnic groups. Both projects are ongoing. Their findings will contribute to the research outcome of the overall Programme scheduled for completion in 2001. Thereafter, ESRC will undertake an assessment of the Programme to which the UK health departments will have access.

The work of the ESRC in the area of health inequalities is welcome and will inform the Government's continuing policies for tackling health inequalities, a task to which they have given their full commitment.

Contaminated Land

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 457–58, when he will be able to launch the consultation on radioactively contaminated land. [32206]

Mr. Dewar: I am pleased to announce that I am today launching a consultation on radioactively contaminated land, jointly with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

We are seeking views on the structure and principles that should underlie a regulatory regime for radioactively contaminated land. Copies of the consultation paper have been sent to the Chief Executives and Chief Environmental Health Officers of all local authorities, and to other interested parties, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Responses to the consultation are requested by 1 June 1998.

Council Tax

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projected Band D council tax levels for 1998–99. [31382]

Mr. Macdonald: The council tax level for each council in 1998–99 will depend on local circumstances and decisions, and it is not possible to make reliable estimates at the individual council level. Scottish local authorities are, however, required by statute to set their council tax before 11 March.

Pre-school Voucher Scheme

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount by which the 1998–99 revenue support grant has changed in relation to the 1997–98 figure as a result of the discontinuation of the pre-school voucher scheme in the 1998–99 academic year for each unitary and island authority in Scotland. [31392]

Mr. Wilson: The decision to end pre-school education vouchers has not in itself had any effect on revenue support grant for individual authorities. All grant funding for the education of children in the pre-school year under the Education (Scotland) Act 1996 will continue in 1998–99 to be outside Aggregate External Finance. However, £13.6 million has been transferred from AEF into the pre-school education grant programme in 1998–99 to prevent the double funding of local authorities for pre-school education places.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current level of non-housing debt and the cost of servicing such debt in each unitary and island authority in Scotland; and what were the equivalent figures 12 months ago. [31466]

Mr. Macdonald: The available information is as shown. The footnotes to the tables explain the basis on which the information has been compiled:

[1] Local Authorities provide the Scottish Office with annual information on the amount of debt outstanding at 31 March, on each of the main categories of account—General Services, Housing Revenue Account and Trading Services. General Services debt is further sub-divided into debt which is relevant for loan charges support and that which is non-relevant. For each of these accounts the amount recorded is the debt owed by the account to the local authority Loans Fund. These figures do not directly measure the total borrowings of the local authority.

[2] Water and Sewerage debt at 31 March 1996 has been excluded to maintain comparability.

[3] The debt figure comprises relevant and non-relevant General Fund Services and Trading Services debt. Some Non-Housing Revenue Account Housing debt is included with the relevant General Fund debt and cannot be netted off.

[4] Joint Board Debt which is relevant for loan charges support has been apportioned to the appropriate local authorities. No information is available to apportion non-relevant Joint Board debt of £45.341 million at 31 March 1996 and £46.040 million at 31 March 1997.

[5] Shetland is essentially debt free—the debt shown is only their apportionment of Joint Board debt.

TREASURY

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the engagements he undertook in the United Kingdom in the course of his duties during January indicating in each case which were accessed by (a) car, (b) train, (c) aeroplane and car, (d) aeroplane and train and (e) other means. [28940]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 10 February 1998]: I attended a number of engagements, travelling mostly by car.

EU Economic and Finance Council

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Council Meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held on 16 February. [30543]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I chaired the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 16 February. The Economic Secretary represented the UK.

The Council held an orientation debate on economic policy issues to give guidance on the issues it wishes to see addressed in this year's Broad Economic Guidelines, on which the Commission will present a recommendation later in the year. There was general agreement on the need for further fiscal consolidation and for further structural reform in labour, product and service, and capital markets.

The extraordinary European Council on employment of 20 and 21 November in Luxembourg concluded that, in order to make the taxation system more employment-friendly,

"Member States will examine, without obligation, the advisability of reducing the rate of VAT on labour-intensive services not exposed to cross-border competition."

The Council considered the Commission's Communication following up this mandate, and agreed to put the issue to a technical group.

I took this opportunity to explain briefly to colleagues my intention to attend the EMI Council on 3 March, and to remind Ministers of the importance of ensuring compatibility of national legislation with the Treaty requirements for EMU. I also notified colleagues of my intention to organise a meeting with the Social Partners on the wider implications of the single currency around the 19 May ECOFIN.

It was agreed that the Commission should examine the possibility of arrangements enabling the European Investment Bank to lend to Bosnia and to report back to the Council.

ECOFIN Ministers also met Michel Camdessus, Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, over lunch, and had a useful discussion of the world economic outlook with special reference to the financial situation in Asia and the response of the international community.

Public Corporations (Borrowing)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to give greater commercial freedom to public corporations to enable them to borrow private finance; and what assessment he has made of the potential additional resources that might be so accessed. [30550]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government are keen to see PPPs develop between public corporations and the private sector, thereby accessing private sector expertise and finance to improve public services. The potential additional resources that could be addressed in this way will depend on the form of such partnerships.

Tax Self-assessment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if taxpayers required to fill in a self-assessed tax return who filed their return in time for the deadline but whose cheques are returned unpaid on first presentation will be liable for the penalty charge. [30522]

Dawn Primarolo: A penalty charge is incurred for the late filing of a return, not for a dishonoured cheque. But any taxpayer whose cheque is returned unpaid may be charged interest on the tax due until such time as payment is made in an acceptable form.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the workings of the PFI rules in the case of London and Continental Railways and the Channel Tunnel Rail Link; and what plans he has to review those rules. [30938]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Channel Tunnel Rail Link project's difficulties are largely due to the unrealistic assumptions made by the London and Continental Railways' management about the Eurostar business in its bid, which should have been recognised by the last Government, but was not. As a result, this project is facing particular financial problems that are not relevant to other PFI deals.

With regard to PFI more generally, this Government commissioned an independent review of the policy as soon as they took office, and are currently in the process of implementing the 29 recommendations that resulted. I have every confidence that the new structures, processes and guidance we are putting in place will lead to increasing numbers of PFI contracts being signed, representing value for money for the taxpayer and welcome business for the private sector.

VAT

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of Article 26 of the Agreement Between the Governments of the States of the Benelux Economic Union, the Federal Republic of Germany and the French Republic on the Gradual Abolition of Controls at the Common Frontiers [Dep 5505 (3s)] on the pace of harmonisation of VAT in the European Commission. [31221]

Dawn Primarolo: VAT legislation in European Community is subject to the unanimous agreement of all 15 Member States under Article 99 of the Treaty. The Schengen Agreement does not affect this requirement.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31294]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I and my Ministerial colleagues meet a number of hon. Members from both sides of the House during the course of our business.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31166]

Mrs. Liddell: Treasury officials attend numerous conferences both at home and abroad in pursuit of the Government's agenda. I would be surprised if they did not make either oral or written contributions on these occasions. However, statistics on such contributions could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Young Enterprise Initiative

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning Mr. Alan Sugar's role in the Young Enterprise initiative. [30508]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 23 February 1998]: At my request, Mr. Alan Sugar is touring Britain, speaking to audiences of 17–25 year old students to encourage them to go into business. The talks are being sponsored by HM Treasury and supported by Lloyds Bank financially and in other ways.

There are 12 events in total across the country, of which 5 have already happened. I attended the first presentation. The events to date have been well attended and had an enthusiastic response from the students who came. The main part of each event is a question and answer session so that students who might be interested in eventually going into business for themselves can ask questions of one of the UK's leading entrepreneurs.

Warranties

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry concerning the protection of consumers from inadequate insurance or warranty packages in the travel insurance market and the motor vehicle warranty market. [31114]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: I have had no such discussions.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the trend in the provision of motor vehicle warranties, including non-insurance based warranties from (a) motor vehicle sellers, (b) direct insurance brokers, (c) credit card companies and (d) other non-specialist sources, since the introduction of higher rate insurance premium tax. [31112]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 10 February 1998, Official Report, columns 136–37. I have no information on the market share enjoyed by the categories of supplier listed in this question.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the impact on employment levels in the utility industries of the windfall tax. [29878]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Chancellor's judgment at the time of the July Budget was that, after consulting the regulators, the tax could be paid without any impact on prices, investment or the quality of service to customers or, in his view, on employment. Nothing has changed since then to alter that view.

Tax Law Rewrite Project

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the Tax Law Rewrite Project. [32052]

Dawn Primarolo: The Tax Law Rewrite project aims to bring clarity to our direct tax legislation, making the tax system more accessible to taxpayers and their advisers. The project is continuing to make good progress. The publication today of a second Technical Discussion Document, which takes forward the debate on 'purposive drafting', is a further milestone towards a clearer and more user-friendly tax system. Copies of the document have been placed in the Libraries of the House. 'Purposive drafting' describes a variety of techniques for making the underlying purpose of a block of legislation clearer to the reader.

I am keen that anyone with an interest takes this opportunity to comment on the role purposive techniques might play in rewriting tax legislation. The Government believe consultation with all those involved in taxation is the key to the success of the project to rewrite tax law. The publication of this document does not necessarily mean that the project will employ any of the approaches described in it. But we will keep the matter under review.

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the changes he has made to the way in which labour market statistics are presented each month. [29899]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Stewart, dated 26 February 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the changes ONS will make to the way in which labour market statistics are presented each month.

The ONS will introduce the improvements to Labour Market Statistics in April 1998. They are designed to both meet user needs and to improve public confidence in these statistics. The improvements are a result of a review carried out by the ONS and follow widespread consultation with users in May 1997.

Full details of these improvements are available in the February 1998 edition of Labour Market Trends. Copies of Labour Market Trends are available in the House of Commons Library. ONS will also be holding seminars for labour market statistics users to explain the changes and their implications over the coming months.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the changes which have been made to the way in which labour market statistics are presented each month. [29902]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Phil Woolas, dated 26 February 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the changes ONS will make to the way in which labour market statistics are presented each month.

Correspondence

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy for responding to letters received in the (a) Scottish Gaelic, (b) Welsh, (c) Urdu, (d) Hindi and (e) Chinese language. [28054]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 10 February 1998]: I am not aware that any letters in these languages have been sent to me. I would deal with any such letters case-by-case.

Taylor Task Force

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when and in what form, he will publish the report from the Taylor Task Force on Tax and Benefits. [29473]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The work of Martin Taylor's taskforce will inform the Budget at which point a decision about the publication of the report will be made.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a list of the written representations received by the Taylor Task Force on Tax and Benefits. [29475]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: There are no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the special interest groups which submitted papers to the Taylor Task Force on Tax and Benefits. [29469]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Martin Taylor has received representations from a range of groups.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the membership of the Taylor Task Force on Tax and Benefits; and on how many occasions each official member of the Task Force attended meetings of the Task Force. [29470]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Martin Taylor chairs a Task Force, on which the Treasury, Inland Revenue, the Department of Social Security and Department for Education and Employment are represented by senior officials. It is not the usual practice to name individual officials.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each meeting the Taylor Task Force on Tax and Benefits had with representatives of non-government organisations and companies. [29471]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Taylor Task Force has met a number of non-government organisations and companies.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each paper commissioned by the Taylor Task Force on Tax and Benefits from (a) inside and (b) outside government; and if he will place copies of those papers in the Library. [29472]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Taylor Task Force has commissioned a number of papers on a variety of subjects during its consideration of the tax and benefit system.

In-work Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effect on the incentive to work of receiving in-work benefits through the pay packet rather than by giro. [29474]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The Chancellor has not commissioned separate research but he has gathered a wide range of information in his consideration of a working family tax credit, from which he has concluded that it would have a number of attractions, including that it would demonstrate more clearly the rewards of work over welfare to those thinking of taking a job.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what use has been made of 11 Downing street since 1 May 1997 to host receptions and meetings for Labour Party members from constituency parties and regions; and if he will make a statement. [24780]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Any private receptions held have been in line with the Ministerial Code of Conduct. No public money has been used.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many receptions he has held at No. 11 Downing street since he took office; how many people have attended; and what was the total cost of these events. [25185]

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the receptions held in 11 Downing street since 1 May 1997, indicating (a) the purpose of the event, (b) its cost to public funds and (c) any costs not payable from public funds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the receptions scheduled to take place in 11 Downing Street over the next six months, indicating the purpose of each such event; and if he will make a statement. [24779]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 23 February 1998]: From time to time receptions are held at 11 Downing street. Arrangements for these receptions are in line with the Ministerial Code of Conduct.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

4. Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to encourage employers to become involved in the new deal. [29881]

Mr. Blunkett: The Employment Service, the Task Force, many Private Sector secondees and, of course, our local partners like Training and Enterprise Councils and Chambers of Commerce, are actively involved in engaging the support of employers across the country.

28. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to ensure the new deal matches the employment needs of businesses. [29909]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are working with businesses at both local and National levels to ensure that New Deal helps meet their employment needs and the needs of young people. For example, on 9 February, with the construction industry we launched a special framework for New Deal that will help meet skill needs within that sector, and more generally we have appointed account managers to work with National employers to help support their involvement.

29. Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from the retail sector about the new deal proposals. [29911]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love).

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the number of companies and businesses participating in the new deal. [29904]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Businesses at local and National level are working with us to plan and deliver New Deal, for example through the New Deal Task Force. Over 1,100 companies have already signed Employer Agreements with more to follow.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the New Deal measures in Cumbria. [29885]

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is, of course, early days for this ambitious undertaking, but I am encouraged by the impressive start to New Deal Pathfinders including the one in Cumbria. Across the country we have already seen over 10,000 young people enter the Gateway, seen over 1,300 employer agreements signed and seen over 4,400 clients referred to unsubsidised jobs.

Sandye Place School

13. Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he received the application for grant-maintained status from Sandye Place school; and when he will announce his decision. [29891]

Mr. Blunkett: The proposal for grant-maintained status was published by the governors of Sandye Place School on 18 April 1997. After giving careful consideration to all aspects of the proposal, it was rejected. The governors were informed of this decision on 12 February 1998.

Construction Industry

20. Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations relating to training he has received from businesses involved in the construction industry. [29898]

Dr. Howells: I regularly receive representations from businesses involved in the construction industry on a variety of issues relating to training.

Child Care

21. Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the quality and quantity of child care places. [29900]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have already developed plans to spend the first tranches of the £300 million childcare package announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 25 November, 1997, Official Report, column 777. In 1998–99, for England, the £25 million receipts from the Windfall Tax will help support the expansion of childcare provision and the development of infrastructure and capacity to deliver quality provision in preparation for the huge expansion of out of school childcare when lottery funding comes on stream in 1999. We have made £50 million available to the Out of School Childcare Initiative over the next five years; in 1998–99 this will create 20,000 new places. We plan to launch a consultation document in the spring and the final national childcare strategy later in the year.

Corporal Punishment

22. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will introduce measures to abolish corporal punishment in independent schools. [29901]

Mr. Byers: We made clear in the Standing Committee on the School Standards and Framework Bill today that the Government would facilitate a free vote at Report Stage on amendments to outlaw corporal punishment in independent schools and nurseries.

Oxford and Cambridge (Financing)

23. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the financing of Oxford and Cambridge universities. [29903]

Dr. Howells: We are still considering advice from the Higher Education Funding Council for England on the future funding arrangements for universities and colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. We hope to announce a decision shortly.

Minimum Space Standards (Schools)

25. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reinstate minimum space standards in schools. [29906]

Mr. Byers: In place of the teaching area standards, the Department's Architects and Buildings Branch has published Building Bulletin 82 "Area Guidelines for Schools". This provides detailed recommendations for minimum and maximum teaching, recreation, administration and other areas. We intend to keep under review whether our guidance is meeting pupils' needs.

Teacher Training

26. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to encourage more students to become teachers. [29907]

Mr. Byers: Maintaining teacher recruitment is one of the major challenges facing the Government. Our response to the first report of the Education Select Committee on teacher recruitment, which was published on 29 January, includes details of the action we are taking to encourage more students to become teachers. The Government also support the promotional campaign being run by the Teacher Training Agency which aims to attract high quality candidates in sufficient numbers to meet the needs of schools.

Welfare to Work (Costs)

27. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of his welfare-to-work proposals in each of the next five years. [29908]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The current estimate of the cost of the Department for Education and Employment's Welfare to Work proposals is for the financial year ending April 1998; £92 million, in 1998 to 1999; £762 million, in 1999 to 2000; £775 million, in 2000 to 2001; £752 million and £751 million in 2001 to 2002.

Actual provision for any particular year will be decided in the light of the level of unemployment and experience of the programmes.

Primary School League Tables

30. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the recently published primary school league tables. [29912]

Mr. Byers: All local education authorities in England met the statutory requirement to publish primary school performance tables based on 1997 Key Stage 2 results by 23 January. Copies of the tables have been placed in the Library, and the core data for all schools in the country can be accessed on the Internet.

British Beef

31. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will issue guidance to education authorities and governing bodies concerning the purchase of British beef; and if he will make a statement. [29913]

Mr. Byers: I see no reason to issue further guidance. Responsibility for determining the content of school meals rests with LEAs and the governing bodies of grant maintained schools. Measures are in place to ensure that beef that is legally supplied for catering purposes should pose no risk to health.

Pupil Expenditure (Worcestershire)

32. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what percentage he estimates real expenditure per pupil in Worcestershire will change in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement. [29914]

Mr. Byers: The real terms change in the level of expenditure per pupil in Worcestershire depends on budget decisions taken by the County Council. Worcestershire's education SSA for 1998–99 represents an increase of some £7 million or 3.9 per cent. in cash terms after allowing for the effects of local government reorganisation.

Age Discrimination

33. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he proposes to take to address the issue of age discrimination at work. [29915]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am currently consulting widely on age discrimination in employment and how best to address it, and will continue to do so into the Spring.

Unemployed Asylum Seekers

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the design of the new deal for those aged over 25 years, particularly as it relates to unemployed asylum seekers and those without settled status who have exceptional leave to remain. [29893]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are currently considering the detailed arrangements for the New Deal for long term unemployed adults. This will build on the New Deal approach which focuses on the needs of the individual.

This will hold true for those asylum seekers and people with exceptional leave to remain who qualify for the programme.

Pilot Employment Zones

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress to date in respect of the pilot employment zones. [29894]

Dr. Howells: From this month, prototype Employment Zones have been established in Glasgow, Liverpool and Sefton, North-West Wales, Plymouth and South Teesside. In these areas local partnerships will be testing out radical and innovative ideas to help long term unemployed adults get and keep jobs.

Small Primary Schools

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the number of small primary schools which, over the past five years, have been classified by OFSTED as failing schools, (b) the number of small primary schools which have been given good reports by OFSTED over the past five years and (c) the percentage of all schools inspected represented by each of the above figures. [31387]

Mr. Byers: This is a matter for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Higher Education Students

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to consult with local education authorities and others regarding the arrangements for administering means-testing and student support provisions for higher education students from 1999–2000. [31553]

Dr. Howells: We shall shortly be establishing an Advisory Committee whose members will include representatives from local education authorities, higher education institutions and students. It is envisaged that the Advisory Committee will meet for the first time in March. The Advisory Committee will meet for the first time in March. The Advisory Committee will liaise closely with an inter-departmental group of officials responsible for the planning of the project.

Assisted Places

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils living within the local education authority boundaries of (a) North Lincolnshire and (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire currently receive subsidised private education via the assisted places scheme; and how many will do so from 1 September. [31465]

Mr. Byers: Information about the local education authority area from which assisted pupils originate is not collected centrally. There are no schools participating in the assisted places scheme in the North Lincolnshire LEA area. Two schools participate in the East Riding of Yorkshire LEA area with 196 assisted pupils the current academic year 1997–98 and an estimated 166 assisted pupils at the start of the next academic year 1998–99.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy on surplus places in schools; and if he will publish the numbers and percentages of surplus places in each local education authority in England. [32053]

Mr. Byers: The focus of all our policies is raising standards. Surplus school places represent a poor use of resources, particularly where schools with surplus places are performing poorly or where parental preference is not being met elsewhere in the authority. The supply of, and demand for, places must be brought more closely into balance so that parental preference can be maximised and good quality education can be provided in the most cost-effective manner. The Audit Commission has drawn attention to this issue and, with District Auditors, is promoting good practice. Authorities should review their performance and, in line with Audit Commission recommendations, should focus initially on schools with 25 per cent. or more surplus places, having particular regard to standards at those schools.

The annual survey of surplus places provides the Department with an opportunity to monitor action by each authority. In the light of results of the 1997 survey, we will be writing to all local education authorities with schools with high levels of surplus, and the Funding Agency for Schools, asking for a detailed response on the justification for continuing to maintain such schools, particularly where performance is poor and there is evidence that parental preference for school places is not being met elsewhere in the authority. The Department recognises that authorities will want to take into account any unusual circumstances, for example geography and social make-up.

The following tables relate to the position as at January 1997 and set out the numbers of surplus places by local authority area, separately for primary and for secondary, together with the proportion that these represent of total capacity. In line with the approach we will be taking, they also include the numbers of schools which at that date had a surplus of 25 per cent. or more, and at least 30 surplus places, together with the proportion that these represent of the total number of schools. The data are drawn from the returns made during 1997 by local education authorities in respect of their schools and by the Funding Agency for Schools in respect of grant-maintained schools in stage 2 and 3 authority areas. Data on surplus places in the 376 grant-maintained schools in stage 1 authorities are not available. These returns indicate that there were just under 774,000 surplus school places in January 1997, representing 10 per cent. of the total capacity of 7.6 million places. There were also 2,696 schools with surplus of 25 per cent. or more and at least 30 surplus places, representing 12 per cent. of the total number of schools.

Surplus places by local authority area (excluding GM schools in stage 1 authorities) at January 1997

* Stage two for planning purposes[5].

 Stage three for planning purposes[5].

[1] Primary figures shown surplus after taking account of any summer entry

[2] Actual surplus is defined as the difference between capacity and number on roll for all schools where capacity exceeds number on roll.

[3] Schools with less than 30 surplus places are not included.

[4] Secondary surplus figures for Hammersmith and Fulham do not take account of pupils registered at some secondary schools but who attend solely the William Morris Academy, which falls outside the scope of the return. To include such pupils would understate the surplus place position in the schools covered by the return.

[5] Stage 1 = LEA has sole responsibility for planning the supply of school places.

Stage 2 = LEA and the Funding Agency for Schools share responsibility for planning the supply of school places.

Stage 3 = The Funding Agency for Schools has sole responsibility for planning the supply of school places.

Film Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were employed in the film industry in each of the last 10 years; and how many are currently employed. [29425]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

The number of employees employed in the film industry in each of the years between 1987 and 1997 for which information is available is presented in the following table:

Employees in employment (GB) in the film industry

	Industry: Film production, distribution and exhibition (SIC 80 codes)
September 1987	30,000
September 1989	34,000

	Industry: Motion picture and video activities (SIC 92 codes)
September 1991	37,000
September 1993	30,000
September 1995	24,000
September 1996	29,000
September 1997 (provisional)	34,000

Sources:
Census of Employment, Annual Employment Survey, Short-term Turnover and Employment Surveys.

Information on the number of employees in employment in the film industry is available only for some of the last 10 years because the data source, the Census of Employment, was run on a biennial basis until 1995: it then became the Annual Employment Survey.

Changes in Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) mean that the information for September 1991 onwards, based on SIC 1992, is not directly comparable with the information for earlier years which is based on SIC 1980.

Accurate information on the number of self-employed people working in the film industry is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Recidivism

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates re-offended within six months of release from prisons in Wales in 1997. [31365]

Mr. Michael: It is difficult to provide figures in precisely the form requested. Figures routinely available centrally are rates of reconviction for "standard list offences" within two years of release. The latest available figures are for prisoners discharged in 1993, when the reconviction rate for those released from prison in Wales was 60%.

Standard list offences include all indictable offences and some of the more serious summary offences (a complete list of standard list offences can be found in Appendices 4 and 5 of Criminal Statistics England and Wales, 1996, Cm 3764).

Domestic Violence

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures were taken by the police during the last 12 months to raise public awareness of domestic violence. [31359]

Mr. Michael: Domestic violence is a serious crime which we are determined to tackle. All police forces now have a domestic violence policy and a unit with specific responsibility for domestic violence. How particular forces raise awareness of this issue is a matter for the chief officer of the individual police force. A new Inter-Departmental publicity campaign on domestic violence is currently under consideration by Ministers.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure the Animal Procedures Committee is giving full consideration to independent objections to the application for a project licence from Imutran before deciding whether to issue such a licence. [31690]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animal Procedures Committee does not issue licences, but it can advise the Secretary of State on matters relating to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

We and the Committee are well aware of objections to xenotransplantation and related research using protected animals. The Committee itself contains a wide spread of opinion on this subject and two of its members sat on the Department of Health committee, chaired by Professor Kennedy, on the ethics of xenotransplantation.

The Home Office has also considered the views expressed in a report entitled "Animal-to-human organ transplants: A medical and legal perspective" which was recently submitted by Doctors and Lawyers for Responsible Medicine. Xenotransplantation Concern has also recently contacted the Home Office. Officials have invited the organisation to submit its concerns in writing.

The Animal Procedures Committee considered at its January meeting Imutran's application to continue an existing, licensed programme of work. It recommended, inter alia, that before deciding whether to grant the licence the Secretary of State should consult with the Department of Health and the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority on the issues of the transmission of retro-viruses from pigs to humans and on whether clinical xenotransplantation was still perceived as a likely eventual outcome of the ongoing research. A final decision on Imutran's application will not be made until we have received their reply.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 387, what percentage of procedures for animal testing approved by his Department led to published research in each of the last 10 years. [31748]

Mr. George Howarth: Records containing this information are not kept centrally.

Circuses

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to amend the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 to bring circus permanent holding facilities within its scope. [31688]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his Questions on 12 February 1998, Official Report, columns 346–47.

There is already legislation which applies to circus winter training quarters: the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925.

The All Party Parliamentary Group for Animal Welfare is currently preparing a full report on the welfare of circus animals. In considering the legal framework required for circuses, the Government will examine carefully its recommendation.

National Anti-Vivisection Society

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to reply to the letter of 24 October 1997 from the National Anti-Vivisection Society; and if he will place a copy of the correspondence in the Library. [31684]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 611–12.

Rather than provide a written reply, my noble Friend Lord Williams of Mostyn and officials met representatives of the National Anti-Vivisection Society on 2 December and discussed with them the points made in their letter and in their report "Accountability".

Heroin

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total value of seizures of heroin by (a) customs and (b) police in each of the last 10 years; and what percentage he estimates those figures represent of the totals of heroin consumed in the United Kingdom. [31485]

Mr. George Howarth: The value of heroin seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the last ten years was as follows:

Year	Value (£ million—not inflation adjusted)
1987	48.9
1988	59.3
1989	85.3
1990	81.2
1991	40.0
1992	51.6
1993	97.9
1994	57.4
1995	115.6
1996	59.3

Whilst Customs produce estimates of the value of their drug seizures, police forces do not make similar estimates. This is because value varies from time to time and from place to place, and is dependent on purity. Information on established street value is not collected centrally.

Since drug misuse is by its nature a clandestine activity, there is no reliable information on the estimated quantity of drugs consumed.

Firearms Compensation Scheme

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the eventual amount of compensation on Options A, B and C of the Firearms Compensation Scheme; and when he expects to be able to finalise payment, under each category. [30799]

Mr. Michael: Based on the values of the claims examined so far, we now believe the overall cost of the compensation schemes for large-calibre handguns and small-calibre pistols, including Home Office and police administrative costs, will be about £128 million. This figure is subject to further revision as the values of those items being claimed under the small-calibre Scheme are received in the Home Office Firearms Compensation Section, and the exact details of the claims under the large-calibre Scheme still to be registered, become known. The great majority of payments under Options A and B of the large-calibre compensation scheme should be completed by the end of March, and most, if not all, of the payments under Option C should be made by the end of the year. Payments under the statutory surrender scheme for small-calibre pistols should also be completed by the end of the year.

DEFENCE

Military Assistance (Foreign Governments)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on disclosure of details of military and related police assistance provided to foreign governments; and if he will make a statement. [32535]

Dr. Reid: Military and related police assistance is provided in support of a range of foreign and defence policy aims. It can be an important factor in the development of the United Kingdom's relations with countries in all parts of the world, and can make a significant contribution to regional stability by promoting military effectiveness, which helps to deter aggression. This assistance is a key element of defence diplomacy. All requests for military assistance are considered in the light of the Government's wider foreign policy.

Many foreign governments regard such assistance as contributing to their national Security and are thus sensitive about public disclosure of information about it. Because of this sensitivity it has been the practice of Ministers to decline to answer questions concerning the detail and nature of training assistance. This convention has continued to apply since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which recognises defence, security and international relations as reasons for withholding information.

My Department, in conjunction with the Foreign and Commonwealth office and others, has been considering this practice against the Government's commitment to openness. As a result, my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I, have decided that the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of the details of military and related police assistance provided to foreign governments. In future, details of the amount of assistance provided by our Armed Forces will be produced annually and published in my Department's Performance Report, starting with that to be produced following the end of this financial year. These details will include the numbers of overseas personnel trained, by country, the numbers of United Kingdom personnel involved in providing training or assistance overseas, again by country, and levels of any subsidies provided by my Department. My hon. Friend will publish details of the training subsidy programme funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. This information will also be made available to the public on request.

All other requests for information in relation to training and assistance provided will, with immediate effect, be considered on their individual merits, but with a presumption towards disclosure unless this would be against the public interest as governed by the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. In practice it is possible that information may need to be withheld where foreign countries have legitimate security concerns, where our bilateral relations might be damaged or significantly weakened by disclosure, or where disclosure would harm our own national security. We would also not normally intend to make available personal details of students or training personnel, for reasons of personal privacy, or provide information which might threaten the safety of individuals. Where specific harm could be demonstrated by a contractor to his sales prospects as a result of releasing information on military assistance, this would be weighed against the public interest in deciding to what extent disclosure should proceed. But the amount of information withheld will be kept to the minimum.

This new practice represents an appropriate balance between the need to ensure that genuine defence and foreign policy interests are protected, and legitimate Parliamentary and public interest in these matters. It will ensure that significantly more information is available than has previously been the case.

I will be writing to those Members who have been given holding responses to questions about the details of our military assistance programmes while the review has been underway, and will place copies of my letters in the Library of the House.

Political Advisers (Support Staff)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many secretarial and support staff work full-time in support of his political advisers in his Department. [25192]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: One.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many overseas visits have been made by his Department's political advisers at public expense since 1 May. [25169]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Four.

Marchwood Military Port

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the future land and accommodation requirements for Marchwood Military Port. [31304]

Mr. Spellar: An assessment of future land and accommodation requirements for Marchwood Military Port will be made once the future forces structures, deployment time frames and sustainment requirements of a deployed force have been agreed as part of ongoing Strategic Defence Review work.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to dispose of land at Marchwood Military Port. [31305]

Mr. Spellar: There is no current intention to dispose of land at Marchwood Military Port.

Peacekeeping

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the rules for the roulement of army, navy and RAF forces in peacekeeping deployments. [31343]

Dr. Reid: There are no hard and fast rules for the roulement of British forces engaged in peacekeeping deployments. We do, however, take very seriously indeed the need to minimise the disruption caused by overseas deployments. In general, we aim, where possible, to rotate personnel engaged in peacekeeping operations at intervals of between two and nine months.

In all cases, consideration of the length of any given deployment reflects the nature of the task, the size of the pool from which the deployed personnel are drawn and the time elapsed since the last deployment (of either the individual or unit). Other factors may, however, cause certain categories of personnel to be rotated more frequently than others. The specialist surgeons, physicians and anaesthetists deployed to Bosnia, for example, are frequently rotated, thereby allowing them to maintain currency in specialist skills that cannot be trained for in theatre. Conversely, where individuals or units with more unique capabilities are deployed, and where their skills cannot easily be replaced in theatre, such personnel may be rotated less frequently than others.

Foreign Service Men and Women

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many foreign service men and women are currently stationed in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales. [31368]

Dr. Reid: This information is not held centrally. However, from the records that are available, the information requested is as follows:

United Kingdom: 12,249

Wales: 11.

These figures include overseas personnel on training courses in the UK; United States and other NATO personnel based in the UK; military personnel attached to Embassies and High Commissions; and foreign personnel serving on exchange appointments with our Armed Forces.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to announce the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review before 31 July. [31455]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 499–500.

Army Legal Services

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many qualified lawyers are employed by Army Legal Services (a) in the UK, (b) in Germany and (c) elsewhere; and if he will make a statement. [31475]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 26 February 1998]: There are presently 41 qualified lawyers employed as Army officers in the UK, 15 in Germany and five elsewhere. The establishment is expected to increase over the next year to approximately 70, reflecting an increased workload, consequent upon changes to national and European legislation and a major reorganisation of the Army disciplinary system arising out of the Armed Forces Act 1996.

Iraq

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total deployment of (a) Navy, (b) RAF and (c) Army personnel and equipment around Iraq since the start of the current crisis. [31486]

Mr. George Robertson: Since the start of the current crisis in mid-January, the UK's military presence in the Gulf region has been augmented by some 1,000 RN, 600 RAF and 50 Army personnel as a result of the deployment of HMS Invincible with her complement of RN and RAF Harrier aircraft, the RFA Fort Victoria, and a detachment of Tornado aircraft to Kuwait. Additional support aircraft have also been deployed to Bahrain.

Middle East

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total additional cost of deployment of service personnel and equipment in the Middle East has been to date. [31487]

Dr. Reid: Up to 24 February 1998, the total additional cost to the MOD of the United Kingdom forces currently deployed in the Gulf amounted to £3.2 million.

Military Personnel

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military personnel on non-NATO duties have been stationed in (a) Turkey and (b) Iraq in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [31490]

Dr. Reid: Operation Warden, the UK contribution to coalition air patrols at the northern no-fly-zone over Iraq was established in 1991. Since then, there have been, at any one time, an average of 185 UK military personnel based in Turkey supporting the operation. Two military officers are employed in the Defence Section of the British Embassy in Ankara.

Five UK military personnel were based in Zakho in northern Iraq as part of the military coordination committee (which provided a military presence to reassure Kurdish areas of northern Iraq and to liaise with aid agencies in the area) between 1991 and September 1996. One member of the UK armed forces is based in the Baghdad monitoring and verification Centre as part of the UN Special Commission (UNSCOM) aerial inspection team. A number of other UK military personnel have served with UNSCOM on inspection duties for short periods of time.

Conscientious Objection

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an Advisory Committee on Conscientious Objection for members of the British armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [31675]

Dr. Reid: The Advisory Committee on Conscientious Objectors, which is a Non-Departmental Public Body, was established by administrative action in 1970. It is responsible for advising the Secretary of State for Defence on all claims of conscientious objection to further service made by officers and other ranks of the Armed Forces whose applications for permission to retire, or to resign their commissions, or for discharge, have been refused by the Service authorities.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia (Forest Fires)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she has taken to protect indigenous people and the wider environment in the area subject to forest fires in Indonesia. [31682]

Clare Short: Protection from present fires in Indonesia is of course the responsibility of the Indonesian authorities. We are helping pilot improvements to the way forests are managed that will give poor forest-dependent people a greater say, and will be seeking changes to the incentives that encourage forest to be converted to other uses.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many works of art she has borrowed for use in her offices; which organisations she has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance she received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31566]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the total official debt owed by the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and what was the amount spent by the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the former Zaire on (a) debt service, (b) health and (c) education, in terms of (i) US dollars, (ii) US dollars per capita, (iii) percentage of GNP and (iv) percentage of government expenditure, in each of the last three years. [31669]

Clare Short: Reliable budgetary statistics are not available. However, the World Bank estimated total outstanding debt in 1996 at US$ 12.8 billion, equivalent to 200% of GNP. It was 36% in arrears. There is little detailed information on public expenditure. The World Bank is mounting a mission next month to tackle this. We hope to provide an expert for the team.

Rwanda

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the total official debt owed by Rwanda; and what was the amount spent by Rwanda on (a) debt service, (b) health and (c) education in terms of (i) US dollars, (ii) US dollars per capita, (iii) percentage of GNP and (iv) percentage of government expenditure in each of the last three years. [31670]

Clare Short: Reliable budgetary statistics are not readily available. However, the World Bank estimates total external debt, including arrears at about US$1 billion (84 per cent. of GDP), and the domestic debt including arrears at US$223 million. In 1997, debt service payments accounted for 12 per cent. of the budget. Spending on the social sectors has increased in recent years, representing 43 per cent. of recurrent expenditure in 1997, compared to 23 per cent. in 1996. In addition, over 50 per cent. of the development budget is allocated to the social sectors.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) she and (b) other Ministers within her Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23760]

Clare Short: Neither myself or my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial code.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Stroke Victims

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she intends to take to ensure that officers from the Benefits Agency are trained in dealing with stroke victims. [31388]

Mr. Keith Bradley: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Helen Jones, dated 26 February 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what steps she intends to take to ensure that officers from the Benefits Agency (BA) are trained in dealing with stroke victims.

The BA aims to ensure that all our customers have equal access to the benefits system, and that wherever possible, our services can accommodate their individual needs. It is our policy to work in partnership with organisations from the voluntary sector to identify areas where improvements could be made and to work together to make the necessary changes.

Each of our managers is responsible for providing training which will help staff to meet the needs of their customers. We actively encourage them to use the expertise and support available from organisations in the voluntary sector. To assist managers, we have provided them with information on the awareness programmes and services available from a range of organisations.

We would be interested to know if stroke victims are experiencing particular difficulties in accessing the services provided and if this is the case we would welcome consultation with their representative organisations to seek ways to address the problem. Please contact the Customer Liaison Team, Room 2E22, Quarry House, Quarry Hill, Leeds LS2 7UA.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account was taken of the barriers to employment faced by lone parents with disabled children in receipt of the carer's premium when deciding to abolish the lone parent premium for income support. [31858]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The benefits system recognises that parents who are caring for a disabled child have additional costs. That is why Income Support includes a carer premium and disabled child premium which may be paid in addition to any other premium. The premiums are also available to working lone parents who qualify for Housing Benefit and/or Council Tax Benefit.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many works of art she has borrowed for use in her offices; which organisations she has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance she received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31569]

Mr. Field: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

Income Support (Mortgage Interest)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons the standard interest rate used for income support mortgage interest payments excludes lenders who are not building societies. [31881]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Building societies continue to provide a broad range of products in a very competitive market. The standard rate is based on variable rates of mortgage interest and excludes discounted and fixed rate mortgages which are available to many borrowers.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when her Department expects to reply to the letter dated 20 September 1997, from N. G. Wells of Applegarth, Water End Road, Beacons Bottom, High Wycombe, Buckinghamshire, which was forwarded to her from HM Treasury on 6 October 1997. [31672]

Mr. Denham: A reply was sent on 26 February and will be copied to the hon. Member.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 217, relating to social security expenditure, if she will express the figures in 1996–97 prices using the gross domestic product deflator; and if she will provide figures for the years after 1996–97 for which departmental public expenditure plans exist. [31882]

Mr. Field: The information is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. Figures have been taken from the 1997 Social Security Departmental Report as well as earlier equivalent publications. The figures shown include the cost of administration as well as additional local authority expenditure on Housing, Community Charge and Council Tax Benefits.

2. The figures for 1996–97 are estimates of expenditure in that year. Revised figures for the years 1996–97 to 1998–99 will be included in the 1998 Social Security Departmental Report. Figures for subsequent years will not be included as they are subject to the findings of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the results of which are expected later this year.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what share of the cost of clearing the Holyrood site is to be borne by the purchaser and what share will be met from public funds, with respect to (i) known asbestos hazard and (ii) unforeseen asbestos hazard. [30853]

Mr. McLeish: Asbestos within the existing buildings at Holyrood is stable and safe if it is handled appropriately. It will be removed by Scottish and Newcastle at their expense, or by the main contractor at no extra cost to public funds. The commercial arrangements for dealing with any unforeseen conditions on the site were set out in the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member on 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 581.

Funicular Railway, Cairngorm

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the baseline survey on areas likely to be affected by the proposed funicular railway on Cairngorm began; and if he will request Scottish Natural Heritage and the Highland Council to publish their results and engage in public consultation prior to its approval. [31230]

Mr. Macdonald: The baseline survey began in September 1997 and will be carried out over a 12 month period. The survey is intended to provide a factual description of the existing condition of an area delineated under the terms of the S50 Agreement involving the Highland Council and the developer. Scottish Natural Heritage and the Highland Council intend to make the survey results publicly available, unless there are good reasons for withholding certain information, for example to safeguard the location of specific nest sites. SNH and the Council will consult over the survey results if they consider it necessary but the information will essentially be factual and uncontentious.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the areas protected by the S.50 agreement relating to the proposed funicular railway on Cairngorm. [31241]

Mr. Macdonald: The agreement to which Scottish Natural Heritage is a party and the associated Visitor Management Plan will provide protection for land around Cairngorm including parts of the Cairngorms Special Protection Area and candidate Special Area of Conservation and the related SSSIs. These areas include woodland, moorland and montane habitats stretching from Loch Morlich to the montane plateau.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings (a) he and (b) his officials have had with officials of the European Commission to discuss (i) the boundaries of the SPA/SAC on Cairngorm and (ii) the proposed funicular railway on Cairngorm. [31237]

Mr. Macdonald: Neither my hon. Friend nor any of his officials have had formal discussions with officials of the European Commission to discuss the boundaries of the Cairngorms SPA or candidate SAC.

The award of ERDF grant to the proposed funicular railway has been discussed by his officials with the Commission officials on many occasions, as is usual for all large projects. The latest discussion took place on 19 January 1998.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will request (a) Highland Council and (b) Scottish Natural Heritage to publish the proposed monitoring scheme for the funicular railway on Cairngorm and to consult the public and interested parties prior to its approval. [31245]

Mr. Macdonald: Both the Highland Council and Scottish Natural Heritage have expressed their intention to undertake a public consultation on the proposed monitoring scheme.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he consulted the Chairman of the Cairngorms Partnership on the proposed Cairngorm funicular; and what advice he was given. [31214]

Mr. Macdonald: Consideration of the planning application for the proposed Cairngorm funicular was a matter for the planning authority, the Highland Council, which granted planning approval on 27 March 1997. My right hon. Friend had no reason to consult the Chairman of the Cairngorms Partnership on this subject.

Scottish Executive

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the non-statutory agreements to be drawn up between departments of the United Kingdom Government and the Scottish Executive. [32205]

Mr. Dewar: The White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament" noted that the Scottish Executive and Departments of the UK Government will need to develop mutual understandings covering the appropriate exchange of information, advance notification and joint working.

The Government have produced guidance for departments setting out the main principles which might govern such non-statutory agreements. Their aim will be to ensure that the business of government in Scotland and at the UK level is conducted smoothly, by setting the ground rules for administrative co-operation and exchange of information. Their purpose is not to create legal obligations or restrictions on any party, or to constrain the discretion of the Scottish Executive, or Parliament, or that of UK Government Departments.

Work on draft concordats will proceed before devolution, but they cannot be agreed until the Scottish Executive is established. The coverage of each agreement would be a matter for the Scottish Executive and the UK Government to agree. Likely common topics include: consultation arrangements in relation to proposals for legislation and executive action; exchange of policy papers, analysis and statistics; participation in working groups and official committees; liaison on EU and international matters; and consultation about UK/GB public bodies.

Copies of the guidance have been placed in the libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices and official residence; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31559]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26663]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The cost to the FCO for empty or under-utilised properties in the UK has been: (A) 1995–96: £178,617; (B) 1996–97: £131,051; (C) 1997–98: £541,500 and (D) 1997–98 full year projection: £770,162. 1997–98 figures include the Old Admiralty Building in Central London which was vacated in November 1997 pending refurbishment beginning this month.

The FCO's Agency Wilton Park, has no empty or under-utilised properties.

In respect of the Overseas Estate and FCO's non-Departmental public bodies, the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27799]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 February 1998]: This Department has held the following international conferences since 1 May 1997:

24–27 October 1997: Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM). CHOGM's are held every two years to enable Commonwealth Heads of Government to discuss key issues, and give political direction to the work of the Commonwealth. We were glad to host CHOGM as a demonstration of our commitment to the Commonwealth. The estimated cost is £7,05 million inclusive of VAT.

2–4 December 1997: The London Conference on Nazi Gold. The aim was to pool international information on gold looted by the Nazi's from countries and individuals and what subsequently happened to it. The conference established a sound body of fact which Governments and other decision takers can use as a basis for future actions. The estimated cost is £300,000 inclusive of VAT.

8 January 1998: UK/EU Commissioners Meeting. The purpose was to discuss priorities for the UK Presidency of the European Union. The estimated cost is £76,767 exclusive of VAT.

12–13 February 1998: UK/Caribbean Forum. The Forum achieved its objective, a fresh opportunity for the UK, at an early stage in its EU Presidency, to demonstrate its interest and concern for the problems of the Commonwealth Caribbean. The estimated cost was £150,000 inclusive of VAT.

Libya

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on man-made river projects in Libya; and if he will make a statement. [31358]

Mr. Fatchett: The Great Man Made River (GMMR) is a Libyan Government Project to transport water by pipeline from underground acquifers in the central desert to the coastal areas to provide water for irrigation, industry and domestic consumption.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about the Libyan facility at Tarhuna; and if he will make a statement. [31357]

Mr. Fatchett: We are concerned about recurring media reports of the development of a chemical weapons plant at Tarhuna in Libya. We follow developments closely. We look to Libya to allay suspicions of its involvement with chemical weapons, including by accession to the 1993 Chemical Weapons Convention which came into force in April 1997.

Tibet

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to secure the release of the Panchen Lama, Gedhun Choekyi Nyima; what recent representations he has made to the Chinese authorities on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [31689]

Mr. Fatchett: Nyima's case is one of a list of individual cases raised with Chinese leaders by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary when he visited China in January. Nyima's case was also raised during the latest round of EU/China talks on 24 February. We are concerned about his continued detention.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to secure compliance with the outstanding UN resolutions in respect of Tibet. [31687]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to share the concerns about human rights in Tibet which have been the subject of past UN resolutions. We will continue to raise the issue with the Chinese at every opportunity. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did this most recently when he met Chinese leaders in January.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has undertaken with representatives of the rival groups in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [31676]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 34.

It is our view that the legitimate government of President Kabbah should be restored to power in Sierra Leone. We have called for the restoration of the democratically elected President, the establishment of a broadly based government and for all parties to move to a process of disarmament and demobilisation.

I discussed the situation in Sierra Leone with President Kabbah on 20 February 1998. Our Deputy High Commissioner returned on a reconnaissance visit to Freetown on 23 February 1998 and is in contact with various groups in the city. It remains our belief that there is a need for rapid United Nations engagement, which we are discussing with members of the UN Security Council and the Secretariat.

The Commonwealth Ministerial Action group will discuss the situation in Sierra Leone at its meeting on 2–3 March.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of Turkey's armed activities in Iraq have been undertaken by FCO officials; and what representations have been made to the government of Turkey. [31489]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are aware of recent reports of Turkish military activity in northern Iraq. These have however been denied by the Turkish Government and the Kurdistan Democratic Party (KDP). The Patriotic Union of Kurdistan (PUK) have offered no confirmation of these reports.

As for the previous military activity in northern Iraq undertaken by Turkey in October last year, I raised our concerns with the Turkish Foreign Minister in Ankara. I stressed then that Turkey's intervention on behalf of the KDP was at odds with Turkey's role as co-sponsor of the Ankara process of reconciliation.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices and official residence; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31563]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

EU Presidency

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer of the United Kingdom holding the EU Presidency. [31393]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, the current estimated forecast cost to the FCO for the European Council and other FCO-led Presidency events stands at £11.337 million (excluding VAT).

PRIME MINISTER

Official Hospitality

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Prime Minister what is the maximum number of guests that can be accommodated for (a) official receptions and (b) official lunches or dinners at 10 Downing street in the state reception and dining rooms. [31452]

The Prime Minister: Downing street can accommodate usually no more than 200 people at a general reception, and at most 65 at a lunch or dinner in the State Dining Room.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices and official residence; which organisations

he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31554]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

TREASURY

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the provision of inadequate (a) travel insurance and (b) motor vehicle warranties from non-specialist sources since the introduction of higher insurance premium tax. [31113]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: I have received no such representations about motor vehicle warranties. Some travel agents have included within their representations against the higher rate of insurance premium tax concerns about the service provided by non-travel specialist outlets to buyers of travel insurance.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the number of welfare-to-work receptions he plans to hold at 11 Downing street in 1998, including the dates of the proposed receptions, how much each reception is budgeted to cost, and who will be paying for each reception; [31681]

(2) if he will list the welfare-to-work receptions he has held at 11 Downing street since 1 May 1997, stating the dates of the receptions, how much each reception cost and who paid for each reception. [31680]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 26 February 1998, Official Report, columns 358–59.

Barn Conversions (VAT)

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of revenue forgone by the Exchequer since barn conversions were zero-rated for VAT. [30972]

Dawn Primarolo: Specific details for barn conversions are not available.

GDP Statistics (Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give per capita gross domestic product figures for Staffordshire as a proportion of the EU average in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [31322]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The latest figures published by Eurostat (the Statistical Office of the European Community) are for 1994, and were published in April 1997. These show that the GDP per head for Staffordshire in 1993 and 1994 was 78 and 77 per cent. respectively of the European Union average. Figures for 1995, together with revisions for earlier years, are expected to be published by Eurostat in March 1998.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Council how many works of art she has borrowed for use in her offices; which organisations she has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance she received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31568]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31557]

Mr. Chris Smith: I am replying on behalf of all the Ministers to whom the hon. Member has addressed her questions.

A total of 186 works of art have been borrowed since 1 May 1997 from or via the Government Art Collection (GAC) for the offices and official residences of the Ministers named in the hon. Member's questions. The basis on which the GAC has made works of art available is exactly the same as under the previous administration.

Other than the GAC, the following organisations have lent works of art via the GAC:

Arts Council

National Galleries of Scotland

Glasgow Museums and Galleries

Tate Gallery

Henry Moore Foundation

The United Oxford and Cambridge University Clubs; and one private trust which has asked to remain anonymous.

Under the normal Treasury rules by which the Government bear their own risk, the Government Art Collection does not insure its own works of art, so it has no insurance value for any of these works, or those from national collections. Such works form the vast majority of loans. In general, works on loan from private lenders and from institutions that are not directly Government-funded are covered by the Government Indemnity Scheme.

Formal advice on the selection of works of art is given by the Government Art Collection, and where appropriate from staff and representatives of the other lending organisations.

It is normal practice to make works available for public exhibition on request from organisers of appropriate exhibitions. Since 1 May 1997, from the offices and official residences of the Ministers named in the hon. Member's question, three requests for works to be included in temporary public exhibitions have been received and met, and a further three are scheduled in the near future.

Works in all Government offices are changed as and when circumstances require. A small proportion is changed on a regular scheduled basis.

Correspondence

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy for responding to letters received in the (a) Scottish Gaelic, (b) Welsh, (c) Urdu, (d) Hindi and (e) Chinese language. [28066]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 10 February 1998]: My Department's policy is to attempt to reply in the language of the letter received.

Insurance Companies

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport from which insurance companies his Department's library has sought the most recent annual report and accounts in the last year. [31323]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Library keeps full records of requests for information only for two months. During this period the DCMS Library has sought the 1996 annual report and accounts from Benfield Reinsurance.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 28, on the new opportunities fund, for what reason the Minister for Arts described the National Lottery Bill [Lords] as the statutory authority for the shadow accounts in his oral answer of 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 750. [31484]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 February 1998]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Arts was seeking to explain that the National Lottery Bill, if and when it is passed, will provide statutory authority for the reallocation of funds between the good causes which the shadow accounts prefigure. Neither the distributing bodies nor my Department need any specific statutory authority to maintain those shadow accounts.

Film Commissions

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which regions of Britain are served by a regional film commission. [31530]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 February 1998]: In addition to the British Film Commission, there are 24 film commissions serving the whole of the UK.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to provide financial support to the London Film Commission. [31529]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 February 1998]: I am currently considering this matter with the London Film Commission.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from the Creative Taskforce and the Film Industry Review Group concerning the future of the London Film Commission. [31528]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Film Policy Review Group considered the position of the UK network of film commissions, including the London Film Commission (LFC), during its deliberations. The review's conclusions will be published on 25 March.

Documents considered by the Creative Industries Taskforce have also noted the role of the LFC within the context of film industry support.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received regarding the future of the London Film Commission. [31527]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 February 1998]: I have received representations regarding the future of the London Film Commission (LFC) from Mr. David Potter and Ms Christabel Albery of the LFC, the hon. Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth), Mr. Richard Ross, Vice President of Production at Universal Studios, and from the right hon. Member himself.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31562]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

Student Loans

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students applied for student loans in 1996–97; how many students who graduated in each year between 1989 and 1997 are in debt to the Student Loans Company; and if he will make a statement. [30843]

Dr. Howells: These are matters for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children at Key Stage 1 are in classes of 30 children or more. [31855]

Mr. Byers: 681,092 pupils were in Key Stage 1 classes of 30 or more pupils taught by one teacher in maintained primary schools in England in January 1997.

New Deal

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if it is his intention to continue with the New Deal programme once the revenue from the windfall tax is exhausted. [31857]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Money from the Windfall tax will finance the New Deal for the full Parliament. We will be monitoring and evaluating the New Deal carefully and will take decisions about the future based on evaluation evidence and the availability of resources.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to undertake a quinquennial review of the Further Education Funding Council for England. [32272]

Dr. Howells: In accordance with the Government's policy of quinquennial reviews of non-departmental public bodies, the Department will conduct a thorough review of the Further Education Funding Council in 1998. The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study with the following terms of reference:

(i) to review the Further Education Funding Council's functions, and the likely need in future for those functions;

(ii) to consider the powers, terms of reference, constitutional status, membership and activities of the Further Education Funding Council;

(iii) to consider whether some or all of the functions of the Further Education Funding Council can be performed through other means;

(iv) to review the efficiency and effectiveness of the Further Education Funding Council in carrying out its functions.

This study is now underway and I should welcome comments from interested parties. Comments, which may be made public unless respondents specifically request otherwise, should be sent by Tuesday 31 March to: Mr. Adrian Shaw, Divisional Manager Further Education Division, Department for Education and Employment, Room 1.82, Sanctuary Buildings, Great Smith Street, London SW1P 3BT.

Royal Ballet School

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what actions he is taking regarding the concerns expressed about the standards of pupil welfare at the Royal Ballet School. [32273]

Mr. Byers: We have taken firm steps to deal with those concerns. Richmond upon Thames Social Services Department has reported to me on the findings of its inspection of pupil welfare arrangements at the Royal Ballet School. It has recommended that the School should develop written policies and procedures for implementing equal opportunities and for dealing with complaints and with bullying; improve its pastoral support system and its methods of communicating with parents; review aspects of its approach to ballet teaching and pupil assessment; and enhance staff supervision, support and training. The Government endorse these recommendations. We have asked the School to prepare an action plan to implement these recommendations within a specified timescale, and the Social Services Department to monitor progress and undertake a follow-up inspection in the Autumn. We are also inviting OFSTED to undertake a full inspection of other aspects of the School's working during 1998–99.

WALES

Teachers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers who left the teaching profession in Wales last year, by education authority, did so on grounds of stress and ill health. [31367]

Mr. Hain: The following table shows the latest available data on the number of teacher retirements due to ill-health. Details of stress-related retirements are not held centrally:

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding the concordats to be drawn up between departments of the United Kingdom Government and the National Assembly for Wales. [32534]

Mr. Ron Davies: The White Paper "A Voice for Wales" noted that the Assembly would need to work in close partnership with those Whitehall departments responsible for developing policies or preparing secondary legislation for England, on matters which in Wales, would be the responsibility of the Assembly. It also noted that the Assembly's officials and their Whitehall counterparts would need to consult each other on a range of issues; the basis of the consultations would be set out in concordats.

The Government have produced guidance setting out the principles which might govern the concordats. Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Sea Empress

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to respond to the Report of the 'Sea Empress' Environmental Evaluation Committee. [32533]

Mr. Ron Davies: I welcome the Report, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. I am grateful to the Committee, under the Chairmanship of Professor Ron Edwards, for their work. I would welcome comments on the recommendations by the end of March and hope to be able to respond to the Report in May.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31565]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today. In addition, there are four works of art from the National Museums and Galleries of Wales in my office in Cardiff.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31182]

The Attorney-General: Figures are not kept centrally but from an examination of records in Treasury Solicitor's Department and in my own Department the position for 1997 would appear to be as follows:

Treasury Solicitor's Department

During 1997 the Treasury Solicitor's Department sent 22 delegates to a variety of seminars and conferences all of which were in the United Kingdom. Two delegates (9 per cent.) made oral contributions. No written contributions were made.

Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers

During 1997 officials in my own Department attended three conferences. One of these was in the UK and two were overseas accompanying myself. No oral or written contributions were made by the officials.

In relation to the prosecuting Departments the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Iraq

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Attorney-General what advice he has issued to the Government on the legality of an attack by the United Kingdom on Iraq under existing United Nations resolutions. [31228]

The Attorney-General: There is a long-standing convention, followed by successive Law Officers, that neither the substance of the Law Officers' advice, nor the fact they have been consulted, is disclosed outside Government. I see no reason for departure from that convention on this occasion.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Computer Systems

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by computer system, the contractors employed by (a) his Department, (b) non-departmental bodies and (c) agencies under his responsibility, for work on major computer systems commissioned between (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1997–98. [31856]

Mr. Hoon: The major computer systems commissioned by the Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies between 1993–94 and 1997–98 and the main contractors employed on their development are shown in the following table:

HEALTH

Care of the Elderly

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential homes caring for the elderly there are in each London borough. [31217]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is published in "Community Care statistics Residential personal social services for adults Detailed statistics", copies of which are in the Library. Tables L4 and L8 of the latest volume, as at March 1997, cover homes primarily for elderly and elderly mentally ill clients. Some homes primarily for other client groups may also accommodate a minority of elderly clients.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many volunteer drivers for the Ambulance Service receive expenses which exceed the national average wage; [31354]

(2) how many volunteer drivers in the Ambulance Service work more than 30 hours per week. [31355]

Mr. Boateng: Volunteer drivers are used by the ambulance service as a means of transporting non-emergency patients. They are paid by the mile and ambulance services do not keep records of hours worked. The amounts earned are not collected by the Department but it is likely that the vast majority receive expenses amounting to less than the national average wage.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria will be applied to determine whether the disease transmission risks associated with xenotransplantation are of a magnitude to rule out the commencement of clinical trials. [31686]

Mr. Boateng: The rapid rate of progress in the scientific knowledge surrounding xenotransplantation is such that any set criteria used to determine disease transmission risks would quickly become outdated. Nevertheless, the safety of the individuals concerned and of the public in general must be foremost in the consideration of any proposal to undertake a xenotransplantation procedure. Our position remains that clinical trials in xenotransplantation involving humans will be allowed to take place only when we are fully satisfied that the risks associated with such procedures are acceptable, taking account of all the available evidence at the time.

We are advised by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA) on these issues and on the acceptability of applications to undertake clinical trials in xenotransplantation involving humans. Any application will be assessed on its own merits and will be expected to include a full assessment of the microbiological risk of the proposed procedure. The UKXIRA will be assisted in its deliberations by independent assessors who will offer expert advice in all the relevant fields. The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens has agreed to set up a subgroup to look at the risks of various types of xenotransplant and will be a further source of advice to the UKXIRA.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31564]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

NHS Trust Boards

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state (a) for each NHS trust and (b) nationally, of the nominations received from hon. Members and local authorities for non-executive positions on NHS trust boards, the numbers who are members of the (i) Labour, (ii) Conservative and (iii) Liberal Democrat parties. [31851]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not collected on the party membership of nominees or of those subsequently appointed to trust boards.

Eye Examinations

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the availability of domiciliary eye examinations in special schools for children with learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [31774]

Mr. Boateng: There are no plans specifically to review the availability of domiciliary eye examinations for children at special schools. We are reviewing the domiciliary sight test scheme which, because it provides for visits to patients only at their place of residence, does not cover children at non-residential schools.

CABINET OFFICE

Official Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many engagements he undertook in January which required official transport. [31778]

Mr. Mandelson: I have meetings with ministerial colleagues and others which require official transport in London on most working days.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freemasons

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will extend the proposed registration of Freemasons into all areas of public life. [31013]

Dr. David Clark: Many public sector organisations have adopted codes of conduct which make provisions for the disclosure of private interests of their members and staff. Such codes reflect the specific circumstances of individual organisations, and seek to balance the privacy of individuals and the interests of the public. The main provisions are as follows:

Civil Servants. The conduct rules for civil servants require staff to disclose any interests, including membership of the freemasons, which conflict with their official duties. Civil servants in the Crown Prosecution Service will be covered by the arrangements proposed by the Home Secretary for the criminal justice system.

Executive non-departmental public bodies. Codes of conduct for staff and board members are mandatory and should include rules for publicly declaring potential conflicts of interest.

NHS Bodies. Codes of accountability for NHS Boards contain rules on publicly declaring conflicts of interest which arise in the course of conducting NHS business.

TECs and LECs. Codes of practice, employee handbooks, and guides for directors contain guidance relating to handling of potential conflicts of interest.

Further and higher education institutions. Governing bodies have issued guidance on declaring potential conflicts of interest.

The existing national code of local government conduct makes provision for the handling of non-pecuniary interests of local councillors. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, has also been considering with the Local Government Association and other interested bodies how best to develop a new ethical framework designed to ensure the highest standards of conduct by all those involved in local government. He intends to publish his proposals in the next month, and revisions will be considered in the light of these.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Aviation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission independent research into the economic value in terms of regional regeneration of the aviation industry to the United Kingdom. [29929]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The need for research to evaluate the potential contribution from the development of regional airports to the regeneration of the regional economy which they serve is being addressed as part of the preparations for the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, following the consultation exercise on integrated transport policy, he will develop a long-term national aviation strategy for inclusion in the Transport White Paper. [29932]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Integrated Transport White Paper to be published later this year will establish an overall framework of integrated transport policies within which policy relevant to specific modes, including aviation, can be developed subsequently.

Air Misses

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 549, on air misses, how many air misses took place in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years in categories (i) A (real risk of collision), (ii) B (possible risk of collision) and (iii) C (slight risk of collision). [30418]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) has supplied the following breakdown of Air Proximity (Airprox) incidents in UK airspace in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. The figures include both civil and military incidents. The totals differ from those provided in the Official Report, 21 January 1998, column 549, because the latter, which were taken from the CAA Annual Report and Accounts 1996–97 page 71, excluded military incidents. The definitions of categories have been adjusted to reflect the formal definitions used in Airprox reports. I have arranged for a copy of Aircraft Proximity Reports (Airprox C) Volume Twelve to be placed in the Library.

Regional Airports

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library all responses to his Department's consultation on international access to regional airports. [30310]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 19 February 1998]: No. In conducting the consultation exercise the Department made it clear to those organisations consulted that their responses would be treated on a commercially confidential basis. To place those responses in the House Library would breach that undertaking.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a list of (a) airlines and (b) other organisations which have been consulted by his Department for their views on international access to regional airports. [30309]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 19 February 1998]: The following airlines and organisations were included in the consultation exercise, on the basis that they either operated to, or in the case of airports had regular services to, international destinations beyond the European Economic Area:

Airtours International Limited
Air 2000 Limited
Air UK Limited (now KLM UK)
Birmingham International Airport Limited
Britannia Airways Limited
British Airports Authority plc
British Airways plc
British Mediterranean Airways Limited
British Midland Airways Limited
Caledonian Airways Limited
Civil Aviation Authority
Easyjet Limited
GB Airways Limited
Manchester Airport plc
Monarch Airlines Limited
Virgin Atlantic Airways Limited.

Travellers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the cost to local authorities of cleaning up areas which have been temporarily inhabited by travellers. [31049]

Mr. Raynsford: The cost to local authorities of cleaning up traveller sites is not collected centrally.

My Department provides guidance to local authorities in Circular no. 18/94 "Gypsy Sites Policy and Unauthorised Camping" advising that they should consider providing emergency stopping places for gipsies who visit their area regularly. The provision of such sites, perhaps with basic sanitary and refuse collection facilities, may deter gipsies from camping on more unsuitable public and private land.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the current number of travellers in the North West Region. [31053]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department publishes a biannual count of caravans occupied by gipsies (defined in law as "persons of nomadic habit of life, whatever their race or origin"). The latest available figures show a total of 1,188 gipsy caravans in the North West on 16 July 1997. Of these, 395 vans were on authorised council sites; 448 were on authorised privately owned sites; and 345 were on unauthorised sites. My Department does not hold details about the numbers of gipsies, or other travellers, themselves.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, by Government department, each quango and department committee to be subsumed by the proposed Greater London Authority and in each case their budgets for 1996–97. [31457]

Mr. Raynsford: We will set out our proposals for the Greater London Authority in a White Paper to be published in the week beginning 23 March.

Housing Provision

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25, if he will set out the range of percentage reductions in housing provision allocation which he would be prepared to uphold. [31483]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 26 February 1998]: Each case will need to be assessed on its merits, including especially the arguments put forward by the regional planning conference and taking into account national policies. Our policy document "Planning for the Communities of the Future" describes our proposals for the treatment of this issue and the recently published consultation paper on improving regional planning guidance describes improvements to the process.

Environmental Appraisal

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has given to other departments about improving the environmental appraisal of their policies. [31394]

Mr. Meacher: At their first meeting following the Election, on 31 July 1997, Green Ministers committed themselves to ensure that environmental issues were considered in the development of all Government policies. They also agreed that the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) should produce new guidance to help Government Departments improve the environmental appraisal of their policies.

Details of current and proposed guidance by DETR to Government Departments on environmental appraisal are set out in the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) on 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 460.

Right to Roam

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the reasons for giving the Ramblers Association and the Country Landowners Association, on 24 February, copies of the Consultation Document on the Right to Roam before it was available to hon. Members in the Vote Office. [31849]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the right hon. Member to the statement I made in response to a question by the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 369.

Local Government Finance (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the projected total revenue support grant for Essex as a percentage of the projected total standard spending assessment for Essex for the year 1998–99 and for each of the preceding five years. [31775]

Mr. Raynsford: The information for Essex County Council is:

Year	RSG £ million	SSA £ million	RSG as a percentage of SSA
1993–94	386.223	936.163	41.3
1994–95	442.710	987.652	44.8
1995–96	395.253	923.590	42.8
1996–97	388.509	967.944	40.1
1997–98	406.350	985.682	41.2
1998–99	330.056	836.353	39.6

For 1998–99 Essex County Council will be reorganised so figures are not directly comparable with earlier years. The figures are not adjusted to take account of varying local authority functions over the period.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the projected total education standard spending assessment for Essex as a percentage of projected total SSA for Essex for the year 1998–99 and for each of the preceding five years. [31776]

Mr. Raynsford: The education standard spending assessment as a proportion of the total standard spending assessment for Essex County Council for 1998–99 and each of the preceding five years is shown in the table. For 1998–99 Essex County Council will be reorganised so figures are not directly comparable with earlier years. The figures are not adjusted to take account of varying local authority functions over the period.

Year	Education SSA as a percentage of total SSA
1998–99	59.4
1997–98	58.0
1996–97	58.6
1995–96	58.5
1994–95	55.5
1993–94	56.7

Local Government Finance (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for (i) Buckinghamshire County Council, (ii) Milton Keynes Borough Council, (iii) Aylesbury Vale District Council, (iv) Chiltern District Council, (v) South Buckinghamshire District Council and (vi) Wycombe District Council and for each major service block within each council (a) the standard spending assessment for 1997–98, (b) the SSA for 1998–99 and (c) the notional SSA for 1998–99 calculated on the basis of the 1997–98 SSA formula, but using the 1998–99 SSA control totals; and if he will express these figures in each case as (1) cash totals and (2) SSA per head of population in the relevant local authority area. [31671]

Mr. Raynsford: Tables showing these figures have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Airport Noise

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to issue a consultation paper on night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted; when he intends to publish the results on night noise contours; and if he intends to undertake further research into sleep disturbance. [32604]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am publishing today a consultation paper on the night restrictions for Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted Airports. We want the consultation to be as open and accessible as possible; therefore this will be a two stage process. This preliminary consultation to seek views on all aspects of the regime is the first stage. When we have considered the responses to this consultation, we will make detailed proposals for the next regime. There will then be another consultation on these proposals before a decision is made.

We believe this two stage process will help us formulate proposals to find the right balance between environmental and economic interests. Because of the need to allow time for consultees, especially representative bodies, to make their responses, this will delay the introduction of the next night restrictions regime beyond October 1998. For winter 1998–99, the movements limits and noise quotas for the three airports will be the same as they are for winter 1997–98. For summer 1999, we are inviting comments on our intention that the movements limits and noise quotas will be the same as those for summer 1998, In the light of those comments we shall then give further consideration to the movements limits and noise quotas for summer 1999. The hours of the restrictions, the system for classifying aircraft and other aspects of the regime will remain as they are at present until the new regime is introduced.

A report on night noise contours is being published today. Its main conclusion is that there is not enough research evidence at present to underpin scientifically robust night contours relating noise to annoyance. One major area that the report identifies for further investigation is the effect of sleep disturbance at the beginning and end of the night, in particular, the significance of sleep disturbance in determining annoyance. I am therefore announcing today a research trial on sleep disturbance. Its aim will be to assess methodology and analytical techniques, to determine whether to proceed to a full scale study of either sleep prevention or total sleep loss.

Copies of the consultation paper and of the report on night noise contours will be placed in the House Library. The closing date for responses to the consultation paper is 29 May 1998.

Recycling

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will be publishing the revised guidance to local authorities on the preparation and revision of recycling plans. [32605]

Mr. Meacher: My hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, will be launching the revised guidance in Cardiff on Monday 2 March. Copies will be sent to all waste collection authorities later that week and copies will also be placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, I am directing all waste collection authorities in England to investigate if their present plans need updating. Where an authority identifies the need to revise its plan, I hope that the revised plan can be in place by the end of the year.

The Government are keen for local authorities to make every effort to achieve the target of recovering value from 40 per cent. of municipal waste by 2005. While many authorities have developed advanced and successful systems, others have yet fully to consider the need for, and the potential benefits of, recycling.

This Department and the Welsh Office received 81 responses to the consultation on the report of the Review Group on the Local Authority Role in Recycling. A list of responses received has been placed in the Library of the House copies of individual responses may be obtained through my Department's Library.

Traffic and Parking (London)

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to issue new traffic management and parking guidance for London. [32297]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have today published new Traffic Management and Parking Guidance for the London local authorities, the Traffic Director for London and the Highways Agency. Copies have been placed in the Library. The new Guidance establishes the framework for traffic management measures and parking controls across London and aims to make them serve a wider set of environmental, social and economic priorities, and to encourage greater use of alternatives to the car.

In particular, the Guidance includes new aims for red routes and parking control initiatives both of which seek to encourage a shift from the use of the car for personal travel to public transport, walking or cycling; and to traffic management programmes which reduce accidents, congestion, pollution and car dependency.

This new approach heralds a shift away from preoccupation with vehicles and instead places the emphasis on moving people and goods. The guidance gives greater priority to the needs of buses, pedestrians, cyclists and people with disabilities in traffic management and parking.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 730, what estimates she has made regarding the proportion of pensioners who will use the extra finance allocated in the Chancellor's pre-Budget statement to reduce existing fuel bills. [22366]

Mr. Battle: The extra money is being given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor, with the intention that it will help pensioners with their winter fuel bills. Pensioners themselves will choose whether to use the money to finance extra energy consumption or to help pay existing bills.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of the Millennium Hotline. [26389]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: I understand from Action 2000 that the Hotline is run on a fully commercial basis by a specialist contractor selected through competition. The cost was negotiated and reflects the normal market rate for the service offered. The contract is due for review at the end of March 1998.

Coal Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of additional compensation to coalminers in the light of the recent legal judgment on respiratory disease; and if this can be accommodated within planned totals for departmental spending. [26183]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 January 1998]: The Government are seeking urgent advice from experts on the implications of the judgment and how best to take matters forward. It is too early to say what the total cost of compensation is likely to be, as there is no way of knowing how many claims might be received and for what conditions. The DTI, in conjunction with the plaintiffs' solicitors, is currently devising arrangements to allow relevant claims to be processed systematically and valid claims to be settled as soon as is practicable.

Wave Power

Ms Wa[illegible]: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to extend non-fossil fuel obligation support to wave power in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [27118]

Mr. Battle: My review of new and renewable energy policy will review the current status of all new and renewable energy technologies to assess their potential to contribute towards meeting our future energy needs and environmental objectives. Scotland may offer particular opportunities for wave energy. Accordingly, in his announcement of proposals for the third Scottish Renewables Order (SRO-3), the Minister for Education and Industry, Scottish Office indicated that he may make limited capacity available for wave power subject to the price and quality of the bids submitted.

Condensing Gas Boilers

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many condensing gas boilers were fitted in houses in the UK (a) in 1980, (b) in 1990 and (c) at the latest available date. [28974]

Mr. Battle: There are no official figures on the installation of domestic gas condensing boilers. However estimates by the Energy Saving Trust show that no such boiler were installed in 1980, between 3,000 and 5,000 were installed in 1990, and approximately 35,000 were installed in 1997.

Exports (Middle East)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will commission research into the amount paid in commissions by United Kingdom industry and commerce to secure contracts in the Middle East. [27489]

Mrs. Roche: I have no plans to undertake research into commissions paid by UK industry in respect of commercial transactions.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance she gives to exporters concerning the payment of commissions to secure contracts in the Middle East. [27488]

Mrs. Roche: The payment of commissions is a commercial matter. Overseas Trade Services provides information on business laws, regulations and practices in overseas markets.

Arms Sales

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the arms for which licences for export to (a) Morocco, (b) Somalia, (c) Western Sahara, (d) Uganda, (e) Mozambique, (f) Zimbabwe, (g) Zambia, (h) Botswana, (i) Nambia and (j) Liberia have been granted since 1 May 1997. [28000]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows.

Between 2 May 1997 and 12 January 1998, 60 standard individual licences and 5 Open Individual Export Licences were issued to export goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List") to end-users in the specified countries.

The entry in the legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Individual export licences can cover a range of countries as well as a range of goods, controlled under several entries in the legislation. Where this is so the licence is included in the Table in the total shown against each of the relevant countries and ratings.

In addition, one Media OIEL was issued during the period. Media OIELs are Open Individual Export Licences that authorise the export to any destination of protective clothing for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint), 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

The Western Sahara is a territory, not an internationally recognised country. Ownership is disputed between Morocco and the Polisario Front. The UN plans to hold a referendum for the inhabitants of the territory to choose between independence and integration with Morocco later this year.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the arms for which export licences have been granted since 1 May 1997 to (a) Saudi Arabia, (b) Yemen, (c) Oman, (d) United Arab Emirates, (e) Qatar, (f) Bahrain and (g) Kuwait. [28630]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows.

Between 2 May 1997 and 12 January 1998, 329 standard individual licences and 10 Open Individual Export Licences were issued to export goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List") to end users in the specified countries.

Ms Oona King: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the arms for which licences for exports to (a) Armenia, (b) Azerbaijan, (c) Macedonia, (d) Croatia, (e) Serbia, (f) Estonia, (g) Tajikistan, (h) Turkmenistan, (i) Uzbekistan, (j) Kazakhstan and (k) Kyrgyzstan have been granted since 1 May 1997. [28802]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows.

The entry in the legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Between 2 May 1997 and 12 January 1998, 2 standard individual licences were issued for the export of goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List") to end users or consignees in the specified countries. One of these covered goods with a rating of ML1 and the destination was Estonia; the other covered goods with a rating of ML8 and the destination was Azerbaijan.

In the same period, one "Media" Open Individual Export Licence was issued authorising the export of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists when working in areas of conflict. No other Open Individual Export Licence was issued covering goods on the Military List and the specified destinations.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Commercial Contracts (Saudi Arabia)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make representations to the Government of Saudi Arabia to ensure greater transparency in the payment of commissions on commercial contracts. [28711]

Mrs. Roche: The payment of commissions is a commercial matter for companies.

I have no plans to make representations to the Saudi Arabian Government.

Global Environmental Services

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate her Department has made of the value of the global environmental services market; and what measures she has undertaken to promote the interests of United Kingdom companies in this sector. [29016]

Mr. Battle: The UK environmental industry has tremendous potential to generate new technologies to boost the UK economy while at the same time finding solutions to environmental problems. The world market for environmental equipment and services was estimated as being worth approximately $280 billion (US) in 1997.

The Government provide support for the environmental goods and services industry through the Joint DTI/DETR Environmental Markets Unit (JEMU). JEMU consulted the industry last summer on proposals for a three year strategy for promoting and supporting the industry at home and overseas. Following consultation, JEMU has developed the strategy in the form of a business plan. This document sets out a programme of work for the next three years and is expected to be published on 18 March.

Digital Telephone Reception

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she has taken to improve digital telephone reception in Scotland. [30402]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 February 1998]: As a result of the introduction of the opening of the market, cable operators now provide digital services in competition to BT to many people living in Scotland. Licences were granted to operators in 1997 to provide radio fixed access services to many areas in the UK including many parts of Scotland. Radio fixed access technology is being introduced to provide digital services across Scotland.

Mobile operators have also rolled out digital networks in the Central Belt and East Coast of Scotland, and there are plans to roll out to remote rural areas over the next two years.

The Government therefore have already taken steps to improve the provision of digital telecommunication services in Scotland. As competition develops further, access to and choice of digital services may well increase.

Electricity Regulator

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she next meets the Regulator for the Electricity Industry if she will ask him to reply to the letters of 24 October 1997 and 1 December 1997 sent by the hon. Member for Normanton to his office. [31037]

Mr. Battle: This is a matter for OFFER. However, I understand that the Director General of Electricity Supply will reply to my hon. Friend in the next few days.

Minerals '98 Conference

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sum her Department has provided to help fund the Minerals '98 Conference; and on what basis this money was provided. [30605]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The non-energy minerals sector is worth £2 billion a year. The Minerals '98 programme will demonstrate the vital role of this sector in the economy and encourage debate on achieving a sustainable UK minerals industry.

We are providing a grant of up to £64,000 to support the comprehensive programme of activities which constitutes Minerals '98.

Retail Electricity Companies

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on consumers of the deferral of retail electricity competition; and what compensatory action is proposed in connection with returns to regional electricity companies. [25484]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Director General of Electricity Supply has reported that a deferral is necessary to ensure that the systems which will allow customers to choose their own electricity suppliers are thoroughly tested and reliable. Compensatory arrangements for delays to the introduction of retail electricity competition are included in the electricity supply price controls which will run from April 1998. These are a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Children (Custody)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons she proposes to repeal the requirement on Northern Irish courts to consider the religious persuasion of a child before placing him or her in a custodial institution. [31622]

Mr. Ingram: At present approximately 50 per cent. of children in custody are held in secure accommodation for both Protestant and Catholic boys at Lisnevin. Under the Criminal Justice Order (NI) 1996, custodial orders must reflect the seriousness of offending. The prospective Criminal Justice (Children) Order would reduce the circumstances when children may be remanded in custody. The combined effect should be a reduction to the more serious and persistent offenders and those given custodial orders. Many of these will require secure accommodation and this, rather than religion, will be the principal criterion in deciding to which Centre a boy will be placed.

Police Authority

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to publish the discussion paper on the future composition of the Police Authority; and if she will make a statement. [27007]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 4 February 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) on 9 February 1998, Official Report, columns 54–5.

Millennium

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how expenditure by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on preparations for events celebrating the new Millennium will be funded. [32400]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Department of the Environment is empowered by Parliamentary approval through Supply Estimates and the confirming Appropriation Orders to provide financial support to certain events promoting Northern Ireland. The events celebrating the new Millennium should also promote Northern Ireland's image in a positive manner. However, as they may be novel and different from current promotional activities, Parliament's approval for expenditure in the current financial year on preparations for such events will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate for the Environmental and Other Services Vote (Department of the Environment Vote 4). Pending that approval expenditure up to an estimated £60,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Civil Contingencies Fund. I am also examining the possibility of seeking Parliament's approval for new legislation which would specifically authorise such expenditure.

Valuation and Lands Agency

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for a quinquennial review of the Valuation and Lands Agency. [32536]

Mr. Paul Murphy: A review group under the chairmanship of a senior official in the Department of Finance and Personnel, and whose membership includes both customers of the Valuation and Lands Agency and an independent person, has commenced a quinquennial review of the Agency. The group will evaluate the agency's performance, the options for carrying out its functions and the operation of its relationships with the Department of Finance and Personnel. It is planned that the review will be completed in the Autumn and the outcome will be announced in Parliament.

Children (Criminal Law)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has undertaken (a) a policy appraisal and (b) a fair treatment analysis of the proposed changes in criminal law legislation regarding children. [31623]

Mr. Ingram: Yes. A PAFT analysis was undertaken.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what independent complaints mechanism will be available to children and concerned adults complaining of maladministration or unfair treatment under the proposed Criminal Justice (Children) (Northern Ireland) Order. [31629]

Mr. Ingram: Children, and those concerned with their welfare, will, in addition to the usual remedies, have recourse to the child protection procedures established in accordance with guidelines issued by the Department of Health and Social Services. In addition, the treatment and welfare of children in juvenile justice centres will be subject to independent inspection by the Social Services Inspectorate of DHSS and children will have regular access to Independent Representatives employed by NIACRO.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been undertaken by her Department into the likely impact of mixing Catholic and Protestant children in the manner proposed by the Criminal Justice (Children) (Northern Ireland) Order. [31628]

Mr. Ingram: Since its inception in 1973, Lisnevin has provided secure accommodation for both Catholic and Protestant boys. Mixing boys of both religions has not given rise to any significant problems.

Training Schools

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant children are currently in each training school; and what were the figures in each of the previous five years. [31641]

Mr. Ingram: The following is the information:

	Rathgael		St. Patrick's		St. Joseph's		Lisnevin
	Protestant	Catholic	Protestant	Catholic	Protestant	Catholic	Protestant	Catholic

1995–96	69	7	—	45	—	36	18	13
1994–95	72	2	—	51	—	26	16	20

Notes:

1. The current figures are those at 24 February 1998.

2. The figures for the earlier years are the averages over the period—April to March.

3. The figures for the period from 1994–95 to 1996–97 include children who had been ordered to be detained for reasons of care, protection and education.

4. Figures prior to 1994–95 are not available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will identify the (a) qualifications, (b) gender and (c) perceived religious composition of staff at each grade in each training school. [31624]

Mr. Ingram: The following is the information:

	Religion			Gender
	Protestant	R/Catholic	None	Male	Female
Rathgael:
Managers, Administration, Professional, Technical	53	8	10	45	26

Clerical, Support, Others	36	3	0	13	26

Notes:
1. Training School staff hold qualifications in social work, child care, youth and community and/or teaching.
2. To give fuller details would allow individuals to be identified.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on how the open training schools are classified for use for certain religious groups and the date on which such classifications or changes in classifications were made under the Children and Young Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1986. [31625]

Mr. Ingram: As St. Patrick's, St. Joseph's and Rathgael (formerly Malone and Whiteabbey) Training Schools were approved before the Children and Young Persons (Northern Ireland) Act was commenced, it was not necessary to classify them under section 137 of that Act. However St. Patrick's Training School is regarded as providing accommodation primarily for Catholic boys while Middletown Justice Centre is classified for use primarily by Catholic girls. Rathgael is not classified by religious denomination, but as most Catholic boys and girls in the open system are accommodated at St. Patrick's and Middletown Catholic Training Schools, in practice most of the children referred to it are Protestant.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been undertaken by her Department into bullying, (a) sectarian and (b) other, in training schools. [31627]

Mr. Ingram: Bullying in Training Schools has not been identified as a persistent problem and no research has been carried out.

Anglo-Irish Secretariat

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many British civil servants and at what grades are attached to the Anglo-Irish Secretariat at Maryfield. [31313]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 26 February 1998]: Fourteen members of the Home and the Northern Ireland Civil Services are currently employed on the British Side of the Anglo-Irish Secretariat, comprising one member of the Senior Civil Service, three managerial grades, four secretarial and administrative grades and six support grade staff.

PRIME MINISTER

City of London Corporation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions his Office has had with the City of London Corporation since 1 January. [30929]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The City of London Corporation asked my office informally last autumn whether we would be content for Chancellor Kohl to be presented with the Freedom of the City of London. I did not initiate this process, but I was delighted that they wished to do this. Following confirmation from my office that I was content and Chancellor Kohl's own agreement, the Corporation formally agreed a recommendation to this effect on 4 December 1997. Since 1 January this year, my office has been in contact with the Corporation authorities on the practical arrangements, including my own involvement.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 24 February 1998, Official Report, columns 182–83, on Iraq, which of the Arab ambassadors whom he met on 23 February expressed the gratitude of their Government for the British and American stance on the threat of military action against Iraq. [32242]

The Prime Minister: The Ambassadors acknowledged the key role which the UK had played in the success of the UN Secretary-General's mission which, we hope, marks the resumption of full Iraqi co-operation with UNSCOM. It is also widely recognised, in the region and elsewhere, that this would not have been possible without the threat of force.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answers to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) of 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 184, and to the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes), Official Report, column 186, on the opposition in Iraq, if he will list the organisations (a) to which he referred and (b) with which the Minister of State has been in contact (i) in Iraq and (ii) based outside Iraq. [32245]

The Prime Minister: The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) has met representatives of the following Iraqi organisations:

(i) based in Iraq;

Patriotic Union of Kurdistan

Islamic Movement of Iraqi Kurdistan

Assyrian Democratic Movement.

(ii) headquarters outside Iraq;

Iraqi National Congress

Iraqi National Accord

Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq

Iraqi Constitutional Monarchy Movement

Islamic Accord Movement

National Reform Movement

Association of Iraqi Democrats

Iraqi Democratic Party.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the allocation of responsibility for Government policy in respect of European affairs between the Minister for Europe and the Minister without Portfolio. [32197]

The Prime Minister: The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), has ministerial responsibility in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for European Union matters. My hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio is a member of the ministerial sub-committee on European Affairs ((E)DOP), and assists me and other ministerial colleagues on the strategic implementation of Government policy and its effective presentation.

State Opening of Parliament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to (a) modernise and (b) reduce the cost of arrangements for the State opening of Parliament. [30858]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1998]: The ceremony, which should reflect the importance of the occasion, is the responsibility of the Earl Marshal. Expenditure for the next State Opening of Parliament is likely to be in line with previous expenditure on the ceremony.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

British Library

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his latest estimate of the building costs of the new building for the British Library; and if he will estimate the value of contracts associated with this construction sourced with companies in (a) London, (b) the South East of England, (c) England, (d) Scotland, (e) Wales and (f) Northern Ireland. [30064]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 18 February 1998]: The construction project budget for the new British Library building at St. Pancras is £511.1 million. Negotiations continue with some contractors on their final accounts and it is not possible to estimate the final building costs until all these accounts have been settled. Nor is it possible, for this reason, to estimate the value of the contracts by the specific geographical areas set out in the question.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecutions (Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Attorney-General how many and what percentage of cases forwarded by the Sussex Police to the Crown Prosecution Service for prosecution were turned down (a) for evidential reasons and (b) for other reasons in each year from 1994 to 1997. [31922]

The Attorney-General: The table shows the number of defendants whose cases were discontinued by the Crown Prosecution Service in Sussex, and discontinuance as a proportion of cases completed in Magistrates' Courts in each of the last four years:

Year	Discontinued	Discontinuance as percentage of completed cases
1994	3,246	12.2
1995	3,146	11.2
1996	3,023	11.2
1997	3,468	12.3

No central records are held of the reasons for which cases are discontinued. This information is held on individual case files, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. During November 1994, a survey was conducted of all cases discontinued by the Crown Prosecution Service nationally. This survey showed that the reasons for discontinuance were as follows:

Reason for discontinuance	Percentage of all cases discontinued
Insufficient evidence	43
Prosecution not in the public interest	28
Prosecution unable to proceed (eg. because witnesses failed to attend court or refused to give evidence)	19
Defendant's driving documents produced at the hearing	10

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the number of staff employed by the CCTA for each of the last five years; [31283]

(2) what is the current budget for the CCTA; and what was the budget for each of the last five years. [31280]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The cash expenditure and appropriations-in-aid of and the number of staff employed by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) in the current year and previous five years are:

	£000	£000	£000
	Expenditure	Appropriations in-aid	Net total	Staff numbers at end year
1992–93	49,487	35,205	14,282	380
1993–94	48,466	35,791	12,675	381
1994–95	37,854	20,775	17,079	290
1995–96	31,884	20,450	11,434	265
1996–97	26,460	24,440	2,020	177
1997–98[1]	23,400	23,675	–275	179

[1] The actual outturn data are shown for 1992–93 to 1996–97, the data for 1997–98 are current forecasts.

Computer Systems

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what actions are taken by the CCTA to ensure that computer systems introduced by Government Departments and agencies meet requirements in terms of value for money and efficiency. [31281]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) under its Chief Executive Bob Assirati. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob Assirati to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 26 February 1998:

I am replying on behalf of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Dr. David Clark, to your Parliamentary Question enquiring on what actions are taken by CCTA to ensure that computer systems introduced by Government departments and agencies meet requirements of value for money and efficiency.

The responsibility for ensuring that computer systems introduced by Government Departments and Agencies meet requirements in terms of value for money and efficiency lies with the individual departments and agencies. CCTA acts in an advisory and support capacity on a full cost recovery basis to those departments which seek its advice. They are free to seek support from any source they wish but virtually all make use of CCTA services. Major areas of advice include procurement and contract management, project management, post-implementation reviews, and the use of new technologies including the Internet.

CCTA also manages arrangements which enable departments to make savings when procuring IT equipment and services. These include the Government Telecommunications Services (GTS), the Government Catalogue (GCat) for IT products, and the Services Catalogue (SCAT) for IT services.

Age Discrimination

Ms Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of age discrimination in staff promotion; and what guidelines are issued by (a) his Department and (b) other Departments. [31106]

Dr. David Clark: Civil Service equal opportunities policy (as set out in the Civil Service Management Code (April 1996)) provides that all eligible people must have equality of opportunity for employment and advancement on the basis of their suitability for the work. There must be no unfair discrimination on the basis of age, disability, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, race, colour, nationality, ethnic or national origin, or (in Northern Ireland) community background.

Departments and agencies are required to develop their guidelines on promotion in line with this policy, as indeed my own Department has done.

My Department is currently working on guidance which will be issued to departments and agencies to help them avoid unfair discrimination on the basis of age.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many receptions have been held in his Department since he took office; how many people have attended; and what was the total cost of these events. [25160]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Four official receptions have been held. Approximately 170 people attended. The total cost was about £1,200.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the location and running costs of each of his Department's buildings. [30136]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 February 1998]: The information has been placed in the library.

Drink Driving

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people killed in road accidents in England and Wales during 1997, were found to be over the approved drink limit. [30573]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1995, the latest year for which detailed analysis of drink drive accidents is available, an estimated 280 drivers and riders of motor-vehicles who were over the legal limit for blood alcohol died in road accidents in England and Wales. It is estimated that there were 490 fatalities in England and Wales in that year in accidents involving a motor-vehicle driver or rider who was over the legal limit.

Public Transport (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve public transport services in the south-west London area; and if he will make a statement. [30570]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is providing financial support to a range of public transport services in south-west London. They include the cross-borough SWELTRAC initiatives to improve public transport along key corridors between Croydon and Heathrow; a range of measures on the London Bus Priority Network comprising dedicated bus lanes and priority signalling; the "Countdown" passenger information system, which is being extended with a further 300 bus stops programmed for this year including sites in Wandsworth, Putney, Earlsfield and Tooting. Works are also in hand on the Croydon Tramlink project, linking Wimbledon to Croydon, programmed for completion by the end of 1999. Modernisation of the Northern Line to Morden is ongoing and new privately financed trains are being introduced shortly. In addition South West Trains is committed to a £90 million investment in new rolling stock for their services, while Thameslink Trains are enhancing station facilities on the Wimbledon loop.

Noise Warnings

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation (1) to provide for noise warnings to be displayed on (a) ghetto blasters, (b) hi-fi equipment and (c) personal stereos and (2) for dance events to be prohibited from playing music at levels above 85 decibels. [30739]

Mr. Meacher: Risks from noise exposure to people who work at music events are covered by the Noise at Work Regulations 1989, while the health and safety of members of the public who attend is governed by the general requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

In 1993 the Health and Safety Commission, the Home Office and the Scottish Office published a "Guide to Health, Safety and Welfare at Pop Concerts and Similar Events". That guidance recommended that audiences should not be allowed within 3 metres of any speaker at outdoor events and that audiences should be advised in advance if the sound level is likely to exceed 96 dB(A).

The Government do not consider it appropriate to extend legislation to provide warnings on music equipment that is for personal use.

Strategic Roads Review

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the results of the strategic roads review. [31210]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The results of the roads review will be published later this year, after the publication of the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the occasions that the CAA has been called on to use funds from the ATOL bonding scheme for each of the last five years, indicating the companies and amounts involved. [31191]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested constitutes a rather lengthy document. I have therefore arranged for it to be placed in the House Library.

Rail Franchises

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to extend the length of the franchises for the existing rail operators. [31212]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Any requests for franchise extensions would be considered on their merits. As I told the House on 28 October 1997, Official Report, column 806,

"there would need to be very convincing arguments of public interest and value for money"

before the Government could

"justify the renegotiation of contracts which were freely entered into following a competitive process".

Car Clocking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in his review of the problem of car clocking; and when he expects to bring forward legislation on this matter. [31187]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government recognise the seriousness of the offence of clocking. A voluntary mileage recording system, administered by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, was introduced in 1992. Recent changes to the vehicle registration system have brought about a welcome increase in compliance. A review to consider whether this system should become mandatory has concluded that there should be no change at present. The subject will be kept under review in the light of further experience of the voluntary system.

Hedges

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to give additional powers to planning authorities to enable them to intervene in disputes between neighbours caused by (a) Leylandii trees and (b) other excessively high boundaries; and if he will make a statement. [30800]

Mr. Caborn: Planning permission is already required where a fence, wall or gate would be over one metre high and next to a highway used by vehicles, or over two metres elsewhere.

I am considering whether some form of Government intervention in relation to Leylandii trees and other high boundary hedges is necessary.

Diabetics (Vehicle Licences)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will reduce the vehicle licence fee for diabetics by an appropriate amount in recognition of their being precluded by the second EC directive on vehicle licensing from driving certain classes of heavier vehicles. [30849]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. The Directive does not change the rights of insulin-dependent diabetics to drive the large majority of vehicles in the private and light goods category. We do not believe that a concessionary rate of Vehicle Excise Duty would be appropriate in these circumstances, especially since the keeper—who is responsible for paying VED—and the driver of a vehicle are not necessarily the same person.

Waste Management

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment his Department has made of occasions where incorrect waste landspreading has taken place during the last five years; and if he will list the relevant sites; and if he will make a statement; [31303]

(2) what period of notice for the pre-notification requirement for waste landspreading he plans to set; and what plans he has (i) to require the submission of information on (a) the agricultural and ecological impact on the proposed site and (b) the proposed methods and equipment to be used for the landspreading and (ii) to introduce a fee payable for each pre-notification made to fund the Environment Agency's periodic inspections of the landspread sites; [31301]

(3) what powers the Environment Agency have to prevent or suspend landspreading; and if he will make a statement. [31302]

Angela Eagle: Under section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, it is unlawful to deposit, recover or dispose of controlled waste without a waste management licence, contrary to the conditions of a licence or in a way which causes pollution of the environment or harm to human health. Where someone purports to be carrying out an activity which is exempt from waste management licensing but fails to comply with the conditions of the exemption, that person may be prosecuted under section 33 of the 1990 Act for carrying out a licensable activity without a licence. The Environment Agency is responsible in England and Wales for the enforcement of these provisions.

The conditions of the current exemption for the landspreading of specified wastes are set out in paragraph 7 of Schedule 3 to the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994. The Water Research Centre and the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) have been commissioned to develop further the criteria that determine in what circumstances the spreading of particular wastes benefits agriculture or result in ecological improvement. The original research project has been extended by the Environment Agency and is now expected to be completed by the end of April 1998.

We intend to review the scope and conditions of the current exemption in the light of the results of the research project with the aim of ensuring that the objectives of protecting the environment and human health continue to be fulfilled. The Environment Agency has made no recommendations to the Department on the revision of the current exemption; and we have been advised that no such recommendations will be made until the research project has been completed and the Agency has considered its findings. For these reasons, no decisions have yet been taken on matters such as pre-notification or the submission of information.

Most landspreading of waste is carried out under the terms of the exemption from waste management licensing to which I have referred. I am advised that the Environment Agency does not maintain a central record of occasions or sites on which waste may have been landspread in a manner which is inconsistent with the terms of the exemption.

Irish Sea

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the current status of the Risk Assessment and

Collaborative Emergency Response project in the Irish Sea within the INTERREG programme; if the Marine Safety Agency is supporting this operation; and if he will make a statement; [31260]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Marine Safety Agency and Coastguard involvement in the Vessel Traffic Management Information System of the RACER project in the Irish Sea; and what is the policy of those agencies on the inclusion of VTMIS in the RACER project; [31261]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 February 1998]: On the UK side, this project comes under the Welsh Office. The Coastguard Agency and the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) have been consulted about the project's development and have given support, with the proviso that they can offer no financial assistance and only limited resource assistance, other than the occasional meeting. MSA also express an initial reservation about the value of the Vessel Traffic Management Information System (VTMIS) aspect of the project. This is because an information service such as this could give a wrong perception that all shipping movements in the area were under observation and that this could relieve participants of some of their obligations for their own safety.

After further consideration, MSA is now willing to support the inclusion of the VTMIS in the Risk Assessment and Collaborative Emergency Response in the Irish Sea project but would wish to view the outcome of the project in the light of its reservation.

Buildings Insulation

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the benefits of measures to promote the use of external wall insulation for buildings not covered by Article 4 of the Planning Regulations. [31336]

Angela Eagle: My Department and the Energy Saving Trust keep under ongoing review the value of promoting a range of energy efficiency measures, including the use of external wall insulation for buildings.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give additional funding to the Energy Saving Trust to promote the use of external wall insulation. [31337]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment told the House on 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 232, that the Government had allocated an additional £5.5 million to the Energy Saving Trust, to enable it to maintain and develop its energy efficiency programmes. The Trust is now preparing its business plan for 1998–99, and will be submitting it to me and Ministerial colleagues shortly. In preparing its proposals, the Trust considers the full range of options for the promotion of energy efficiency, including external wall insulation.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many homes he estimates have received external wall insulation. [31401]

Angela Eagle: External wall insulation is a composite system consisting of insulation material protected by render, cladding or hung tiles. This type of insulation is more effective where the exterior of a building needs repair or a major renovation is planned. It provides extra insulation and weatherproofing and improves appearance.

The industry estimate that in the last 20 years between 100,000 and 150,000 homes in the UK have had their external walls insulated in this way.

Building Conversions

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce incentives to increase the number of conversions and renovations of buildings for domestic habitation. [31335]

Mr. Raynsford: Under the Capital Receipts Initiative, we have taken action to make nearly £800 million of additional resources available to local authorities in England in 1997–98 and 1998–99 for investment in housing and housing-related regeneration schemes. About 80 per cent. of capital allocations under the Initiative in 1998–99 are expected to be invested in existing public and private sector housing.

The Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme also provides funding to registered social landlords to carry out conversion and renovation work to existing housing. In 1998–99, over £130 million is being allocated to be spent in this way from the Approved Development Programme.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions made a statement to the House on Monday 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25, outlining the Government's preferred options for handling the issue of household growth. That statement reaffirmed our commitment to developing strategies for sustainable patterns of development which make the maximum use of previously developed land and better use of existing homes. It also gave a commitment to consider whether various economic instruments could sensibly be developed to help achieve our policy objectives.

Future levels of investment in housing are being considered as part of our Comprehensive Spending Review.

Housing Development (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 29, on planning, if he will re-open the allocation of proposed housing developments between different local planning authorities in Nottinghamshire made in the latest structure plan for the county. [31458]

Mr. Caborn: No. The Nottinghamshire Structure Plan is the adopted plan for the area and sets out housing allocations for individual districts within the County. District local plans are required by law to be in general conformity with the structure plan. Any proposal to review the structure plan is a matter for Nottinghamshire County Council.

Air Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce a scheme similar to that operated by the Federal Aviation Administration to publicise the dangers of unexpected turbulence when flying. [31254]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 February 1998]: None. The US Federal Aviation Administration have been running a campaign to raise passenger awareness of the dangers of turbulence for just over a year. It is not yet clear what effect that campaign has had.

The safety briefings on UK registered aircraft already advise passengers to wear their seat belts at all times and consequently there are very few injuries to passengers resulting from the effects of turbulence.

House Building

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of his announcement of a new target for housebuilding on recycled land on proposals for a new town in Wychavon; and if he will make a statement. [31513]

Mr. Raynsford: The creation of a new settlement to meet housing demand is only one of a number of options which will be considered by the new Worcestershire County Council in producing the structure plan for the county covering the period 1996–2011. The options will no doubt be considered by the county council in the light of the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the House on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25.

Motorway Services (Solihull)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on proposals for a motorway service station on the M42 at Solihull. [31464]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A planning application has been submitted to Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council in respect of proposed motorway service area between junctions 5/6 of the M42, near Solihull. The Highways Agency has been consulted and is currently considering the impact the development will have on the operation and safety of the M42.

"Modernising Planning"

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received concerning his document, "Modernising Planning". [31612]

Mr. Raynsford: The "Modernising Planning" policy statement, which we published in January, announced the Government's intention to consult on various elements of the planning system in due course. The first of these consultation exercises, on Regional Planning Guidance, will run until 17 April. We have received two letters commenting on the policy statement itself.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the backlog of planning appeal cases for each local authority area on 1 February. [31613]

Mr. Raynsford: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 2 March 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the backlog of planning appeals for each local authority area on 1 February.

Due to technical difficulties, the information requested is not currently obtainable. I will ensure, however, that the information is sent to you as soon as possible and, as the tables are too long to be printed in the Official Report, arrangements will be made for a copy to be deposited in the Library. I expect to be able to do this within the next two weeks.

Planning Inspectors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the time taken to appoint inspectors to planning inquiries. [31614]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1 May 1997, four representations have been received about the time taken to appoint Inspectors to planning inquiries. In the same period, more than 1,600 inquiries have been arranged by the Planning Inspectorate.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy, that where a local authority has refused permission for houses to be built on a greenfield site for use by local people, the local authority should not allow a gipsy or travellers' site to be established on that land. [31890]

Mr. Caborn: The Department's Circular 1/94 "Gypsy Sites and Planning" gives local authorities advice about the planning aspects of sites for gipsy caravans. The Circular puts gipsies on the same level in planning law as everyone else. It is designed to ensure that applications for gipsy caravan sites are treated in the same way as any other form of development. Each application for planning permission is decided on its own merit in the light of its individual circumstances. It is for each local planning authority to decide what may be an appropriate gipsy site policy for their area.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the planning application for a gipsy site on land where permission to build houses has previously been refused at Chapel End Road, Houghton Conquest, Bedfordshire. [31891]

Mr. Caborn: The application was determined by Mid Bedfordshire District Council on 24 February and has been refused.

Railfreight Grants

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many railfreight grants have been awarded in the past six months; and what plans he has to improve the grant scheme. [31762]

Dr. Strang: I am today announcing the award since July 1997 of seven new freight grants worth a total of almost £5m. The grants include £1.8m to the Port of Felixstowe to help to finance additional cranes and terminal infrastructure; and three separate grants to Freightliner worth over £1.5m.

We are anxious to make full use of the grant scheme to get more freight on rail and inland waterways. In 1996–97, awards totalled £15 million. This year, the £30 million budget will be substantially taken up. To reinforce this success, the funds available in 1998–99 will be increased to £40 million.

Planning Applications

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 24, if his policy of a sequential approach to the location of new housing applies (a) forthwith, (b) in respect of current planning applications and (c) in respect of planning applications being considered at public inquiry. [31777]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The policy document issued by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on Monday 23 February ("Planning for the Communities of the Future", Cmd 3885) explains at paragraph 63 that the Government will be consulting interested parties over the development of specific guidance on a sequential approach. Meanwhile, National planning policy guidance already encourages authorities to make full and effective use of previously developed land for new housing development.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31555]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Hedgerows

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions for unlawful destruction of hedgerows were initiated in 1997. [32236]

Angela Eagle: This information is not available centrally.

Motorway Roadworks

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance is issued to contractors in relation to the provision of warning signs and notice of junction closures when carrying out motorway roadworks. [31772]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 2 March 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent question about the provision of warning signs and notice of junction closures when carrying out motorway roadworks.

It may be helpful if I explained that The Highways Agency has delegated authority under section 14 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, to close temporarily a road or junction in appropriate circumstances. The procedures associated with such action are set out in the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Procedure Regulations 1992. These require us to publish in one or more local newspapers, not less than seven days in advance, our intention to make an order under the 1984 Act. Once the order is made (ie signed by an appropriate Highways Agency officer), a further notice must be published stating the reason for the closure, when the closure will take place, and what alternative routes will be available. These alternative routes will have been discussed and agreed with the police and the local highway authority.

In addition to these statutory requirements, the Highways Agency will, depending on the significance of the closure, alert other statutory bodies, emergency services, motoring organisations, public transport operators, local radio, large local businesses, etc. In some cases, information leaflets will be produced and distributed widely. Information signs are also sometimes placed at appropriate roadside locations to warn road users of a forthcoming restriction. Such signs must comply with the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1994 (TSRGD) and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' own Traffic Signs Manual (TSM).

In putting the closure in place, it is the roadworks contractor's responsibility to provide appropriate warning signs and information to road users about diversion routes. These will be stipulated in the contract and must also comply with the detailed regulations and guidance given in TSRGD and TSM.

Coalfield Task Force

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which areas the Coalfield Task Force is examining in drawing up its programme of action. [31852]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The Task Force's terms of reference state that the geographical focus of their work should be areas of England which continue to experience acute problems as a result of the run-down of the coal industry during the 1980s and 1990s. However, the Task Force is conscious of the difficulties in drawing precise boundaries to define former coalfield communities and has placed no restrictions on the evidence it has taken and the visits it has made.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assumptions about pit closures and mining job losses the Coalfield Task Force has made in planning its work. [31859]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The Secretary of State has asked the Task Force to consider what more might be done to breathe life back into communities where pits have already closed. It has therefore not been necessary to make any such assumptions in planning their work.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money will be spent in the next three years on the Coalfield Task Force's Action Programme. [31853]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The Secretary of State will chair a national conference in the Spring to launch an action plan in response to the recommendations of the Coalfield Task Force. The Task Force has not yet formulated its recommendations so it is too early to anticipate any resource implications. The Task Force's terms of reference state that it will work within public expenditure constraints.

Road Traffic

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the Government's support for (a) Trans-European road networks and (b) road traffic reduction measures. [31925]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Ireland/UK/Benelux section of the Trans-European Road Network forms a key trade link between the mainland of Europe, the UK and Ireland. Within the UK, the network consists of well-established major routes. Our support for the Network in no way precludes consideration of traffic reduction measures as part of an integrated transport policy.

Confined Spaces Regulations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he received in respect of the Confined Spaces Regulations; and what account has been taken of these. [31926]

Angela Eagle: The Confined Spaces Regulations were made following advice from the Health and Safety Commission after consultation. Since these Regulations came into force on 28 January 1998, no representations have been received.

Housing

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) empty local authority homes, (b) empty private homes, (c) empty Government homes, (d) empty flats above shops, (e) vacant offices suitable for conversion into homes and (f) other non-residential premises suitable for conversion into homes there are in each region in England. [32223]

Mr. Raynsford: Estimates of the numbers of vacant dwellings in England on 1 April in 1997, the latest date for which figures are available, are as set out. No data are held centrally on empty flats over shops, nor on vacant offices or other non-residential premises suitable for conversion into homes.

	Vacant dwellings
Local authority[1]	81,200
Registered Social Landlords[2]	26,800
Other public sector[3]	19,000
Of which government departments	16,000
Private sector[3]	640,000
Total	767,000

Sources:
[1] HIP1 returns from local authorities.
[2] Housing Corporation HAR10/1 returns from housing associations and other Registered Social Landlords housing associations.
[3] Government Departments and HIP1 returns from local authorities.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money his Department has allocated in the current financial year to fill (a) empty local authority homes, (b) empty private homes, (c) empty Government homes, (d) empty flats above shops, (e) vacant offices suitable for conversion into homes and (f) other non-residential premises suitable for conversion into homes in each region in England. [32224]

Mr. Raynsford: The resources my Department makes available to local authorities for housing purposes are generally not hypothecated for expenditure on particular policies. It is for local authorities to determine their own priorities in targeting the resources available to make the best use of the housing stock in their areas. To assist local authorities and increase investment in housing, we have made additional resources available through the Capital Receipts Initiative for housing and housing related regeneration.

My Department has provided a grant of £102,000 to the Empty Homes Agency for the period 1995/96–1997/98 to work with local authorities to develop and implement empty property strategies. By April 1998, we expect some 200 authorities to have strategies in place. Subject to Parliamentary approval of my Department's estimates, we have agreed to provide a further three-year grant to the Agency to work with authorities to bring more redundant commercial property into residential use and to make better use of empty properties in rural areas. We are also considering how economic instruments could be developed to help meet sustainable development objectives, including maximising use of existing buildings.

Road Traffic (Short Journeys)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what percentage of traffic on (a) trunk roads and (b) motorways comprises vehicles undertaking a journey of (i) 10 miles or less and (ii) five miles or less; [31788]

(2) what percentage of traffic on local roads comprises vehicles conducting a journey of (a) five miles or less and (b) two miles or less. [31789]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available. Information on journey length is derived from the National Travel Survey. Respondents to such household surveys cannot apportion their journeys to road classes.

Department of Transport (Fees) (Amendment) Order

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the correspondence referred to by the Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), in the letter to the hon. Member for Christchurch dated 13 February 1998 which was exchanged between his Department, the Treasury and the Office for National Statistics relating to the proposed allocation of costs to different functions for the purpose of calculating fees under regulations to be introduced under the Department of Transport (Fees) (Amendment) Order 1998. [32043]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. However, I will place in the Library a copy of the table of cost allocations agreed between my Department, the Treasury and the Office for National Statistics following the correspondence referred to in my letter of 13 February to the hon. Member for Christchurch.

Driver Records

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the cost of setting up and maintaining a driver record until the age of 70 years. [32042]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested.

In 1996–97, the cost of the Driving Licence system covering under 70s, over 70s and vocational licensing was £30.4 million. In 1996–97, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency held some 37 million driver records and handled just over 814,000 first applications for provisional licences.

The current range of fees is set to recover the cost of operating the Driver Licence system taking one year with another. The fees from the first applications brought in some £17 million. The rest of the cost was covered by fees from over 70s or by other fees e.g. for duplicate licences or vocational licences.

Local Government Services

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the consultation paper on best value in local government services. [32575]

Ms Armstrong: The consultation paper will be published tomorrow morning and copies will be placed in the Library in the usual way. I am arranging for a copy of the paper to be sent to all Members of Parliament.

Highways (Noise Pollution)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy in relation to (a) increased levels of noise from existing highways and (b) compensation for living near to such highways. [32032]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There is no legal obligation to take measures to mitigate the impact of increased levels of noise from existing highways. Nor is there any requirement to provide compensation in such cases. Problems arising from Traffic noise are among the many issues being considered as part of the current transport policy review.

Leaded Petrol

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy in respect of the use of leaded petrol by vintage and veteran vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [32033]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Despite concerns raised by owners of vintage and veteran vehicles about an EU proposal to ban leaded petrol from 1 January 2000, in practice very few old vehicles are unable to operate on unleaded petrol. Lead was not added to petrol until the 1920s and came into widespread use only after the second world war; it is not, therefore, a prerequisite for earlier vehicles. Nevertheless, the oil industry is developing a special grade of petrol for these and later vehicles which does not have the disadvantages to health that are attributable to lead. This grade of petrol is expected to be widely available from 1 January 2000.

To supplement this, the Government have negotiated a derogation for an on-going supply of leaded petrol, to a limit of 0.5 per cent. of total petrol sales, to be distributed through specialist interest groups. The Government will be liaising with organisations representing the interests of classic/historic vehicle owners and with the oil industry to ensure a smooth implementation of this provision.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the level of pollution caused by leaded petrol relative to that caused by diesel. [32031]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government regularly assess pollution caused by road transport, having regard to the composition of the vehicle fleet and the emission standards which apply to vehicles of different types and ages. It is clear that the combustion of leaded petrol is still the largest source of airborne lead in most parts of the country, although emissions are declining as sales of leaded petrol decrease. There are no significant emissions of lead from diesel vehicles. Emissions of hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide from petrol vehicles are also higher than those from diesel equivalents. On the other hand diesel vehicles give rise to larger quantities of nitrogen oxides and particulates.

Telecommunications Masts

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on planning applications for mobile communication masts. [31887]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning policy on telecommunications is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 8 (revised) (PPG8), supplemented by Appendix E to Circular 9/95 and by the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning on 4 November 1997. Where telecommunications development is subject to an application for planning permission, this will be decided by the local planning authority (or the Secretary of State on appeal) in the light of development plan policies and any other material considerations. These would include PPG8 and the guidance provided in other material PPGs, as well as any relevant representations either for or against the proposal.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make the first appointments to the regional development agencies for the South West. [31396]

Mr. Caborn: The Bill setting up the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) is currently before Parliament and board appointments cannot be made until the Bill has received Royal Assent. However, we have begun the process of identifying potential board members. An advertisement seeking self-nominations appeared in the press in January, and we are now inviting groups with an interest in the proposed activities of the RDAs to make nominations.

Formal appointments to boards will not be made until after Royal Assent to the RDAs Bill. Nonetheless, it is likely that we may wish to engage a potential chairman/woman for each board and probably one other board member on an advisory basis from about June or July to assist in the early development of the RDAs. The final selection of other board members and formal appointments will not be made until later in the year, with the agencies becoming fully operational on 1 April 1999.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria he will use to select people to serve on regional development agencies; if those selected will be able to continue to serve as county or borough councillors; and if he will make a statement. [31397]

Mr. Caborn: The qualities which we are seeking in potential members of Regional Development Agency (RDA) boards and the factors which will be taken into account in making appointments are set out in the information pack made available to candidates. I have arranged for a copy of this information pack to be placed in the Library.

RDA board members will be able to continue as county or borough councillors. We intend to appoint boards of twelve members and that four of these should be local councillors.

Local Government Finance (Tewkesbury)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the reasons underlying the changes in the grant settlement awarded to Tewkesbury Borough Council for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 and the standard spending assessment for the same years. [31399]

Mr. Raynsford: The change in an authority's standard spending assessment can be broken down into the effects of changes in the total amount of money distributed nationally, changes in the underlying data (for example, resident population) and changes in the method of distribution. Estimates of these changes are shown for Tewkesbury:

Per cent.

		caused by changes in
	Total	National totals	Data	Method of Distribution
(a) 1996–97	−2.9	−1.6	+3.6	[1]-5.0
(b) 1997–98	−1.9	−1.7	−0.1	−0.1
(c) 1998–99	−5.1	+0.8	+0.6	[2]-6.5

[1] Introduction of new rent allowance element and changes in the concurrent service adjustment between shire district councils and shire county councils.

[2] Changes in composition of the indices in the All Other Services Block and changes in the treatment of debt.

The changes in the total of Revenue Support Grant and redistributed National Non-Domestic Rates broadly reflect the reduction in SSA for 1996–97 and 1997–98. The reduction in the total of Revenue Support Grant and redistributed National Non-Domestic Rates in 1998–99 exceeds the reduction in SSA. This reflects a shift in grant from shire districts to shire counties following changes in the SSA system in 1998–99, and a shift in the cost of local authority services from central government to council tax payers.

The amount of Revenue Support Grant and redistributed National Non-Domestic Rates for Tewkesbury in each year is such that if all local authorities were to spend at SSA then taxpayers in a given council tax band in Tewkesbury could face broadly the same council tax as council tax payers in the same band in other parts of England.

European Charter of Local Self-Government

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress the United Kingdom has made towards ratifying the European Charter of Local Self-Government; and if he will make a statement. [32574]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has today laid the Charter, together with my Explanatory Memorandum, before the House, thereby beginning the process of ratification. Our signature of the Charter on 3 June 1997 made clear our support for the principles of democratic local government which the Charter enshrines. Ratification will commit us to uphold these principles.

Our system of democratically elected councils, leading their local communities and securing the delivery of local services, conforms with the Charter's principles. This will be reinforced by our agenda for modernising local government and reinvigorating local democracy.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by whom candidates for silk are interviewed. [31045]

Mr. Ingram: Candidates for silk in Northern Ireland are not interviewed.

Health and Food Safety Research

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the subjects of the health and food safety research projects in which the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland are co-operating. [30807]

Mr. Worthington: The United Kingdom is not co-operating with the Republic of Ireland in any health or food safety research projects.

Labour Relations Agency

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons a civil servant was asked to attend meetings of the Board of the Labour Relations Agency. [31311]

Mr. Ingram: The Labour Relations Agency requested the attendance of an official from the Department of Economic Development at their Board meetings, in an observer capacity only, to provide clarification on the Department's position if and when the Board required such advice.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to provide for greater openness and accountability by the Labour Relations Agency. [31308]

Mr. Ingram: Government are committed to improving openness and accountability in all its Non-Departmental Public Bodies. The Labour Relations Agency has indicated its acceptance of Government's approach and is working with the Department of Economic Development on a variety of measures to make it both more relevant and more accessible to the public it serves.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what has been (a) the annual volume, (b) isotopic content and (c) origin of wastes received at each site designated for low-level radioactive waste since 1994; [31309]

(2) if she will list sites in Northern Ireland specified in authorisations issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 to receive low-level radioactive waste. [31310]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to Environment and Heritage Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. Robert C Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert C. Martin to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 26 February 1998:

As Chief Executive of Environment and Heritage Service (EHS), I am responsible for all operational aspects of the environmental policies of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. I am responding to the two Parliamentary Questions which you put down for answer on Tuesday, 3 March 1998, regarding authorisations issued under the Radioactive Act 1993 and details of low level radioactive waste.

Under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 the Chief Radiochemical Inspector issues Certificates of Registration for premises to hold radioactive material and also Certificates of Authorisation for the accumulation and disposal of radioactive waste. Conditions are placed on operators to control the disposal of low level radioactive waste eg restrictions on the quantities of waste that can be held and the disposal routes chosen. Operators are required to notify the Chief Inspector in writing of the details of all such disposals. EHS's Industrial Pollution and Radiochemical Inspectorate (IPRI) routinely inspects premises to ensure compliance with imposed conditions.

Various disposal routes are used locally eg controlled discharge to drains, land burial and intermediate storage prior to disposal at authorised facilities such as Harwell and Drigg in GB. Operators are required to provide the Chief Inspector with details of all radioactive material received and amounts disposed of via the various disposal routes on an annual basis. Public Registers giving details of all Registrations and Authorisations in Northern Ireland are held by IPRI in a central register and by the relevant district council in their local office.

Only one landfill site at Dargan Road, located in the Belfast City Council area has been used for the disposal of low level radioactive waste since 1994.

The volume of radioactive waste disposed of each year at this site is approximately 50 cubic metres. Details of the activity are set out in the attached table.

No 236

There are 4 sites currently authorised by the Chief Radiochemical Inspector, under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 to receive low level radioactive waste.

They are:

Culmore Point landfill site, near Londonderry;

Dargan Road landfill site, Belfast; and Letterloan and Mayboy Road landfill, sites, both near Coleraine.

I trust you find this reply helpful.

Radionuclide	Radioactivity 1994	Disposed 1995	(MBq) 1996
Tritium	194.31	92.807	31.295
Carbon 14	9.924	6.03	736.276
Other isotopes with a half life less than 1 year	3,069.46	2,199.67	888.4
Other isotopes with a half life greater than 1 year	0	9.5	0
Waste technetium 99 columns	50	50	0

The radioactive waste deposited at Dargan Road landfill site came from local hospitals with some material from the local Universities.

Schools

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current capital expenditure allocated to (a) integrated schools, (b) Catholic schools and (c) state schools; and what percentage of the pupil population they represent. [31632]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The information is not available in the form requested. The estimated capital expenditure on controller schools, voluntary schools and grant-maintained integrated schools in the current financial year is set out in the table, together with the percentage of the Northern Ireland pupil population they represent.

Schools	Estimated Expenditure (£ million)	Percentage of school population
Controlled	27.0	44
Voluntary	27.0	54
Grant-maintained integrated	12.8	2

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Microcredit

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to develop European policy on microcredit during the UK Presidency of the European Union. [31761]

Clare Short: My Department played an active role in an EC expert group on microfinance in the latter half of last year. My officials made a significant contribution towards the preparation of a Commission paper "Microfinance and Poverty Reduction" which was discussed by this group. This resulted in a Resolution on microfinance that was adopted by the Development Council last November.

During the UK Presidency, the Commission is charged to produce additional guidelines to assist the Commission in the design and implementation of microfinance projects. My officials will be in consultation with the Commission once these guidelines have been drafted. The key objective is to ensure that EC funds used to support microfinance projects are deployed to maximum effect to assist the poor on a sustainable basis.

Reproductive Health Care

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries her Department is supporting projects to improve the quality of service in reproductive health care. [31754]

Clare Short: We help public and private reproductive health care providers in many countries to make high-quality, client oriented services more widely available to poor people. We also assist national authorities that set and monitor service delivery standards. We do this in collaboration with United Nations agencies, such as the World Health Organisation and the UN Population Fund, the EC, international non-governmental organisations and through direct bilateral investments.

The countries where we have significant bilateral co-operation to improve people's benefits from reproductive health include: Ghana, Malawi, Pakistan, India, Cambodia, Kazakhstan, Nigeria, Zimbabwe, Bangladesh, Russia, Bolivia, Tanzania, Zambia, Nepal, Brazil, Uganda, South Africa, Peru

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's current support for health and population projects in India. [31756]

Clare Short: Health and population is a major priority for the Department for International Development (DFID) programme in India. In the current financial year we are spending about £20 million on projects to help improve the effectiveness of Indian health services; to control tuberculosis, HIV and malaria; to improve access to reproductive health care; and to eradicate polio. We are also supporting smaller scale projects through NGOs. In addition, we make a substantial contribution in this field through the European Union and multilateral agencies such as the World Bank.

Mixed Credits

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries applications for mixed credits are currently under consideration; if she will list the projects; and if she will make a statement. [31842]

Clare Short: I have said previously that I would expect to use mixed credits only in the poorest countries. A number of ATP projects, received before that scheme was closed, are currently under consideration. The countries concerned are Bangladesh, Philippines and Vietnam.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what applications for mixed credits for development projects have been approved by her Department since 1 May 1997. [31843]

Clare Short: Since 1 May I have approved two ATP projects which were under consideration in my Department at the time of the Election. They are: a project to supply Land Rovers to the Zimbabwe Police and a project to improve coal handling at the Port of Tianjin in China (though that project was subsequently ruled out under the OECD's tied aid eligibility criteria). There have been no new applications since 1 May.

Education Projects

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries her Department is supporting projects for the improved provision of primary and adult basic education. [31755]

Clare Short: We have supported projects for the improved provision of primary or adult basic education in all of the countries listed in Table 1. Similar projects have been supported in a number of countries in the larger list in Table 2, but those have been categorised as "education" and not at a more specific level such as primary or adult basic education.

Russia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is giving to research into the causes of mortality in Russia; and if she will make a statement. [31753]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) has funded a collaborative research project involving the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine and the Russian Federation Academy of Sciences Centre for Demography and Human Ecology. The project, which ran from June 1996 to October 1997, investigated the rapid increase in mortality in Russia between 1990 and 1994. Male life expectancy at birth fell in this period by 6.2 years to 57.6.

The project has provided useful findings regarding the influence of alcohol on mortality. There is emerging evidence that binge drinking in the Russian tradition has specific effects on the heart and may be causing the very large number of cardiovascular deaths among men of working age. A Lancet article, outlining the project's findings in August 1997, attracted considerable interest and comment and is to be summarised in the 1998 WHO World Health Report.

The results of the research project have been widely disseminated in Russia. A conference was organised in Moscow in the autumn of 1997, which involved senior health policy and decision makers from federal and regional bodies. The conference, which took note of the social and economic stress that people in Russia are under, identified alcohol as a key priority for Ministry of Health action.

Following on from this work, DFID has recently approved funding for a 2 year collaborative study to examine the determinants of mortality in the Former Soviet Union.

Peru

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid she has given to help with the effects of the floods in Peru; and if she will make a statement. [31889]

Clare Short: My Department has given £100,000 through the British Embassy in Lima for the purchase of relief items such as tents and blankets and £30,735 through the United Nations Office for Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs for repairs to houses. We are also funding a long-term programme, administered through the Intermediate Technology Development Group, which aims to strengthen the Peruvians' capacity to cope with the range of natural hazards faced by the country, including floods. We have recently agreed to support an additional training component of this programme, specifically addressing the effects of El Nino.

Mozambique

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the total official debt owed by Mozambique; and what was the amount spent by Mozambique on (a) debt service, (b) health and (c) education, in terms of (i) US dollars, (ii) US dollars per capita, (iii) percentage of GNP and (iv) percentage of government expenditure in each of the last three years. [31679]

Clare Short: We are able to obtain only the following details:

	Total official external debt (US$ million)	Total debt service as a percentage of GNP
1993	5,209	10
1994	5,651	11
1995	5,781	13

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the effect of the decision in the Government White Paper on International Development to help developing countries implement the WTO Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement on poor people in those countries. [31537]

Clare Short: Most developing countries are on track to implement their obligations under the Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPs) by the year 2000. Least Developed Countries (LDCs) are likely to request an extension of their implementation period beyond the agreed time frame up to 2006. The World Intellectual Property Organisation (WIPO) has primary responsibility for providing technical assistance to developing countries in the implementation of TRIPs, supported in some areas by WTO and UNCTAD. My officials are planning to visit WIPO, UNCTAD and WTO in April to discuss their programmes and to identify possible areas for collaboration. We will focus in particular on how TRIPs should be implemented and monitored with a view to maximising the beneficial impact on poor people.

Biodiversity

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if, at the Fourth Conference of the Parties of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the Government will encourage the Global Environment Facility's Implementing Agencies to integrate biodiversity into their mainstream operations and to report on this integration to the Fifth Conference. [31538]

Clare Short: The UK believes that the implementing agencies of the Global Environment Facility (GEF) could do more to integrate biodiversity and other global environmental issues into their mainstream operations. We have supported calls to this end made at past Conferences of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity. The UK, in co-ordination with other donors, will continue to push for better integration at the Fourth Conference of the Parties. Decisions on how to take the issue forward subsequently will be a matter for the Conference of the Parties itself.

The UK will also continue to press for better integration of biodiversity by the GEF's implementing agencies at the governing Council of the GEF and in the respective governing bodies of the agencies concerned. Detailed decisions on how best to integrate biodiversity into mainstream operations rest with the agencies' governing bodies.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Europe 2010 Dining Club

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the funding of the dining club Europe 2010 by the London office of the European Commission. [31265]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Commission Representation in London has funds which it can allocate to groups promoting debate on Europe. These moneys come from the budget for information and communication activities which is agreed by the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament each year. But the Commission does not routinely provide Member States with details of individual grants made.

Visa Applications

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by country the (a) number and (b) proportion of applications for visitors visas that were refused in each of the last five years. [31662]

Mr. Fatchett: The numbers and proportions of visitors visa refused, worldwide, for the last 5 years, are as follows:

Year	Number of refusals	Percentage of applications
1997[1]	57,612	6.1
1996	78,424	5.9
1995	72,626	6.5
1994	64,566	6.2
1993	60,183	6.5

[1] Based on returns from 98 per cent. of Posts.

Migration and Visa Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office keep statistics giving a breakdown, by each Entry Clearance Issuing Post, of the number and proportion of visas refused at each Post. I will arrange for these to be sent to my hon. Friend.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is planning to support the return of constitutional government to Sierra Leone. [31757]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 34–35.

We have consistently worked for the peaceful restoration of the democratically elected government of Sierra Leone. We have been in regular contact with the legitimate President, Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, with whom I last discussed the situation on 20 February. We and our EU partners have called for his immediate return to Sierra Leone. We are urgently discussing with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the United Nations the need for a broadly based Government under President Kabbah and for all parties to move to a process of disarmament and demobilisation.

HMS Cornwall arrived in Freetown on 1 March and is now providing technical assistance and support to humanitarian relief work in Sierra Leone.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds Osho Miatso was refused a UK visitors visa in 1985. [31726]

Mr. Fatchett: From the limited information given, it has not been possible to trace an entry clearance application made in 1985 under the name of Osho Miatso. Records of visit visas which are refused are in any case normally destroyed after 5 years.

Sudan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to improve human rights in Sudan with particular reference to slavery. [31780]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to put pressure on the Government of Sudan to respond to the concerns of the international community about human rights violations in Sudan, including the continuing and disturbing reported cases of abductions and slavery. We have urged the Government of Sudan to investigate those reports and encouraged them to take action against those responsible and to help in efforts to reunite families.

Schengen Agreement

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1997, Official Report, column 179, if he will list the Schengen documents he (a) has examined and (b) has requested to examine. [31275]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

We have received and examined the 1985 Schengen Agreement, the 1990 Schengen convention and the Accession Protocols. We have not yet received all Decisions and Declarations adopted by the Schengen Executive Committee and are seeking to obtain them.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31172]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 400, how many High Court judges had their applications for silk rejected at their (a) fourth and (b) more than fourth attempts. [31215]

Mr. Hoon: Of the 97 High Court Judges at present in post, none had their applications for silk rejected at their fourth and future attempts.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 400, concerning the number of unsuccessful applications for silk made by an individual before taking silk; what assessment he has made of the (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages of placing a limit on the number of applications which can be made. [31082]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor considers that the balance of advantage is against placing a limit on the number of applications which can be made for silk. Practitioners should be able to retain the right to apply for silk as often as they wish.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average number of applications for silk before an appointment is made. [31092]

Mr. Hoon: The average number of applications for silk made by those who were successful in the 1997 silk round was 2.57.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 300, regarding consultations on the suitability of applicants for silk, if he will list those consultees who are not members of the judiciary. [31184]

Mr. Hoon: I have listed those consultees who are not members of the judiciary.

Court Rules and Procedures

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 139, concerning changes in court rules and procedures consequent to the draft European convention concerning harmonisation of court proceedings and documentation, when he expects to finalise his plans for implementation; by what means he plans to publish them; and to whom he plans to circulate them. [31054]

Mr. Hoon: Each Member State is presently preparing the directories, glossaries and handbook which will be needed by other Member States to operate the new system. Once these are available we shall finalise our plans for implementation, and a Consultation Paper containing details of our proposals will then be published.

That paper will be circulated to those already consulted and be generally available to anyone with an interest in the proposals.

Legal Aid

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the Legal Aid Board's forecasts for net Legal Aid Fund expenditure over the next three years. [31276]

Mr. Hoon: Expenditure on the Legal Aid Fund[1] in 1998/99 is expected to be around £1,200m. It is not possible to give figures for 1999/2000 and beyond since expenditure will depend on the outcome of the Government's overall Comprehensive Spending Reviews.

[1] Excludes legal aid in the higher criminal courts which is administered by the courts.

Small Claims

Kali Mountford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of claims awarded by small claims courts were successfully collected in each of the last three years. [31041]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Community Legal Service

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much expenditure the Government propose for the proposed community legal service over the next three years, in addition to existing funding for law and advice centres. [31244]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has announced that proposals for a Community Legal Service will be finalised by the beginning of next year, and will then be the subject of full public consultation. It is impossible to identify what expenditure the Community Legal Service will involve before proposals have been fully developed and decisions taken in the light of the response to consultation on these proposals.

Crown Courts

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases in 1997 which would normally be expected to be dealt with at Lewes Crown Court were (a) so dealt with, (b) transferred to Croydon Crown Court, (c) transferred to Chichester Crown Court and (d) otherwise transferred; and if he will make a statement. [31921]

Mr. Hoon: The number of cases dealt with during 1997, as requested, were (a) 1,137, (b) 89, (c) 16 and (d) 12 respectively. The cases transferred were made in order to improve the waiting times for cases in Sussex. When transferring such cases, the interests of all concerned are taken into account.

Magistrates

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates serve the areas of (a) Matlock, (b) Ashbourne and (c) Bakewell. [31862]

Mr. Hoon: The areas of Matlock, Ashbourne and Bakewell are all covered by the West Derbyshire Bench, which currently has a strength of 32 magistrates.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases in the last two years which would normally have been held at (a) Matlock, (b) Ashbourne and (c) Bakewell Magistrates' Courts have been transferred to other courts. [31861]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect statistics of this type.

The Justices' Chief Executive for the Derbyshire MCC has stated that the work arising in West Derbyshire is sufficient to justify courts sitting on two days only, Thursday and Friday. Thus from Monday to Wednesday cases must be heard elsewhere, and cases involving prisoners in custody can be heard only in Bakewell, on Friday.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been tried at (a) Matlock, (b) Ashbourne and (c) Bakewell Magistrates' Courts in each of the last five years. [31863]

Mr. Hoon: The adult, criminal case load for the West Derbyshire Division, which comprises Matlock, Ashbourne and Bakewell, for the years 1993 to 1997, was 1,529; 1,782; 1,555; 1,676 and 1,780 respectively. It is not possible to break this down to the individual courthouses within the Division. It is not possible to obtain figures for the other types of case, namely youth, criminal, family and other civil work. The Justices' Chief Executive for the Derbyshire MCC will write to the hon. Member directly with the information.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the county towns that (a) have and (b) lack magistrates courts. [31860]

Mr. Hoon: The Department does not hold a list of county towns to enable a complete answer to be provided to this question. A table, which has been placed in the Library, shows the location of courthouses within English shire county areas as at April 1997.

Legal Services Ombudsman

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representation he has received on the proposed move of the Office of the Legal Services Ombudsman from Manchester to Leamington; and if he will make a statement. [32106]

Mr. Hoon: I have received no representations. There are no plans for the Office of the Legal Services Ombudsman to move from Manchester to Leamington Spa.

SCOTLAND

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii)1997–98 to date. [27767]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The cost of fraud and theft to The Scottish Office was £24,644 in 1995–96, £30,935 in 1996–97 and £41,054 in 1997–98 to date, of which £14,573, £8,745 and £19,196 respectively related to Scottish Office agencies. Figures for non-departmental public bodies are not held centrally.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of the judiciary and other consultees who were asked for an opinion on the suitability of applicants for silk, declined to express an opinion in the last year for which figures are available. [30385]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 25 February 1998]: This information is not available.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by whom candidates for silk are interviewed. [31046]

Mr. McLeish: This information is not available.

Funicular Railway, Cairngorm

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions, or correspondence, he has had with Aberdeenshire and Moray Councils with regard to the proposed funicular railway on Cairngorm; and what views the councils expressed to him. [31235]

Mr. MacDonald: My right hon. Friend received a letter from Aberdeenshire Council on 25 November 1997 advising him that a motion had been passed expressing the Council's disappointment at the decisions not to review the planning consent and to award tax payers' money for the development. There has been no correspondence from Moray Council.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice the Cairngorms Partnership Board gave him with regard to their consideration of the planning application for the proposed funicular railway on Cairngorm. [31236]

Mr. MacDonald: The Cairngorms Partnership Board advised my right hon. Friend that if central Government saw fit to become involved in the planning process, they would support that decision.

Driving (Drugs)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of people driving under the influence of drugs have been reported in Scotland, by police force, in each of the last 10 years. [31706]

Mr. McLeish: The information is not separately identifiable in the statistics collected centrally.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 179, if he will make a further statement in respect of the Skye Bridge, with special reference to (a) the Bank of America at present holding title to the shares, (b) the subsequent ownership of Skye Bridge Ltd and (c) the effective control of the company. [31929]

Mr. Dewar: The answer of 27 January, to which the hon. Member refers, was a comprehensive and accurate explanation of the arrangements between Skye Bridge Ltd. and the Bank of America. I have nothing further to add.

TREASURY

Computer Systems

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each major new computer system that (a) his Department, (b) non-departmental bodies and (c) agencies under his responsibility have purchased in the last five years; what was the initial purchase cost and what was the final cost; what was each system's (i) planned and (ii) actual date of commissioning; what major computer systems will be purchased by bodies in categories (a), (b) and (c) in the next financial year; and what is their estimated cost. [27850]

Mrs. Liddell: The information is given in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library. For most of the departments and agencies covered, the costs shown are the costs of the contracts placed for the systems concerned, using estimates for any variable elements. Costs which are spread over several years have been aggregated. The costs cover externally-provided hardware, software and implementation costs and may, in addition, cover other costs such as training where this was purchased as part of the initial contract. The costs of in-house project development are not included. Support and on-going maintenance costs are excluded. For the Inland Revenue, special factors have required the use of different conventions, most notably the inclusion of in-house development costs. Such differences have been footnoted.

A major computer system has been taken to be one whose costs, on the basis described above, exceed £1 million. On this definition, the Royal Mint, the Registry of Friendly Societies, the National Investment Loans Office and the Debt Management Office (which will be formally established on 1 April 1998) have not purchased any major computer systems and do not expect to do so in 1998–99.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact of the proposed multilateral agreement on investment on levels of investment and growth rates in the UK and the EU; and if he will make a statement. [30546]

Mrs. Liddell: The UK is a major source and recipient of international investment. A successful Agreement will provide investors with extra confidence in making investment decisions. This will help to promote investment flows between countries, thus contributing to sustained economic growth. Foreign investors in the United Kingdom already benefit from an open and welcoming environment. Our European Union partners also maintain few restrictions on foreign investment. The main benefits for UK investors are therefore expected to arise in markets outside Europe.

Credit Control

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review methods of controlling and managing credit by means other than interest rates. [31030]

Mrs. Liddell: The Bank of England's official repo rate is the best instrument for controlling credit for the purposes of meeting the Government's inflation target. The Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) considered alternative monetary policy instruments in August 1997 (as shown in the published MPC minutes), and rejected their use.

Credit Controls

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the measures available to him to manage or control credit and to regulate its expansion. [31347]

Mrs. Liddell: The Bank of England's official repo rate is the principal means of managing the expansion of credit. Other measures include: reserve requirements, direct quantitative controls, and certain fiscal measures.

Barn Conversions (VAT)

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when barn conversions were first zero-rated for VAT. [30973]

Dawn Primarolo: The first time sale of barns converted into dwellings has been zero-rated since 21 July 1994.

Euro

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the production cost of substituting euros for sterling; and what estimate he has made of the costs for business of altering machinery to accept euros. [31526]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The costs of changeover to the euro will depend on the speed and manner of the transition to the euro and on the degree of pre-planning. The Chancellor has set up a Standing Committee to consider how the UK would approach the transition to the euro if and when the UK joins, and he is receiving advice from business sources through a Business Advisory Group looking at the practical implications of economic and monetary union.

These costs can be minimised by careful preparation and sharing of information between Government and business.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices and official residence; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31560]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 27 February 1998, Official Report, column 388.

Lloyd's

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to initiate a review into the regulatory arrangements at Lloyd's of London in accordance with the terms of the recommendations of the Fourth Report of the Treasury Committee of Session 1995–96 (HC 224). [31902]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 February 1998]: On 21 January 1998, Official Report, columns 532–33, I announced proposals for the Financial Services Authority (FSA) to take statutory responsibility for the regulation of Lloyd's as part of the Government's wider reforms of financial services regulation. Our proposals would provide the FSA with extensive supervisory powers and powers of intervention in relation to Lloyd's. I do not therefore intend to initiate a review of the kind recommended by the Committee.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Ms Lawrence), of 21 January 1998, Official Report, columns 532–33, on Lloyd's, if he will list the powers in the Insurance Companies Act 1982 which he will use to extend the supervision of the FSA to Lloyd's; and whether (i) these powers and (ii) the proposed reserve power to directly authorise or supervise Lloyd's members will require changes to the Lloyd's Act 1982. [31570]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government propose to introduce new legislation which will give new powers to the Financial Services Authority for the effective regulation of financial services providers, including banks, building societies, investment businesses and insurers. Powers under the existing financial services legislation, including the Insurance Companies Act 1982, would then be repealed. It is not envisaged that the regulatory arrangements which I have proposed for Lloyd's would require amendment to the Lloyd's Acts 1871–1982.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to repeal the prohibition under the Financial Services Act 1986 on an individual, who is not an authorised person and is not in the business of giving investment advice, from publicly expressing a view on the likely impact of full membership of EMU on the value of UK index-linked Government stock. [31731]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 February 1998]: There is no such provision in the Financial Services Act 1986.

Abortions

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of (a) women from Northern Ireland who obtained legal abortion in England and Wales in 1996, (b) women from the Irish Republic who obtained legal abortion in England and Wales in 1996 and (c) women resident in England and Wales who obtained legal abortion in 1996 underwent the procedure in (i) the first nine weeks of pregnancy and (ii) the first 12 weeks of pregnancy. [31491]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 2 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on abortions in the first nine weeks of pregnancy and the first 12 weeks of pregnancy.

The information requested is shown in the table.

	Under 9 weeks	Under 12 weeks
Northern Ireland	31	73
Irish Republic	37	73

Asbestosis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the numbers of deaths resulting from asbestosis in the last 10 years; and what is his estimate of the probable totals in the next five years. [31779]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given below.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 2 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question requesting the numbers of deaths from asbestosis in the last 10 years, and the probable totals during the next five years.

2. Data for the years 1987—1992 are by year of registration, data since 1993 are by year of occurrence.

Projected deaths from asbestosis are not available.

NUTS Review

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will propose that Staffordshire be classified as a single NUTS II area; and if he will make a statement. [31321]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Joan Walley, dated 2 March 1998.

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions on proposing Staffordshire as a single NUTS-2 area and on the Government's position in the NUTS review currently underway and the timetable for the review.

After wide consultation throughout the UK, the Government Statistical Service submitted proposals for a revised NUTS structure to Eurostat, the Statistical Office of the European Union, in July 1997. A copy of the proposals was deposited in the House of Commons library. Those proposals included the classification of Staffordshire as a single NUTS-2 area.

During negotiations, Eurostat have stressed that in their view the UK proposals contained too many NUTS-2 areas and that changes from the current structure were unjustified. Discussions are still continuing and an announcement will be made as soon as an agreement is reached.

The original intention was to reach agreement by December 1997 but this has not been possible due to the prolonged negotiations. It is hoped that an agreement will be reached as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she was consulted by the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about the United Kingdom response to the European Commission Consultation Document on Dietary Supplements; and if she will make it her policy to promote the removal of barriers to trade in such supplements (a) within Europe and (b) globally. [26355]

Mrs. Roche: Responsibility for policy on dietary supplements sold under food law rests with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and the territorial Departments. As a matter of general policy, the Department seeks to ensure the removal of barriers to trade.

Defence Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors underlay the decision to grant Indonesia an ECGD guarantee for five years' credit on defence exports. [29158]

Mrs. Roche: ECGD's role is to encourage UK capital goods and project exports by providing insurance against the risks of not being paid by overseas customers. Whether or not individual arms consignments are allowed to go overseas is a matter for the DTI's Export Licensing Unit. Any exports which need an export licence, but do not have one, are not eligible for ECGD cover.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average sulphur dioxide content per tonne of coal burnt in power stations for the period 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997; what quantity of coal was burnt; and if he will estimate the amount of (a) deep mined and (b) opencast mined coal that would have been burned in this period if the target for sulphur dioxide emissions had been 1.2 per cent. [30496]

Mr. Battle: Coal use for electricity generation in the UK was 54.9 million tonnes in 1996 and 47.0 million tonnes in 1997. Power station emissions of sulphur dioxide in 1996 were 1,371,000 tonnes. 1997 figures for emissions are not yet available.

The sulphur content of coal used in power stations varies widely, from below 1 per cent. to more than 2 per cent. but figures for the average sulphur content are not available. Sulphur dioxide emissions depend on the use of flue gas desulphurisation equipment as well as on the sulphur content of the fuel used. A small proportion of the 1996 emissions was from oil fired power stations.

The Environment Agency has issued a Consultation Document setting out proposals for new sulphur dioxide targets, including a requirement for power stations not fitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment to burn coal with an average sulphur content not exceeding 1.2 per cent. from 1999. My Department is considering these proposals.

Insolvency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors governed those interests represented on the sponsored Insolvency Regulation Working Party. [31233]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Insolvency Regulation Working Party was established by the insolvency recognised professional bodies and The Insolvency Service and its members are representatives of them.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list (a) the number of complaints per annum received by each of the bodies responsible for regulating insolvency practitioners, (b) the nature of the complaints, (c) the average and the longest time taken to investigate the complaints and (d) the nature of the outcomes in each of the last five years. [31200]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The number of complaints about insolvency practitioners received by each of the bodies for the period in question are in the table.

	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	272	263	246	325	319
Insolvency Practitioners Association	166	161	160	115	120
Law Society	1	7	3	3	0
Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland	12	47	39	18	11
Association of Chartered Certified Accountants	5	23	38	41	30
Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland	4	2	0	2	9
The Law Society of Scotland	0	0	0	0	0
Secretary of State	72	84	81	36	45
Total	532	587	567	540	534

Information about the nature of the complaints, the average and longest time taken to investigate the complaints and the nature of the outcome is either not available or could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Regulatory action was taken by the professional bodies in appropriate cases but the majority of complaints, after investigation, revealed no evidence of misconduct.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) firms and (b) individuals are registered with each of the bodies responsible for authorising insolvency practitioners under the Insolvency Act 1986. [31234]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Only individuals may be authorised to act as insolvency practitioners. The numbers authorised by each of the bodies are as follows:

	Number
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	844
Insolvency Practitioners Association	308
Law Society	184
Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland	168
Association of Chartered Certified Accountants	127
Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland	73
The Law Society of Scotland	22
Secretary of State	125

These figures will be published in the next Insolvency Service Annual Report.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has for requiring those licensed under the Insolvency Act 1986 to publish information about their affairs. [31339]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: None at this stage. However, I will give careful consideration to any submissions that my hon. Friend may wish to make about this matter.

Accountants (Money Laundering)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what actions her Department has taken in respect of accountancy firms and their partners judged by the High Court case of AGIP (Africa) Limited v. Jackson and Co. to have facilitated money laundering. [31340]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We have kept under review all the investigations undertaken on this matter. Action against money laundering is not, however, the responsibility of this Department. The remarks made during the civil case were considered by the appropriate bodies—by the Serious Fraud Office and the Police (with regard to criminal prosecution), and by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of England and Wales (ICAEW) (with a view to possible disciplinary action). After investigation no basis for any action was found.

Newspapers (Market Share)

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will assess the advantages of introducing legislation to limit the maximum share of the newspaper market individual proprietors may control. [31102]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 24 February 1998]: The Government's Competition Bill sets out the legislation we believe is necessary to control abuses of market dominance. The newspaper industry will be subject to this, and to other provisions in competition law.

Motor Vehicle Warranties

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what monitoring she has undertaken of the effectiveness of non-insurance based warranties for motor vehicles; what assessment she has made of the safety implications of such warranties; and if she will make a statement; [31119]

(2) what is her policy on the sale of non-insurance based warranties; and if she will make a statement; [31120]

(3) what assessment she has made of the impact on consumers of an increase in the sale of non-insurance based warranties sold by the provider of the motor vehicle. [31116]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The Government's policy on the sale of non-insurance based motor vehicle warranties was set out by the Financial Secretary in her reply of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 389.

The supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 requires repairs undertaken under warranty to be carried out with reasonable care and skill. If either these implied terms or the specific conditions of the warranty are breached the consumer may look to the seller for redress.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the risks for car purchasers relying solely on non-insurance based motor vehicle warranties if (a) the vehicle seller goes out of business and (b) there is only limited financial backing behind a non-insurance based warranty scheme; [31118]

(2) if she will estimate the number of motor vehicle sellers who have gone out of business in 1997, indicating the number of purchasers who have lost non-insurance based warranties on their vehicles as a result of such business failures. [31117]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: [holding answer 25 February 1998]: During 1997, there were 132 company insolvencies in the motor vehicle retailing and filling station sector in England and Wales. In addition, there were 276 bankruptcies involving non-limited liability companies in this sector. Comparable figures for Scotland are not available.

No figures are available for the number of purchasers who have lost non-insurance based warranties on their vehicles as a result of these failures.

Motor vehicle suppliers offering non-insurance backed warranties are responsible for ensuring that they are properly financed so that they are able to fulfil their obligations to their customers. Consumers for their part need to weigh up the costs and benefits of competing products taking into account among other things the reputation and financial standing of the company offering the warranty.

Independent Committee for Supervision of Telephone Services

Mr. Grogan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to strengthen the powers of the Independent Committee for Supervision of Telephone Services to enforce its decisions on network operators. [31461]

Mrs. Roche: ICSTIS has a wide range of sanctions available to act against breaches of the ICSTIS Code of Practice and the ICSTIS system of regulation has the commitment and support from network operators. I am confident of the effectiveness of ICSTIS in regulating this market using its existing powers together with the continuing support of the industry.

First Bus (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 December 1998, Official Report, column 522, when she expects to announce her decision on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report relating to First Bus operations in Glasgow; and if she will make a statement. [31901]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, will announce her decision on First Bus's request for a review of the decision of the then Minister for Corporate and Consumer Affairs as quickly as is practicable.

Imutran

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates her Department has met representatives of Imutran; and what matters were discussed. [31685]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 February 1998]: DTI officials visited Imutran on 3 November 1995 and have met Imutran representatives on a number of other occasions during the last 3 years. These contacts were part of the Department's normal contact with companies in the biotechnology industry and other sectors to discuss issues affecting the competitiveness of UK industry.

Gas Deregulation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she intends to make any modifications in the announced timetable for gas deregulation. [31692]

Mr. Battle: The announced timetable for gas deregulation is a matter for the Director General of Gas Supply, acting within a statutory framework. That framework, established by the previous administration, is set down in the Gas (Extent of Domestic Supply Licences) Orders of 1996 and 1997. Ministers have no formal role in this process.

Employment Rights

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the implications of the recent industrial tribunal appeal decision in relation to employment rights for persons over the age of 65 years. [31693]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Industrial tribunal decisions do not set legal precedents and are not binding on other courts or tribunals. Most employment rights apply regardless of the employee's age, and the right to complain of unfair dismissal applies up to the normal retirement age of the job, where there is one, whether or not this is over 65.

Coal

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what stocks of coal are currently held at power stations; and how these compare with those held on the equivalent dates in 1996 and 1997. [31694]

Mr. Battle: Coal stocks held at power stations were as follows:

	Thousand tonnes
End of January 1998	11,686
End of January 1997	7,252
End of January 1996	8,717

Bank Holidays

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the number of bank holidays in (a) Wales and England, (b) Northern Ireland and (c) other EU countries. [31783]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In the United Kingdom, there are eight bank and public holidays in England, Wales and Scotland and ten in Northern Ireland.

The number of public holidays in other EU countries is set out in the table:

EU countries	Number of bank holidays
Netherlands	8
Eire	9
Italy and Luxembourg	10
Sweden, Greece, Finland and Denmark	11
Portugal and Austria	12
Spain	13
France and Belgium	14
Germany	15

Notes:
The extent to which these holidays are observed varies from country to country. There are also local or regional variations in some areas.

NUTS Review

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's position in respect of the NUTS review currently underway in the European Commission; and what is the timetable set for this review. [31320]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Joan Walley, dated 2 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions on proposing Staffordshire as a single NUTS-2 area and on the Government's position in the NUTS review currently underway and the timetable for the review.

The original intention was to reach agreement by December 1997 but this has not been possible due to the prolonged negotiations. It is hoped that an agreement will be reached as soon as possible.

WALES

Mental Health Unit, Bronllys

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to make a decision regarding the creation of a new mental health unit at Bronllys, Powys, through the Private Finance Initiative. [31035]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The development of hospital services in Bronllys is a matter for the Powys Healthcare NHS Trust and the Dyfed Powys Health Authority. They are currently working together to develop revised proposals to best meet the health needs of the area, and have put negotiations with the private sector on hold pending the outcome of the review.

Coastal Defences

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on coastal defences in Wales in 1997; and what are the estimated figures for 1998. [31369]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, the expenditure on capital schemes receiving grant assistance from the Welsh Office was £3.032 million during the financial year 1996–97 and is estimated to be just over £3 million again during the financial year 1997–98. These figures include expenditure on both coast protection and sea defence.

Housing

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) empty local authority homes, (b) empty private homes, (c) empty Government homes, (d) empty flats above shops, (e) vacant offices suitable for conversion into homes and (f) other non-residential premises suitable for conversion into homes there are in each region in Wales. [32225]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The number of vacant dwellings owned by local authorities is shown in the table, along with the available information on homes owned by the Welsh Office. The number of unoccupied homes owned privately is not collected centrally. Unoccupied homes owned by Government Departments other than the Welsh Office are not disaggregated for Wales. Statistics are not collected centrally on empty flats above shops, vacant offices suitable for conversion or other non-residential premises suitable for conversion.

[32226]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None of the funding the Welsh Office makes available for housing capital programmes is tied specifically to use on empty homes. Local authorities are encouraged to include in their programmes action for bringing empty and under-used housing accommodation into efficient use.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) of 19 February 1998, Official Report, column 804, for how long the term of appointment of the (a) Chairman and (b) Chief Executive of the enhanced Welsh Development Agency will run. [32243]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information is as follows:

(a) 30 June 1999;

(b) 17 August 2000.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discount rate will be applied to assessments of PFI elements in bids for the building of the Assembly for Wales. [32252]

Mr. Ron Davies: We will follow current Treasury advice, which uses a discount rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take into account in his assessment of the Grosvenor Waterside bid for the Assembly for Wales building the effect of that project on the value of nearby land owned by Associated British Ports. [32253]

Mr. Ron Davies: Yes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sex Offenders

17. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to ensure that children are protected from convicted sex offenders. [30355]

Mr. Straw: Under the Crime and Disorder Bill, the courts will have power to prohibit a sex offender from behaviour which gives reasonable cause for concern and to impose extended periods of supervision of sex offenders for up to 10 years following a period of imprisonment.

Crime Prevention

21. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the adequacy of his Department's funding in respect of crime prevention. [30359]

Mr. Michael: I am delighted by the positive response from the Police and from local authorities to our proposals for local action to cut crime. Responses to our consultation document did include comments on resource issues but there is general acceptance that there is not a big pot of new money, and palpable enthusiasm for our proposals which are set out in the Crime and Disorder Bill.

Avon and Somerset Police Authority

24. Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the resources made available to Avon and Somerset Police Authority. [30362]

Mr. Michael: Avon and Somerset Police Authority will have a total spending power of £167.4 million in 1998–99, an increase of £6.1 million or 3.8 per cent. over 1997–98. This is slightly higher than the national average increase of 3.7 per cent., and is a healthy rise at a time of public expenditure constraint.

Firearms (Compensation)

25. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much compensation for handguns he estimates will have been paid to gun owners in 1997–98. [30363]

Mr. Michael: Over £35 million has been paid out in compensation and this is likely to rise to between £40 million and £50 million by the end of the 1997–98 financial year.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of claims for firearms compensation under Options A and B had been met by 20 February. [32072]

Mr. Michael: Around two thirds of the claims received under Options A and B of the large calibre handgun surrender scheme, including the Option A and B elements of mixed claims also involving Option C, had been approved for payment by 20 February.

Members of Parliament (Offence of Bribery)

26. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make bribery of right hon. and hon. Members an offence. [30364]

Mr. Michael: When my right hon. Friend appeared before the Joint Select Committee on Parliamentary Privilege on 20 January, he emphasised that the Government are committed to tackling all forms of corruption including the bribery of hon. Members. My right hon. Friend expects to make a statement on the reform of the law in this area soon, taking account of the results of the consultation exercise which he launched in June last year and the recommendations of the forthcoming Law Commission report on Corruption Offences. He will also take account of the views of the Joint Committee on Parliamentary Privilege.

World Cup

27. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has taken to curtail hooliganism during the World cup. [30365]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has just hosted a European conference to focus international efforts to combat soccer violence. We are working closely with the French authorities who are responsible for the management and security of the World cup tournament to prevent crowd trouble involving Scotland and England fans during the World cup.

Young Offenders Teams

28. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the powers to be given to the proposed young offenders teams in helping to tackle youth crime. [30366]

Mr. Michael: The Crime and Disorder Bill places duties rather than powers on youth offending teams. Stopping young people offending usually involves challenging several aspects of their lives. That is why the youth offenders teams will co-ordinate the provision of youth justice services in their area in accordance with the local youth justice plan. Team members will supervise and enforce community penalties. Staff of the relevant local agencies will work together as an integrated team to challenge young people's offending behaviour.

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

29. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to increase the availability of local secure accommodation for juveniles charged with several offences. [30367]

Mr. Michael: A new duty on local authorities to provide bail support for juveniles awaiting trial or sentence, together with measures to speed up the youth justice process, should help to reduce the pressures on existing secure accommodation. The Government's review of all forms of juvenile secure accommodation, which will be completed shortly, will inform decisions about the best use of that accommodation and whether there should be any further expansion in local authority secure accommodation, which is expected to reach 460 places by the end of 1998.

Children (Pornography)

30. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy for ensuring children are protected from exposure to pornographic material. [30368]

Mr. Michael: It is the Government's policy to protect children from exposure to pornographic material by the use of the existing law in respect of films, videos, publications, broadcast programmes and electronic transmissions between computers as well as indecent photographs or pseudo photographs.

We also encourage other non-statutory schemes which are designed to protect young people from unsuitable material such as the working group of representatives from the Internet Watch Foundation and Internet Service Providers which is devising a common ratings system for United Kingdom internet Users, the voluntary Code of Practice which requires newsagents to refuse to sell 'adult' magazines to persons under the age of 18, and the Teenage Magazine Arbitration Panel (TMAP) which seeks to regulate the contents of teenage magazines.

Disorder and Anti-social Behaviour

31. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to tackle disorder and anti-social behaviour. [30369]

Mr. Michael: The Crime and Disorder Bill contains a number of new powers. Chief of these are: statutory local crime prevention partnerships led jointly by local authorities and the police; Anti-social Behaviour Orders which local authorities and the police will be able to seek from a court to restrict the behaviour of those who engage in such conduct; welfare-based Child Safety Orders to protect children under 10 from developing offending behaviour; and local child curfews to protect both young children and their local communities.

Young Offenders

32. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ensure that support and guidance is given to parents of young offenders. [30372]

Mr. Michael: As part of our radical reform of the youth justice system, we will introduce a new Parenting Order which will encourage parents to accept their responsibilities for the behaviour of their children. It will allow the court to direct that parents exercise control over their children and also allow the court to require parents to receive training and guidance.

Terrorist Organisations

33. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the criteria for proscribing terrorist organisations. [30373]

Mr. Straw: Section 1 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 provides that the Secretary of State may proscribe any organisation that appears to him to be concerned in, or in promoting or encouraging, terrorism occurring in the United Kingdom and connected with the affairs of Northern Ireland.

Alcohol (Young People)

34. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning links between under-age drinking and violent, loutish behaviour in town centres. [30374]

Mr. Michael: The public, police officers and local councillors have all indicated that alcohol-related crime and disorder including that involving underage drinkers, is a significant problem. We have implemented the Confiscation of Alcohol (Young Persons) Act 1997 and will be legislating to clarify the law relating to adults buying alcohol for children and the use of children in test purchases. The Anti-Social Behaviour Order and other provisions in the Crime and Disorder Bill will also help with specific local problems.

Restorative Justice

35. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ensure that lessons learnt by the pioneers of restorative justice are included in future programmes. [30376]

Mr. Michael: The Government are monitoring developments in restorative justice in this country and our proposals for the reform of the youth court, set out in the White Paper "No More Excuses", are consistent with the principles of restorative justice and include the introduction of a Reparation Order.

Schengen Agreement

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the prevention of delinquency in Article 18 of the Agreement Between the Governments of the States of the Benelux Economic Union, the Federal Republic of Germany and the French Republic on the Gradual Abolition of Controls at the Common Frontiers [Dep 5505 (3s)]; what complementary measures are understood in Article 17 concerning (a) security and (b) illegal immigration; and what manner of cooperation with Schengen countries his Department is preparing in these areas. [31222]

Ms Quin: The 1985 Schengen Agreement is implemented by the 1990 Schengen Convention which makes provision for co-operation in preventing and detecting criminal offences, in combating illegal immigration and other measures to ensure security.

The United Kingdom is not a member of Schengen. However, the United Kingdom does participate in inter-governmental co-operation in the Third Pillar on both policing, immigration and asylum policy and other Justice and Home Affairs matters.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's participation during its presidency in the Joint Supervisory Authority of Schengen. [31223]

Ms Quin: The United Kingdom is not a member of Schengen, and therefore does not participate in the Joint Supervisory Authority.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on negotiations between Ireland and the United Kingdom on the Schengen Area. [31285]

Ms Quin: There are no such negotiations taking place between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31173]

Mr. Straw: As described in the Home Office Annual Report (CM 3608), the work of the Home Office covers a very wide range of activity. It is part of the normal duties of officials to attend and contribute to conferences in the United Kingdom and overseas, including events organised by the voluntary sector, on behalf of the Department. Detailed figures are not collected centrally.

Laboratory of the Government Chemist

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts and with what value the Government have placed with the Laboratory of the Government Chemist in each year since 1992. [31047]

Mr. Straw: 554 contracts with a total value of £2,534,976 have been placed by the Home Office and its agencies with the Laboratory of the Government Chemist since 1992, as follows:

Calendar year	Number of contracts	Total value £
1992	58	5,295
1993	78	4,796
1994	120	5,080
1995	116	5,759
1996	92	1,507,939
1997	90	1,006,107

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31287]

Mr. Straw: My Ministerial colleagues and I have had about 160 official meetings with hon. Members since 1 May 1997. We do not keep records of requests for meetings but are happy to consider such requests from all hon. Members and as a general rule these are granted.

In addition, I and my Ministerial colleagues and I make a point of being available around the House for informal meetings with hon. Members of all parties, as very often these can ensure a quicker and more effective response than a more formal meeting.

Prisoners (Sexually Explicit Material)

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress with his Department's review of the practice of circulating around prisons prisoners' sexual histories, witness statements and other sexually explicit material. [30984]

Ms Quin: The Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 provides a regime for supervised access by defendants to a sensitive victim statements, photographs and medical reports disclosed during criminal proceedings for sexual offences. Work is currently in hand to ensure that this legislation is implemented as soon as practicable. Governors may already take action against the circulation around prisons of material covered by the Act, and other sexually explicit material.

Domestic Violence

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives have been taken by the police during the last year in respect of training relating to domestic violence. [30983]

Mr. Michael: The probationer foundation course and post foundation training have both been revised during the last year to include material which reflects the implementation on 1 October 1997 of Part 4 of the Family Law Act 1996, including the civil remedies available for domestic violence and occupation of the home. Post probationer training also now includes inputs on the enforcement of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997, with information about civil redress and the use of domestic violence units.

A course aimed at improving the quality of service given by the police to women who are victims of domestic violence is provided at the Police Staff College, Bramshill, for officers ranging from senior detectives who direct force crime strategies to more junior ranks who have daily dealings with victims and perpetrators of domestic violence.

More specific training on the handling of domestic violence takes place within forces and many forces have undertaken their own initiatives to reflect local needs. The guidance given to police forces emphasises:

the overriding duty to protect victims and children from further attack; the need to treat domestic violence as seriously as other forms of violence;

the use and value of powers of arrest;

the dangers of seeking reconciliation between assailant and victim; and the importance of record keeping to monitor the policy in practice.

All police forces now have policy statements on domestic violence. In many forces, Domestic Violence Units have been set up or Domestic Violence Officers appointed, with special responsibility for following through incidents of domestic violence, particularly in giving support and advice to victims and helping them get in touch with relevant outside agencies. Practice and procedures in this area are examined within forces by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary. Current research into police practice in the area of domestic violence includes an evaluation by the Home Office of a repeat victimization policing response to domestic violence in West Yorkshire and newly-commissioned research into the connections between Domestic Violence Units and Child Protection Units in police forces. Reports are currently being drafted on inter-agency initiatives in Islington and Leeds.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners who died while in custody in each year from 1992 to 1997 were (a) suffering from psychiatric illness and (b) the victims of murder or manslaughter. [31606]

Ms Quin: The numbers of unsentenced prisoners who were the victims of homicide in each year from 1992 to 1997 are shown in the table.

As information regarding the numbers of unsentenced prisoners suffering from psychiatric illness who died between 1992 and 1997 will take some time to collate, I will write to the hon. Member on that point.

Homicide of unsentenced prisoners: 1992–97

Prisoners (Violent Offences)

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for murder, manslaughter and offences against the person in each year from 1992 to 1997 arose from offences committed by prisoners on remand or serving a sentence. [31605]

Ms Quin: The requested information is not available as statistics for convictions do not include the place of the offences. The available information held centrally on acts of violence committed by prisoners relates to proven disciplinary charges for violent offences against Prison Rules, referral to the police by prisons of alleged violent acts, and the number of homicides between prisoners. For the period from 1992 to 1997, this information is as follows:

Year	Proven disciplinary charges for violence	Proven disciplinary charges for violence per 100 prisoners	Referrals to the police for violent acts	Referrals per 100 prisoners	Homicides between prisoners
1992	10,388	22.7	482	1.05	2
1993	11,739	26.3	581	1.30	3
1994	12,637	25.9	551	1.13	3
1995	12,346	24.2	536	1.05	2
1996	12,953	23.4	515	0.93	2
1997[1]	13,922	23.0	549	0.91	1

[1] Provisional figures.

It is not known how many of the referrals to the police led to cautions, prosecutions or convictions.

Driving (Drugs)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of people driving under the influence of drugs have been reported in Wales, by police force, in each of the last 10 years. [31346]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not separately identifiable in the statistics collected centrally.

Iraq

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take in the event of military action being taken against Iraq to prevent (a) agents of the Iraqi Government entering the United Kingdom and (b) chemical or biological warfare substances being imported illegally into the United Kingdom. [30842]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 26 February 1998]: All Iraqi nationals who wish to travel to the United Kingdom for any purpose are required to obtain a visa. It is my normal practice personally to direct the exclusion on national security grounds of any individual wishing to travel to the United Kingdom who is suspected of links with a hostile intelligence service.

Responsibility for the control of chemical and biological materials is shared among a range of other Government Departments. Existing controls on the importation, possession and acquisition of these materials are already stringently applied.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Iraqi nationals are resident in the United Kingdom; what plans his Department has regarding their treatment in the event of hostilities between Britain and Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [31488]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The 1997 Labour Force survey estimated that the number of Iraqi nationals resident in the United Kingdom stood at 10,000.

Any questions about the immigration status of individual Iraqi nationals continue to be considered on a case-by-case basis.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31561]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Casual Employees (Retirement)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department's policy is for the retirement age of staff contracted on the basis of casual employment; when the current policy was introduced; and what were the reasons for introducing the current policy. [31600]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The normal retirement age in the Home Office for all staff in non-industrial grades, including those employed on a casual basis, is 60 years. Retention after the age of 60 will be granted only exceptionally at the discretion of the Head of Department, or Chief Executive in the case of Home Office Agencies. The current policy for age retirement was announced in 1993 and introduced with effect from 1 April 1995. Staff in industrial grades, including those employed on a casual basis, may be retained beyond the age of 60, subject to their continued efficiency and good health, up to a maximum of 65 years of age.

The current policy was introduced to give the Department greater flexibility to tackle organisational and personnel uncertainties and to avoid the need for compulsory redundancies for staff below the minimum retirement age.

Police Disciplinary Procedures

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about changing police disciplinary procedures. [30344]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is a need for change in the police disciplinary system. The Government are currently preparing their response to the recent Home Affairs Committee report on police complaints and discipline. We intend to continue discussions with the police staff associations and others in taking forward the necessary changes.

European Parliament

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the expected size of the electoral regions which are to be used in the European Parliament elections of 1999. [30371]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 607.

Detention Centres (Inspections)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department received (a) in draft form and (b) otherwise, the report of HM Inspector of Prisons on (i) Tinsley House and (ii) Campsfield House detention centre; and when those reports were examined by Home Office Ministers. [32041]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The report from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on Tinsley House was first received by the Home Office in draft form in mid November 1997, and that on Campsfield House was received in draft form at the end of November 1997. Final versions are expected shortly and will then be considered by Ministers.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long after the inspection of the detention facilities at HMP Rochester by the HM Inspector of Prisons the report was published. [32037]

Ms Quin: The Chief Inspector last inspected the immigration detention facilities at Her Majesty's Prison Rochester as part of his full inspection of the prison between 30 October and 3 November 1995. The report of the inspection was published on 10 May 1996.

Public Marches

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the Metropolitan Police estimates of (a) the policing costs, (b) the number of marchers and (c) the number of arrests relating to the public marches in London of the National Union of Students on 26 November 1997, the Animal Rights Movement on 19 July 1997, the Gay Pride March on 5 July 1997 and the Anti Poll Tax March on 31 March 1990; and what were the estimated policing costs per estimated marcher for each of the above. [32244]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has provided in tabular form the information requested. These are approximate basic policing costs at 1997 prices, and do not include any overtime which may have been incurred.

While the information is given in the form requested, direct comparisons can be misleading.

The costs in each case are based mainly on the organiser's estimate of numbers, on details such as routes and other arrangements during the event and on police intelligence as to the level of risk to the public from the actions of participants or others during the event.

	(a) Estimated total cost (£)	(b) Estimated number of demonstrators	Estimated cost per demonstrator (£)	(c) Arrests
National Union students march 26 November 1997	56,970	4,500	12.66	0

Private Prisons (Suicide and Self-Injury)

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to prevent self-inflicted deaths in prisons, with particular reference to private prisons. [32104]

Ms Quin: The Government are committed to doing everything possible to reduce the number of suicides in all prisons.

The Prison Service has a well developed and well respected strategy for caring for prisoners who are at risk of suicide or self-injury. This applies equally to contractually managed prisons as well as directly managed prisons. The suicide awareness strategy involves the identification and support of those prisoners who are considered to be at risk. Every prison has a multi-disciplinary suicide awareness team which meets regularly and oversees the implementation of the strategy in their establishment. The suicide awareness strategy in all establishments is audited by the Prison Service standards audit team and the Inspectorate of Prisons consider the strategy in their inspections of establishments.

Staff in establishments work closely with the Samaritans, who befriend prisoners in distress through visits to prisons and by telephone. The Samaritans are also actively involved in setting up listener/befriender schemes in prisons where selected prisoners are trained to provide peer group support for fellow prisoners in distress. Listener schemes provide a valuable contribution in reducing the likelihood of suicide and self-injury. The Samaritans' involvement in contractually managed prisons varies from full involvement in the listener scheme to visiting prisoners in distress.

The Suicide Awareness Support Unit (SASU), in Prison Service headquarters, examines each death in prison custody to see whether lessons can be learned. They also provide advice and support to establishments, particularly those which are experiencing a cluster of deaths.

I recently convened a meeting with a range of representatives from interest groups concerned about suicides in prisons. The meeting provided a useful forum for the exchange of ideas on how to develop further strategies for reducing suicides in prisons, and this work will be taken forward.

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons has been asked to carry out a thematic review of suicides in prison custody. This will cover all prisons.

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to publish investigations into self-inflicted deaths in private prisons; [32103]

(2) if he will announce in each case the name of the person responsible for carrying out the investigations into self-inflicted deaths in private prisons. [32105]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service is currently reviewing its internal investigation procedures, including those concerning deaths in prison custody, with a view to their improvement and standardisation. Policy on disclosure of investigation reports, and the level at which investigations will be carried out, including naming of investigators, is being examined as part of this review. Any policy or procedural changes which are implemented will apply to public and contracted out establishments, but will not be applied retrospectively.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Luxembourg Summit

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the United Kingdom presidency has to follow up the conclusions of the Luxembourg Special Summit on Employment. [26434]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 10 February 1998]: Employment is at the top of our priorities for the UK presidency. It fits in well with the key elements of the Conclusions at the Luxembourg Special Summit on Employment which included agreement on the Employment Guidelines and a funding package to support employment initiatives. Our task is to convert the Conclusions into action.

The Employment Guidelines provide a more focused approach to tackling unemployment and form the basis of National Action Plans. As Presidency we are encouraging Member States to produce national action plans by mid-April, both to ensure that the Guidelines are given practical effect and so that there can be early discussion and analysis of their content. We intend that there should be a discussion of the Action Plans at the Cardiff European Council in June. We intend to produce and publish the UK Employment Action Plan considerably in advance of the deadline.

We also aim to make rapid progress in agreeing and implementing the employment related European Parliament financial package and welcome the opportunity to take forward work on demonstration projects, for which the European Parliament has provided 12 mecu in 1998. These projects will promote the exchange of experience and good practice to show which employment policies and initiatives work best.

In addition, we are developing employability as the overarching theme in the Social Affairs/Education arenas. The Joint Informal in March aims to develop a better understanding of the concept of employability and the issues that affect Member States in making a reality of the idea, as well as exchanging information and good practice.

European Funding

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the minimum sum required by the Commission of the European Community when making grants from its (a) Regional and (b) Social Fund for each unit of employment calculated to be created or saved as a qualification for making such grants for (i) the Community and (ii) the United Kingdom. [25121]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There is no minimum sum of units of employment which have to be created or saved for the European Commission to make grants from its Regional Development Fund or its European Social Fund to the Community or the United Kingdom.

The European Commission negotiates programme plans with each Member State showing targets for the volume of outcomes expected (e.g. jobs created or saved, number of people going into self-employment or further training or further and higher education). Progress towards targets is monitored and evaluated as appropriate. Funding within a programme may be redirected within a programme or to other programmes for a range of reasons—for example, where funds are underspent or where objectives have changed for economic reasons.

Although past programme or project performance may have a bearing on the likelihood of future funding from Europe, there is no "minimum requirement" in terms of jobs.

Lipreading

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what professional qualifications are recognised for teachers of lipreading. [29170]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Certificate for Teachers of Lip Reading is accredited by the Royal Society of Arts Examinations Board.

New Deal

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of young people within the Gateway period for the New Deal have criminal records. [29296]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Each New Deal programme is designed to offer help to all those who become eligible. The claimant unemployment statistics do not provide information on previous criminal records.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of (a) young unemployed and (b) long-term unemployed participants in the New Deal are expected to lack basic literacy and numeracy skills. [30487]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Adult Literacy in Britain Survey, published last year, suggested that around a third of unemployed people have serious difficulty with literacy and numeracy. The claimant unemployment statistics do not provide information on the literacy or numeracy skills of claimants. All participants on the New Deal for 18–24 year olds will have access to help to enhance basic skills if they need it. The New deal for long term unemployed people aged 25 or over will focus on helping people who have been unemployed for two years or more to find work. The programme also contains provision for people to enhance their skills to help their return to work, which may include help with basic skills.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much expenditure on the New Deal for (a) young and (b) long-term unemployed people in 1998–99 is expected to be directed to raising basic literacy and numeracy skills; and how many participants are expected to benefit from such assistance, at what average cost per participant. [30488]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Help to raise basic skills will be available to young people on the New Deal for 18–24 year olds during the Gateway and in each of the options, according to individual circumstances and needs. Help to enhance basic skills will be available to every New Deal participant who needs it, as we intend to tailor provision to meet individual needs. We do not have numerical targets for the numbers who will benefit from basic skills related provision.

The New Deal for long term unemployed people aged 25 or over will focus on helping people who have been unemployed for two years or more to find work. The programme also contains provision for people to enhance their skills to help their return to work. This may include help with basic skills.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if (a) jobmatch and (b) jobfinders grant will continue within the framework of New Deal. [30492]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Since April 1997, the jobmatch programme has been available to 18–24 year olds who have been unemployed for two years or more. Within the New Deal for 18–24 year olds, jobmatch will be available during the Gateway to help young people who have been unemployed for one year or more move into the employment option. In addition, local New Deal partnerships will be able, if they choose to provide jobmatch opportunities through the New Deal follow-through strategies for young people who, having completed New Deal options, continue to need additional help to find work.

Jobfinder's grants will continue to be available to those aged 25 and over who have been unemployed for two years or more. Each local New Deal partnership has the discretion to provide grants to very long-term unemployed people aged 18–24.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what opportunities will be available for young unemployed people to take up work in the voluntary sector as part of the New Deal. [30370]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Sawford) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 507. Young people are already being helped to take up work in the voluntary sector in the New Deal Pathfinder areas. Examples of work that participants are currently doing include working at a local Citizens Advice Bureau in Swansea; working in a local charity shop in Cornwall; working on a Prince's Trust Volunteers' project in Lambeth; and conservation work in Tayside with the Scottish Wildlife Trust. All are receiving training towards approved qualifications.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the cost to the Government of the New Deal advertisements (a) on television and (b) in other media. [31395]

Mr. Andrew Smith: From the start of the advertising in mid February until June, it is planned to spend: £5 million on TV advertising; £500,000 on national press advertising; £340,000 on local radio; and £100,000 on local press advertising in June.

Lone Parents

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many lone parents in Bury, North he estimates will participate in the New Deal (a) by 1 April and (b) in the course of 1998–99. [29924]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to predict exactly the number of lone parents who will participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents, since participation is voluntary. The service will however be available to all lone parents on Income Support from October 1998. In November 1995 there were around 3,000 lone parents on Income Support in Bury as a whole.

Hearing-impaired Children

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to allocate funds towards providing special support to improve literacy among deaf or hearing-impaired children; [29802]

(2) what additional resources he has allocated to ensure that the benefits of the Literacy Hour and the National Year of Reading are made available to deaf or hearing-impaired children. [29790]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local education authorities have been invited to involve all mainstream primary and special schools in their strategies for improving literacy. On 29 January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that £23 million would be made available to schools for the purchase of books. This will benefit children across the country including the deaf and hearing impaired. We have allocated a further £59 million from the Standards Fund in the 1998–99 financial year to support literacy in schools.

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the (a) standards and (b) enforcement of the environmental criteria for the New Deal Environmental Task Force; [29961]

(2) what steps are being taken to ensure that the Environmental Task Force option of the New Deal will offer participants work experience and training that will improve their employability. [29962]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Bids from organisations to provide work placements for 18–24 year olds on the Environment Task Force (ETF) option of the New Deal for young unemployed people are assessed against a national scoring system. The scoring system covers the quality of the proposed work placements, training and job-search activities for participants, as well as assessing projects against a set of environmental objectives developed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). Organisations which provide ETF placements must produce a quality plan which includes specific employability and environmental objectives and measurable outcomes, as well as details of the organisation's proposed method of assessing and measuring quality. The Employment Service will monitor these arrangements, with advice from DETR and Government Offices for the Regions, as part of their annual review of the performance of contractors. An element of the organisation's placement fee will also be related to employability and environmental outcomes.

Young Unemployed

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the impact of the New Deal for the young unemployed on the number of job club places available. [29772]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Graham Brady, dated 27 February 1998.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the impact of New Deal upon the number of Jobclub places available. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

In planning our programme provision for 1998/99 we have taken into account the general fall in unemployment as well as the need to avoid duplication of New Deal opportunities. Overall the number of Jobclub places is likely to be reduced by some 15% compared with a fall over the last year of 37% in the number of people unemployed for more than six months.

My District Managers are currently consulting with local partners to determine which types of provision will be most effective in meeting the needs of each locality.

I hope this is helpful.

Primary School Places (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has had with the London Borough of Wandsworth on the provision of primary school places in the Tooting constituency with particular reference to the Furzedown area. [30547]

Mr. Byers: There have been no discussions between the Department and the London Borough of Wandsworth about the provision of primary school places in the Tooting constituency.

Nursery School Entitlement

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the use of the cut-off date of 31 March for the calculation of the funding for nursery school entitlement on (a) children born in April and (b) the number of children in playgroups and nursery schools in the summer term; [30525]

(2) if he will review the date of 31 March as the cut-off date for funding of nursery school entitlement for the summer term. [30527]

Ms Estelle Morris: In 1997–98, all children are eligible for nursery education grant for the three terms before they reach compulsory school age. The dates used to distinguish when children came into scope for the grant were set at 1 September, 1 January and 1 April because many local education authorities already use similar dates for their own purposes. We have since consulted on the dates which should be used to define compulsory school age, and hence the end of the period of eligibility. Seventy-six per cent. of respondents thought that the proposed dates of 1 September, 1 January and 1 April were appropriate. These eligibility dates, which come into effect from September 1998, do not affect providers' ability to admit children earlier.

Single Parents

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what financial assistance is available for single parents in full-time education. [30517]

Mr. Alan Howarth: There is a range of provision available, depending on the age and circumstances of the single parent:

(i) child benefit is payable in respect of children up to the age of 16. Lone parents who have a child under the age of 16 are eligible to apply for Income Support;

(ii) all full-time students up to the age of 19 and full or part time students of all ages on means-tested benefits attending FEFC-funded colleges are eligible for course fee remission;

(iii) lone parents attending schools and colleges may also apply to their local education authorities and colleges for discretionary support.

Help from the Higher Education Access Funds is currently available to home full-time students whose access to HE might be inhibited by financial considerations or who, for whatever reason, including physical or other disabilities, face financial difficulties.

The funds are administered by the individual higher education institutions which make the decisions on a case by case basis. The amount available is £22 million in the current academic year.

In response to the recommendations of the Dearing Committee, next year the size of the funds will be doubled and eligibility extended to part-time students.

Standard Assessment Tests

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of schools scoring 100 per cent. in the latest SATs tests for 11 year olds were schools where 15 pupils or fewer took the tests. [31386]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The information requested is given in the table:

	English	Mathematics	Science
All schools with 100% achievement[1]	615	634	1,014
Schools with 100% achievement[1] and 15 or fewer pupils	447	477	723
Percentage of schools with 100% achievement[1] who have 15 or fewer pupils	73	75	71

[1] All pupils achieving level 4 or above in the 1997 Key Stage 2 National Curriculum assessment tests.

Employment Service (Documents)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from organisations in Coventry regarding the complexity of the (a) Helping You Back to Work leaflet and (b) Jobseeker's Agreement forms; and what plans he has to simplify those documents. [31493]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Peter Collis to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 27 February 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked Leigh Lewis the Chief Executive of the Employment Service, to write to you about what representations have been received from organisations in Coventry regarding the complexity of the "Helping you Back to Work leaflet and the Jobseeker's Agreement forms; and if there are any plans to simplify the documents. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis. I am replying in his absence.

I have checked extensively and have been unable to find any record of representations received on the leaflet or the form.

There are no plans at present to simplify the Jobseeker's Agreement or Helping You Back to Work leaflet. However, we do have a programme which ensures that all leaflets and forms are reviewed every six months before we order reprints. Mr. Lewis would welcome any proposals which we could consider as part of this regular review process.

I hope this is helpful.

Student Loans

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reform the procedures relating to the repayment of student loans. [31492]

Dr. Howells: The Government have accepted the Dearing Committee's recommendation that student loan repayments should be made on an income-contingent basis and collected, where possible, through the tax system. New arrangements are being introduced for students entering higher education in Autumn 1998 and after. Students with loans under the current scheme will continue to repay them on the existing basis.

Detailed information about the new arrangements is set out in the "Progress Report on New Student Support Arrangements in Higher Education from 1998/99" copies of which are in the Library.

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons the proposed White Paper on Lifelong Learning has been modified to Green Paper status. [31691]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State always intended to consult widely on our proposals for lifelong learning. As he planned to issue formal responses to the reports from the Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education and the Further Education Funding Council's Widening Participation Committee, my right hon. Friend decided to publish the Government's lifelong learning proposals in the form of a Green Paper.

Utilities

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in the utilities which depend on current investment by those companies; and of these how many are (a) temporary and (b) permanent. [30615]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 24 February 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

Figures published by the Office for National Statistics in the monthly publication "Labour Market Trends" show that for the utilities sectors the number of employees in employment in Great Britain for September 1997 were as follows:

	Standard industrial classification 1992	Thousands of employees in employment, September 1997
Electricity, gas, steam and hot water supply	40	98.7
Collection, purification and distribution of water	41	41.1
Telecommunications	64.20	212.7
Total		352.5

No information is available on whether these jobs are temporary or permanent, or how they will be affected by utilities' investment plans.

HEALTH

London Hospitals

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of the (a) capital and (b) revenue costs of (i) keeping Bart's Hospital open, as proposed by the Turnberg Committee and (ii) concentrating all services on the Royal London site in a new hospital; [30995]

(2) what assessment he has made of the estimate made by the Royal Hospitals NHS Trust of the additional annual cost of keeping Bart's Hospital open as a cancer and cardiac centre compared with concentrating all services in a new hospital on the Royal London site; and if he will compensate the trust or health authority for those additional costs. [30993]

Mr. Milburn: It is not expected that the gross capital costs will be radically different from the previous plans, although the proceeds from the sale of the Smithfield site will no longer be available. The detailed capital and revenue costs and the financial implications will be closely scrutinised through the normal rigorous planning and approval process. The question of any additional resources for the Royal Hospitals Trust and the east end as a whole will need to be addressed as part of this planning process as well as in the context of the Government's review of the arrangements for the distribution of resources in both primary and secondary care.

Home Care Staff

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by local authority the number of home care staff employed by each London borough. [31242]

Mr. Boateng: The reported numbers of home care staff directly employed by London social services departments at September 1996, the latest date currently available, are in the table.

Further information on other categories of social services whole time equivalent staff, including home help organisers, as at September 1996 can be found on the DH World Wide Web pages [Internet reference http://www.open.gov.uk/doh/public/pss—stat.htm].

Ambulance Services

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led him to implement criteria-based dispatch systems in the ambulance service in areas where the present Orcon standards are not being met. [28859]

Mr. Milburn: Our aim is to improve standards across the board within the framework set by the White Paper "The New NHS". Local ambulance services and health authorities must work together and reach agreement on when to implement priority dispatch systems, taking account of relevant factors, including performance against ORCON standards.

NHS Charges

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase charges in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [31219]

Mr. Milburn: We shall shortly lay before the House regulations to increase National Health Service charges in England and Wales from 1 April 1998. The prescription charge will increase by 15p, from £5.65 to £5.80 for each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed. This represents a reduction of 0.1 per cent. in real terms.

The charges for prescription prepayment certificates will rise to £30.10 for a 4 month certificate and £82.70 for an annual certificate. These offer savings for those needing more than 5 items in four months or 14 in one year.

The new charge will raise some £336 million for the NHS in 1998–99.

Charges for elastic stockings and tights, wigs and most fabric supports supplied through the hospital service will be increased similarly.

The maximum patient charge for a single course of dental treatment begun on or after 1 April 1998 will increase from £330 to £340. Fewer than 1 in every 1,000 courses of treatment will attract the new maximum charge.

Optical voucher values and supplements will increase by 2.8 per cent. This will maintain the purchasing power of the vouchers given to children and those adults eligible for help with the cost of spectacles and contact lenses.

NHS charges are being examined as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, which is due to report in the summer.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will lay regulations to increase charges in Scotland by the same amounts. Similar arrangements will apply in Northern Ireland.

Details of the revised charges have been placed in the Library.

Rubella Vaccine

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to make available a less toxic and more effective Rubella vaccine. [31331]

Ms Jowell: Rubella vaccine is one of the most effective vaccines available: over 95 per cent. of people who receive the vaccine will become immune to natural rubella infection following the immunisation. We are not aware of any concerns about the toxicity of the vaccine which is subject to batch testing prior to release by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control. Recognised serious adverse reactions are very rare and occur much less frequently than those that occur after natural rubella infection.

It is recognised that joint pains are among the most common side-effects of natural rubella infection, particularly in women. Joint symptoms are also reported 10 to 28 days after immunisation against rubella but usually last only a few days. Such reactions are actually very rare in children and ongoing arthritis is not a recognised side effect. A number of recent studies have looked at the association between rubella vaccine and arthritis and there is increasing evidence becoming available that there is no increased risk of new onset chronic arthropathies or neurological conditions in women receiving rubella vaccine.

Joint Replacements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a mandatory pilot test over long periods for new prostheses for hip and other joint replacement prior to their general use. [31372]

Mr. Milburn: Current regulations do not require mandatory clinical testing of all new joint replacements. They require that all medical devices placed on the market after 14 June 1998 should bear the CE marking demonstrating that the device in question complies with the essential requirements for safety. For all joint replacement implants, clinical data will be part of the evidence required to demonstrate compliance. This information may be generated from a clinical trial of appropriate duration or from existing data on an equivalent product.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to evaluate the reliability of prostheses used in hip replacements over the past 15 years. [31370]

Mr. Milburn: The Medical Devices Agency (MDA) collates and evaluates data on the performance of hip replacements used in the United Kingdom via its adverse incident reporting and investigating system. Users of medical devices, including hip replacements, are requested to report problems associated with the use of the devices to the MDA adverse incident centre.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 552, when his Department will have completed the collection of information regarding the remuneration of NHS employees. [31333]

Mr. Milburn: The earnings data to which I referred in my answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 552, are currently being validated by officials. I expect the results of this survey to be available in due course.

Continence Products (VAT)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the cost to NHS trusts of the removal of VAT zero-rating on continence products in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [31866]

Mr. Boateng: The National Health Service is funded on the basis that Value Added Tax is payable on healthcare. The re-imposition of VAT on continence products is estimated to amount to £2.25 million in 1997–98 and £9 million in 1998–99.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has made to the World Health Organisation on the alleged omissions of information from a recent report on cannabis. [31782]

Mr. Boateng: None. Copies of the World Health Organisation press release on the issue of the content of this document have been placed in the Library.

Nursery Inspections

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will increase the number of social services inspections in private and state run nurseries to a minimum of two per year; and if he will make these unannounced visits; [32192]

(2) if he will introduce a requirement for safety inspections by social services and the Health and Safety Executive prior to the opening of nursery establishments as a condition of their licence; [32194]

(3) if he will amend the legislation governing private and state run nursery provision and child care inspected by social services to require in addition inspections from the Health and Safety Executive; [32193]

(4) what representations he has received on the safety standards of nurseries in the North West. [32191]

Mr. Boateng: We are not aware of any representations on the safety standards of nurseries in the North West. I will shortly be issuing a consultation paper with the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Ms Morris), on the future regulation of early education and day care. The paper will seek comments on many of the issues raised by my hon. Friend. I will ensure that my hon. Friend is sent a copy. It would be inappropriate to consider any changes to legislation before this consultation exercise has been completed.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the published scientific papers on the safety of vitamin B6 were studied (a) in full and (b) in summary or abstract by (i) the Chairman and (ii) the members of the Committee on Toxicity prior to it making recommendations on the safety of vitamin B6. [31609]

Ms Jowell: All the scientific papers on the toxicity of vitamin B6 identified by literature searches and supplied by interested parties were available to the Chairman and the members of the Committee on Toxicity before making their recommendations.

DEFENCE

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of media presentations and press conferences which he has given, other than those held at his Department. [25167]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: In the course of visits outside my department which my Ministers and I have made, we have given a number of media presentations and press conferences. The press conference I held jointly with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in her Department on 9 December 1997 cost my Department £1,585, including VAT. There were no other additional costs arising from such press conferences.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27761]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The Government Car Service provides my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State with a dedicated car and driver under the terms of a contract. Junior Ministers are provided with cars from 20 Squadron Royal Logistics Corps. Their costs reflect the amortised rate, including capital costs, fuel, lubricants and repairs.

On this basis the estimated costs of Ministerial cars and drivers is as follows:

(1) 1995–96: £165,684

(2) 1996–97: £172,084

(3) 1997–98 (to date): £146,098

(4) 1997–98 (full year): £194,797.

The 1997–98 (full year) costs are a projected estimate. The larger increase in costs between 1996–97 and 1997–98 essentially reflects pay awards, the replacement of aging and unreliable cars with leased vehicles and additional costs related to the fact that ministerial constituencies are now situated further from London.

The costs of taxis used during the corresponding years are not held separately and information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Staff are aware, however, that the most effective and economical form of travel should be used. Taxis should therefore be used only in the most exceptional circumstances, and only if the expenditure can be justified.

Broughton Moor

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether radioactive materials have ever been stored at RNAD Broughton Moor. [31666]

Mr. Spellar: There is no record of knowledge of hazardous radioactive materials being used or stored on site. A statement to this effect is contained in the Land

Quality Assessment, Phase Two Intrusive Survey-Factual Report, dated May 1996 (para 2–2.13), which has recently been released to the Borough and County Councils.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a land quality statement has been issued in the case of RNAD Broughton Moor. [31664]

Mr. Spellar: A Land Quality Statement and Factual Report was issued to the local authorities and Environment Agency earlier this month.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether RNAD Broughton Moor has ever been the subject of radiological contamination. [31665]

Mr. Spellar: There is no knowledge of hazardous radioactive materials being used or stored on the site either by MOD or other users. Colbalt-60 sealed sources, used for X-ray examinations, were removed after the work on which they were being used was completed.

Gunwharf, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many bids were received by his Department for the land at Gunwharf, Portsmouth. [31721]

Mr. Spellar: Six.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on the basis of what criteria his Department's land at Gunwharf, Portsmouth was disposed of. [31722]

Mr. Spellar: Offers for the Gunwharf site were sought on the basis of open market value and took into account the Planning Brief for the site previously provided by Portsmouth City Council.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the requirements of the proposed Millennium project for Portsmouth Harbour in considering bids for land at Gunwharf, Portsmouth. [31723]

Mr. Spellar: My officials in the Defence Estates Organisation who have been handling the sale of the Gunwharf site have worked closely with Portsmouth City Council and the Millennium Commission to ensure that the Millennium requirements for Portsmouth Harbour were made fully known to parties interested in purchasing the site. Those requirements were expressed in the City Council's Development Brief and a Draft Planning Agreement available to prospective purchasers prior to making offers to acquire the site. An assessment of those requirements was therefore taken into account in the evaluation of the proposals and offers for the site.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of the space based infra-red system being installed at RAF Menwith Hill; and how much of this cost will be borne by the Exchequer. [31918]

Dr. Reid: This programme is funded by the United States Government. The UK contribution is limited to some administrative costs relating to professional fees and management of the works programme to which some £77,000 has been allocated to date.

US Visiting Forces

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of US Visiting Forces based in the UK; and where they are located. [31917]

Dr. Reid: Some 13,500 members of the United States Visiting Forces are present in the UK. Numbers, which include both United States Service and civilian personnel at each site, are shown below:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Service Delivery (Costs)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the costs and processes involved of the delivery of services by (a) his Department and (b) bodies delivering similar services in other EU states. [25931]

Mr. Morley: Details of the running costs of the Department, including services to farmers, are set out in the Departmental Report, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House. An assessment of the costs of services provided to farmers in other Member States could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Market Research

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure has been incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies (a) in 1996–97 and (b) since 1 May 1997 on (i) opinion polling, (ii) focus groups and (iii) other forms of market research; if he will list the surveys commissioned and the purpose of each; and if he will make a statement. [26585]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Surveys commissioned by the Department and its Agencies in (a) 1996–97 and (b) since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

1996–97

Personal Imports Campaign: Research to assess the effectiveness of the publicity campaign.

Veterinary Laboratories Agency: Market research on new business areas and customer satisfaction survey.

Intervention Board: Survey of customer satisfaction.

1997–98

Perceptions of MAFF: A survey conducted among opinion leaders, journalists, farmers and the general public.

Research to assess the effectiveness of the MAFF food safety exhibit at the Good Food Show.

Research to assess the effectiveness of the MAFF food safety radio campaign.

Research to identify the most effective method of communicating nutrition information to teenage girls.

Pesticide Safety Directorate: Customer satisfaction survey

Veterinary Laboratory Agency: Research on new business areas.

Veterinary Medicines Directorate: One survey to assess competitiveness and two customer satisfaction surveys.

Total expenditure for the period was £163,000. Information from non-departmental public bodies is not centrally available but is currently being sought. I will write to the hon. Member with the collated information as soon as possible.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26591]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The cost of Ministerial overseas travel in my Department for the years requested is as follows:

(a) 1995–96: £66,058

(b) 1996–97: £51,841

(c) 1 May 1997 to date: £91,516[1].

[1] Estimate.

Buildings Refurbishment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if he will make a statement. [26590]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The cost of building refurbishment carried out by the Department is as follows:

1995–96: £9,690,000

1996–97: £5,380,000

1997–98 to date: £5,490,000

1997–98 full year: £6,260,000.

It is necessary to have a constant programme of building refurbishment to modernise buildings, to replace building services which have reached the end of their lives, to redecorate them, and to improve their energy efficiency. The expenditure above covers thirty buildings.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27775]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Estimated expenditure on hospitality from 1 May 1997 to 31 January 1998 was £67,000 by this Department, £128,000 by its agencies and £197,000 by the sponsored non-departmental public bodies.

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26588]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The estimate of the annual cost and total value of the empty properties administered by the Department is as follows.

	Annual cost	Total value
1995–96	150,000	21.6 million
1996–97	330,000	29.9 million
1997–98 to date	290,000	36.3 million
1997–98 full year	300,000	36.3 million

The Annual Cost includes rents to landlords, contributions in lieu of rates, security and maintenance. The Total Value is based on the actual or estimated sale prices as at 1 April of each year. The decline in Civil Service numbers has enabled Departments to declare more office space surplus to requirements, and that, in the longer term, reductions in the size of the Government estate will provide the tax payer with greater value for money.

All redundant properties are disposed of in accordance with HM Treasury guidelines. This often requires the Department to hold them for a time in order to gain favourable outline planning consents which enhance their values.

Meat Export Licences

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average time currently taken to process (a) red and (b) white meat export licences by Worcester Veterinary Field Service. [30565]

Mr. Rooker: The State Veterinary Service's Service Standard for processing routine export health certificate is 5 working days from date of receipt of a fully completed application. The Department's computer records show that, in January, the average time from receipt of an application to dispatch of certificates to Local Veterinary Inspectors for red meat and poultry meat certificates in the Worcester Animal Health Office was as follows:

	Calendar days
Average time for processing of red meat certificates	[1]0
Average time for processing of white meat certificates	0.06

Note:
The above figures are provisional and subject to amendment.
[1] 0 means all certificates despatched on day of receipt of request.

Relative Stability

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the distinction between the principle and the application of relative stability as stated in the EC 1991 Report to the Council and to the European Parliament SEC(91) 2288 final. [31018]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission's report of 1991 was prepared prior to the 1992 review of the Common Fisheries Policy. Following that review, relative stability is applied by virtue of Article 8 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3760/92.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies who tendered for them. [30707]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Advertising commissioned by the Department, and its cost, since 1 May 1997, is as follows:

	Cost (£)
IACS	7,174
Sheep scab	22,032
Livestock markets	22,260
Cattle traceability	54,410
Food safety	176,144
Miscellaneous	30,304

All advertising has been commissioned through the Central Office of Information who placed it, either with DeLaney Fletcher Bozell (appointed to be the Department's agency following a competitive pitch in 1996), or with Portland agency, where it has been outdoor advertising. Press media buying is purchased through Mediavest.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31183]

Mr. Morley: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Designated Ports

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons fishermen are required to land their catches at designated ports. [31020]

Mr. Morley: A system of designated landing and transhipment ports already operates for pelagic fisheries in order to assist control and enforcement activity. We expect to announce shortly proposals to extend the arrangements for designated ports to landings of non pelagic species.

Black Fish

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the tonnage of (a) cod, (b) plaice, (c) saithe and (d) whiting landed as black fish in the latest available year. [31019]

Mr. Morley: The undeclared landing of fish subject to quota is an illegal activity and it is not possible to make a meaningful estimate of the extent to which it occurs. The UK Fisheries Departments are, however, determined to prevent such landings which undermine the measures taken to conserve fish stocks and threaten the long-term future of the fishing industry.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average level of net income received per farm holding by (a) hill farmers, (b) dairy farmers and (c) cereal farmers at 1996 prices in each year since 1979. [31086]

Mr. Rooker: Long-term trends in net farm income are normally presented as indices because of the changing sample of the Farm Business Survey. However, set out in the table are the equivalent monetary values. Owing to a change in the definition of farm types, data for years before 1987 are not wholly comparable with the more recent data. Data for 1987–88 are given on both farm type definitions to give an indication of the degree of change.

Food Labelling

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to ensure that farm produce is labelled by country of origin. [30837]

Mr. Rooker: Rules on the labelling of farm produce are harmonised in the EC. Generally, the place of origin of any food must be given if omitting it could mislead the purchaser about the true place of origin of that food. More specifically, regulated fresh fruit and vegetables are required to be marked with the country of origin at all points of sale by EC marketing standards regulations. In October last year we launched the Beef Labelling Scheme which provides for the accurate labelling of beef. With effect from 1 April any beef labelled with country of origin information must have derived from animals born, reared and slaughtered in that country. It is envisaged that national origin labelling of beef will become compulsory by the year 2000.

Agriculture Payments

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to implement his policy of moving agriculture payments from direct commodity support to environmentally linked payments; and to what timetable. [30838]

Mr. Rooker: The Government's policy is to seek the decoupling and eventual phasing out of production linked subsidies; some of the savings could then be used for specific targeted rural development and agri-environmental measures. The proposed integration of rural and agri-environmental policies within the EAGGF guarantee section, as put forward under the Agenda 2000 paper on CAP reform, will lay the basis for an eventual shift from production support to those policies but, to effect these changes, a concomitant reduction in production linked support will be necessary. The Commission's formal proposals are expected on 18 March and negotiations in the Council will start on 31 March.

Beef

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for the last three years for each member state of the European Union the amount in ecu they have been entitled to claim as compensation for falling beef prices as a result of BSE; and how much is deducted from rebates that would otherwise have returned to that country. [31220]

Mr. Rooker: Financial aid specifically aimed at compensating the beef and veal sectors for the effects of the BSE crisis on beef prices was made available to Member States in 1996 under two separate Council Regulations, EC No. 1357/96 and EC No. 2443/96. The following expenditure has been made by Member States in 1996 and 1997 under these Regulations (the 1997 figures are still provisional).

ecu millions

Member State	1996	1997
Belgium	28.5	21.7
Denmark	15.3	11.6
Germany	116.4	96.9
Greece	7.9	2.3
Spain	63.0	28.2
France	218.6	141.6
Ireland	89.2	37.9
Italy	53.1	45.2
Luxembourg	1.9	1.5
Netherlands	21.6	31.0
Austria	25.0	10.2
Portugal	14.1	6.6
Finland	9.1	11.9
Sweden	16.9	13.9
UK	134.0	74.2

Under the Fontainebleau agreement, only the UK receives a rebate on its contributions to the EU budget. Under this agreement, any increase in UK receipts results in a reduction of the UK rebate by 66 per cent. of the amount of those receipts.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many prosecutions are pending for breaches of the regulations on imported beef which were introduced on 1 January in (a) Scotland, (b) England and Wales and (c) Northern Ireland; [31257]

(2) how many prosecutions there have been for breaches of the regulations on imported beef which were introduced on 1 January in (a) Scotland, (b) England and Wales and (c) Northern Ireland. [31258]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 February 1998]: No prosecutions for breaches of the Specified Risk Material Order 1997 have been made or are pending.

Fisheries

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals in respect of fishing

he put to the European Commission regarding (a) a permanent exclusive United Kingdom 12 mile limit, (b) a permanent retention of the principle of relative stability, (c) devolution of power from the European Parliament and Commission to a zonal management committee and (d) coastal stock management of conservation and catches. [31341]

Mr. Morley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland and I plan, shortly to meet representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisation and Scottish Fishermen's Federation, to discuss their ideas on these matters.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the Food Standards Agency will be independent of (i) government, (ii) the food industry and (iii) other producer interests. [31525]

Mr. Rooker: The White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" (Cm 3830) explains in some detail the Government's proposals for ensuring that the Agency will operate at arm's length from Government and independently of any sectoral interests while remaining accountable to Parliament through Health Ministers. In particular, the Agency's guiding principles will be set out in legislation, and Ministers' powers of direction over the Agency will be exercisable only if it appears to be acting outside the terms of its specific legal framework. The Agency will have the right to publish the advice it gives to Ministers, whether or not the Government agree with that advice.

The Agency will be led by an independent Chairperson and up to 12 Commissioners who will be appointed on the basis of their proven track records and a majority of whom will come from a wider public interest background. The Commission will act collegiately to further the aims and objectives of the Agency in accordance with its guiding principles.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has consulted the Better Regulation Task Force about the proportionality, enforceability, economic impact and the implications for consistency in public policy of the proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements; and if he will make a statement. [31608]

Mr. Rooker: When the draft regulations required to introduce the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6 are issued for consultation they will be accompanied by a draft Regulatory Appraisal which takes account of the principles of good regulation published by the Better Regulation Task Force. Those consulted will be able to comment on the information given in the Appraisal.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from (a) United States senators, (b) right hon. and hon. Members and (c) scientists relating to the proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement [31611]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have received a single representation, addressed to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, from two United States senators on their proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6. Approximately 1,500 letters have been received from right hon. and hon. Members, the majority of which seek replies to points raised by constituents. Of these, approximately 1,300 have been dealt with by this department. No record has been kept of the number of representations from individuals who might be regarded as scientists.

The Government's response to these representations have varied according to the nature of the representation received, but in most casts it will have included an explanation of the background to the issue and a statement of the Government's policy on it.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the (a) scientific and (b) other representations on the proposed new restrictions on the retail of vitamin B6 so far received by his Department were copied to (i) the Chairman, (ii) the Secretariat and (iii) the members of the Committee on Toxicity; and what factors determined which of those papers were circulated to each of those groups. [31607]

Mr. Rooker: Representations which appear to present new information on the safety of vitamin B6 and are supported by detailed scientific arguments have been copied to the Committee on Toxicity (COT) Secretariat as a matter of course. It is for the COT Secretariat to decide whether such representations contain information that needs to be referred to the Chairman and members of the COT.

No record has been kept of the representations that have been copied to the COT Secretariat.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the draft statutory instrument on the proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6; and with whom he intends to consult about its provisions. [31610]

Mr. Rooker: We hope to publish the draft regulations required to introduce the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6 shortly. No decision has yet been made on the extent of the consultation exercise. However, organisations representing interests likely to be substantially affected by the regulations will be included.

Biodiversity

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department (a) has taken to implement the decision on agricultural biodiversity taken at the Third Conference of the Parties of the Convention on Biological Diversity and (b) will take to support the further development of the work programme on agricultural biodiversity at the Fourth Conference. [31539]

Mr. Rooker: Work to implement the agricultural aspects of the Convention on Biological Diversity is being carried forward together with the Department for International Development which leads on implementation of the Global Plan of Action. Currently, there are several projects on the identification and characterisation of plant and animal genetic resources. However, much remains to be done to address the issues of multilateral access, and to agree revision of the International Undertaking, matters which will need to be addressed at the Fourth Conference of the Parties. The Department is committed to sustaining, restoring and enhancing in situ biodiversity through agri-environment schemes, advice and, where appropriate, regulation. The Department will continue to work closely with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions who have the overall lead on the Convention.

Sheep Dipping

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons compulsory sheep dipping was discontinued in 1992; and if he will make a statement. [31546]

Mr. Rooker: Legislation requiring compulsory treatment to prevent sheep scab was revoked in 1992 because it had failed to eradicate the disease.

BSE (Compensation)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of compensation paid in relation to BSE in the current financial year; and if he will provide a breakdown of compensation payments by each sector of the food industry. [31619]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 February 1998]: From 1 April 1997 to 31 January 1998, the total amount of BSE compensation was £419 million, of which £367 million went to beef producers, £49 million to renderers and £3 million to the hide industry.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many works of art he has borrowed for use in his offices; which organisations he has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance he received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31558]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Fish (Disease)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the percentage of (a) plaice, (b) cod, (c) dab, (d) flounder, (e) herring, (f) haddock, (g) skate and (h) huss landed in British ports which is diseased; [31920]

(2) what percentage of (a) plaice, (b) cod, (c) dab and (d) flounder in the North Sea he estimates are diseased. [31919]

Mr. Morley: Diseased or unsightly fish are not likely to be landed because they are not marketable. Information on landings of diseased fish is not therefore collected. The Department does, however, undertake a regular programme of surveillance of fish stocks for disease.

The percentage of plaice, cod, flounder, herring, haddock and skate with obvious disease signs is very low, usually less than 1 per cent. Information on huss is not recorded. Dab are unusually susceptible to disease and in localised areas the prevalence may be up to 10–15 per cent., although in the majority of these fish the signs of disease would not be apparent to the untrained eye. In some areas of the North Sea such as the Western Dogger Bank, up to approximately 20 per cent. of dab exhibit varying degrees of abnormal pigmentation but it is not known whether this constitutes disease and no causative agent has been found.

Diversification

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to encourage farmers to diversify into organic farming. [31833]

Mr. Morley: Financial aid to encourage farmers to convert to organic methods already exists. There is also advice available free of charge to farmers wishing to convert and we have a substantial programme of research and development in organic farming and horticulture. Currently we are reviewing the levels of aid available under the Organic Aid Scheme. Proposals for the revision of the Scheme are being considered in the light of public consultation as well as the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review and our pledge to live within existing resources.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assist farmers wishing to diversify into the cultivation of flax and hemp. [31785]

Mr. Rooker: Flax and hemp are useful alternative crops, producing renewable raw materials for a number of uses. Both crops already receive support under a specific Common Agricultural Policy regime. The Department has also provided encouragement to fibre crops under its alternative crops programme.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current time limits on the obtaining of cattle passports; and what time limits were originally set. [32034]

Mr. Rooker: Under current domestic legislation (The Cattle Passport Order 1996) cattle keepers in Great Britain must apply for cattle passports within 28 days of tagging. However, under new EU rules, this timescale will reduce to within 15 days of tagging once the new GB Cattle Tracing System (CTS) is fully operational, which is planned for late summer. EU rules require the deadline to be reduced to 7 days from 1 January 2000.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of beef has been imported to Northern Ireland since the beef export ban; and from which countries. [30682]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have been asked to reply.

With the introduction of the single market and the abolition of border controls on goods moving between Member States, figures on imports of beef from other Member States are not recorded. The only information available relates to imports landed directly into Northern Ireland from outside the EU. Details since the imposition of the beef export ban are as follows:

Uruguay: 45,096 kgs

Brazil: 17,013 kgs

New Zealand (veal): 30 kgs.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if beef has been imported into Northern Ireland from non-EU countries since the imposition of the beef export ban on the United Kingdom. [30683]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have been asked to reply.

Yes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund Loans

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Social Fund loan awards were (a) partially and (b) wholly changed to community care grants as a result of first-tier reviews each year since 1993–94. [30971]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Number of applications for first tier review which have resulted in a loan being changed, either in part or in full, to a grant

Year	Number
1994–95	12,507
1995–96	15,089
1996–97	13,937
1997–98 (to end of January)	11,173

Notes:

1. It is not possible to differentiate between loan awards which, on review, have been changed either in part or in full to a grant.
2. The number of applications for first tier review which have resulted in a loan being changed, either in part or in full, to a grant represents, on average, 3 per cent. of all applications for first tier review.

National Insurance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect in each of the next 10 years on (a) gross pensions expenditure, (b) income-related benefits expenditure and (c) income tax revenues, of crediting to all adults below state pension age a full year of national insurance contributions every year from 1998–99 onwards, regardless of the amount of national insurance contributions actualy paid. [31034]

Mr. Denham: This information is not available.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people failed to attend an Independent Tribunal Service hearing in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what is the cost of each hearing. [29226]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

In the quarter ending 30 September 1997, 36,053 Social Security Appeal Tribunals were held, of which 20,091 were not attended by either an appellant or his representative. This is the total number of appeals not attended. Data are not available for cases where the appellant indicated that he would attend and then failed to do so.

The average cost of each case cleared at a tribunal hearing is estimated by the Independent Tribunal Service to be £250[1].

[1] This figure relates to all hearings which took place in the 1996–97 financial year, the most recent period for which figures are available.

Income Support

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of retiring pensioners were entitled to income support in the last year for which figures are available; [29367]

(2) what proportion of retiring pensioners were entitled to income support or its equivalent on retirement in (a) 1996, (b) 1995, (c) 1990, (d) 1985, (e) 1980, (f) 1975 and (g) 1970; [29371]

(3) what proportion of pensioners are entitled to receive income support. [29357]

Mr. Keith Bradley: About 20 per cent. of retiring pensioners were estimated to be entitled to receive Income Support in Great Britain in 1995–96, the latest year for which figures are available.

The additional information requested for previous years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

About one in four pensioners (those aged 60 and over) were estimated to be entitled to receive Income Support in Great Britain in 1995–96, the latest year for which figures are available.

Note:

The estimated figures for pensioners entitled to Income Support were taken from the Family Resources Survey and should be treated with caution. A small sample size was used and therefore almost certainly subject to some degree of error.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (a) males aged 65 and (b) females aged 60 years were in receipt of income support or supplementary benefit in each year since 1968 for which statistics are available. [30498]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Male and female recipients of income support between 1990 and 1997

Year	Male income support claimants aged 65	Per cent. of all men aged 65	Female income support claimants aged 60	Per cent. of all women aged 60
1990	15,000	5.9	20,000	6.6
1991	14,000	5.4	17,000	5.9
1992	15,000	5.8	15,000	5.4

Disability

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if being registered blind is considered a secondary disability; and if she will make a statement. [29966]

Mr. Denham: The Government do not classify disabilities in the manner described. Social security benefits are awarded because a person satisfies the entitlement conditions; these vary depending on the benefit claimed. Disability Living Allowance, one of the main benefits available to help disabled people with the extra costs incurred because of the effects of their disability, is based not on specific disabilities, but on their need for help with personal care and/or mobility.

Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations she has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) others, since 1 May in support of re-establishing the link between pensions and average earnings; and if she will make a statement. [27479]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not maintain statistics in the form requested. Since 1 May, we have received 827 written representations from hon. Members enclosing letters from their constituents about Retirement Pension. A good number of the constituents' letters supported the restoration of the link between State pensions and average earnings. The Department has also received more than 1,000 from others on the subject of Retirement Pension and many of these have supported restoring the link.

Over 2,000 written responses were received by the Pensions Review as part of its public consultation exercise. 652 of these responses, of which 6 came from hon. Members, supported the uprating of State pensions in line with the rise in earnings. We also received two petitions in support, with 199 and 48 names respectively.

We recently announced that, from April, the basic pension will rise to £103.40 a week for a couple and £64.70 for a single pensioner. This is in keeping with our manifesto commitment to uprate the basic pension at least in line with prices. For the first time, the basic pension for couples goes up to over £100. This was in line with the 3.6 per cent increase in prices in September which was higher than expected and the cost will be greater than was included in the previous Government's expenditure plans.

The Government are determined that pensioners will stay warm in their homes this winter. On 25 November last year, the Government announced additional help of £400 million over this winter and next to provide extra help to pensioners towards their fuel bills. Full details were announced on 5 January. This announcement will enable pensioners to heat their homes confident in the knowledge that they will receive extra help with their heaviest fuel bills. Pensioners receiving Income Support, or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance where the award includes one of the pensioner premiums, will receive £50. Other pensioner households, where someone is receiving a qualifying benefit, will receive at least £20. Where there is only one eligible person in a household, they will receive £20, otherwise each will receive £10.

The Government's pensions review is examining the value of the basic State pension including the future uprating of pensions. The Review will report in the first half of this year.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to publicise the advantages of SERPS. [31787]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to retaining SERPS as an option for those who wish to remain in it. Raising awareness of pensions, and improving the level of financial education is one of the key challenges for the pensions review. We believe that people need to understand the importance of saving for their retirement, and make the right choice about what sort of pension is best for them.

To help address this issue we have also set up a Pensions Education Working Group to advise what other actions are needed to improve people's knowledge of non-state and state pensions in general.

Benefits Backdating

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons the time period for claims for social security benefits is being reduced to one month; and if she will make a statement. [30176]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The proposed changes to the backdating arrangements will create a single aligned time limit which will be simpler for people to understand and easier for staff to administer. It also underlines customers' responsibility to claim on time. The change will also help us to stay within the spending limits which we inherited.

We have had to make hard choices and we believe it is reasonable to make payment of benefit to meet current entitlement a priority.

Child Support

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to introduce legislation that links maintenance payments with access to children from absent fathers. [30264]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made and we expect to bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals by the Summer. It is right that, wherever possible, children should have contact with their non-resident parent.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to subject all benefit integrity project decisions to reduce or stop benefit, taken prior to the introduction of the pre-adjudication check, to the pre-adjudication check. [31732]

Mr. Denham: All Disability Living Allowance decision notices carry information about the claimant's rights of review and appeal. Anyone who thinks that the decision made in their case is incorrect should contact the Benefits Agency, in the normal way.

The extra safeguard, introduced from 9 February, has been designed to provide adjudication officers, making decisions about entitlement as part of the Benefit Integrity Project, with a wider range of information about a claimant's current need for help with personal care and getting around than that provided by the claimant's statement alone. We want to ensure that people do not, unnecessarily, have to go through the review and appeal system to secure their proper entitlement. The extra safeguard will not be retrospective.

Lone Parents

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the current value of lone parent benefit and lone parent premium if they had been uprated in line with other benefits since April 1995; and how much lone parents benefit would currently be worth if it had been uprated in line with earnings since its introduction. [29979]

Mr. Keith Bradley: One Parent Benefit would be worth £6.70 and the lone parent premium would be worth £5.50, if they had been uprated in line with other benefits since April 1995.

One parent Benefit would be worth £2.65 if it had been uprated in line with earnings since its introduction.

Sources:

The Retail Price Index (all items) (PRI index), the Retail Prices Index (all items) less rent, local taxes and mortgage interest payment (ROSSI index) and the Average Earnings Index (Whole Economy), produced by the Office for National Statistics were used in these calculations.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money has been spent so far on the New Deal for lone parents; and what has been the expenditure per person on the 1,015 people who have gained full or part-time work since the inception of the New Deal for lone parents. [32039]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The costs of the Adviser Teams working on the New Deal for Lone Parents is £2.5 million to date. In addition, £0.2 million has been allocated to cover the cost of Employment Service programmes for Lone Parents.

The other costs of the project include project management, the development and provision of IT support, publicity and the cost of the evaluation of the project. In addition to that, there have been costs relating to the involvement of the voluntary sector. The total cost to date of setting up the project and offering the service to over 40,000 lone parents in the first eight areas is £6.1 million.

We do not collect routinely the cost of Adviser time, training courses and administration associated with individual participants in the New Deal for Lone Parents.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the net cost to public funds over the next four years of (a) the welfare to work programme and (b) the measures to help lone parents with child-care and to obtain jobs. [32068]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government have not made an assessment of the effect of the Welfare to Work programme on Social Security spending, tax and national insurance receipts. To do so would require information on the full effect of the programme on unemployment, wages and the broader economy. The Welfare to Work programme will be carefully evaluated to help, where possible, to determine these. Information on funding for the New Deal, including the New Deal for Lone Parents, is contained in the 1997 Budget and Pre-Budget Report.

The costs of the measures announced in the Pre-Budget Statement to boost child-care are being met from the Windfall Fund, the Out Of School Child Care Initiative and the Lottery's New Opportunities Fund.

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of lone parents who have had an interview have agreed to participate in the New Deal for lone parents; what proportion of those participating have found jobs; and how many lone parents participating in the New Deal for lone parents have found jobs. [32814]

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 5 February 1998, Official Report, columns 793–94, on lone parents and the New Deal, if she will update her earlier answer to include the first six months of the New Deal. [32107]

Ms Harman: The New Deal for Lone Parents has been running in eight areas of the country since July 1997. A national service will be available to all new lone parents claiming Income Support in April 1998, and to all lone parents receiving Income Support in October.

Using the latest information for the period from July 1997 to 31 January 1998 for the New Deal for Lone Parents, the percentage of lone parents attending an initial interview who agreed to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents is 90 per cent; the proportion of those participating who have found jobs is 33 per cent; and a total of 1,113 lone parents participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents have found jobs.

A full independent evaluation is under way, which will report in due course. The evaluation will compare outcomes for lone parents in the New Deal areas with outcomes for those not in New Deal areas.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list (i) the number of claimants of housing benefit, (ii) the number of claimants as a percentage of the whole population, (iii) the total amount of housing benefit paid and (iv) the housing benefit per claimant for Newcastle upon Tyne from 1992–93 to 1997–98. [31535]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Housing benefit in Newcastle upon Tyne

	Recipients	Recipients as a percentage of the whole population	Expenditure £	Average weekly benefit £
1992–93	38,900	13.8	61,015	27.98
1993–94	40,230	14.1	67,834	30.04
1994–95	40,580	14.3	73,103	32.44
1995–96	40,340	14.2	78,434	35.02
1996–97	40,050	14.2	80,090	36.31

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the net cost to public funds over the next four years of recent changes in respect of eligibility of single people to receive housing benefit. [32069]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government have revoked the measure put in place by the previous administration to extend the Single Room Rent to most single people between the ages of 25 and 59. They have also decided to proceed with the measures that exempted some young people from the restrictions announced in October 1996 on Housing Benefit for single people aged under 25, young people with non-dependants living with them and those in receipt of the severe Disability Premium.

The costs of these changes have been met by reallocation of resources from other programmes and will not lead to any net increase in overall planned public expenditure in 1997–98 and 1998–99.

Detailed expenditure plans for future years will be set after the completion of the Comprehensive Spending Reviews.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to consult the Royal National Institute for the Blind on her review of disability living allowance expenditure. [31400]

Mr. Denham: Disability benefits, including Disability Living Allowance, are included in the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review, which was announced on 11 June last year. The review is an important step in our plan to modernise and improve the Social Security system, so that it helps people to work as far as they are able; provides appropriate support to those who cannot work; and makes the most effective use of the resources available.

No decisions have been made. When we have identified specific proposals we will consult disabled people, their organisations, such as the Royal National Institute for the Blind (RNIB), and others with an interest. Ministers and officials have met with the RNIB on a number of occasions over recent months and have listened to their concerns which will be considered during the review. We will not implement any changes without first consulting on them.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will require the Benefits Agency, when responding to hon. Members' written parliamentary questions, to cite the unique identifying number of the question. [31883]

Mr. Keith Bradley: With effect from 2 March 1998, the identifying number of Parliamentary Questions will be included on Chief Executive replies.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost to public funds over the next four years of reforms to social security provision announced since 1 May 1997. [32070]

Mr. Field: The Government are committed to working within the Control Totals announced by the previous Government for 1997–98 and 1998–99. Detailed spending plans for 1998–99 will be published in the Departmental Report and will take account of policy changes announced since 1 May 1997. The report will show that these changes will be achieved without any net increase in overall planned public expenditure. Expenditure on the New Deal will be met from the Windfall Tax.

Detailed expenditure plans for future years will be set after the completion of the Comprehensive Spending Reviews.

Habitual Residence Rules

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to reform the Habitual Residence rules. [31784]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are currently reviewing all aspects of the habitual residence test.

Fuel Costs (Pensioners)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors underlie the different figures for the cost of advertising to inform pensioners about winter fuel payments set out in her answers of 26 January 1998, Official Report, columns 111–12, and 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 129. [32026]

Mr. Denham: My written answer on Monday 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 111, contained the cost of publicity and advertising. This figure of £1.7 million for the publicity campaign included the figure of £1,325,000 for press and TV advertising only given separately in my written answer, Monday 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 129.

The difference between these two figures covers the cost of producing information leaflets and posters and distribution of this publicity material through a number of local outlets visited by pensioners, for example, post offices and doctors' surgeries.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her current estimate of the expenditure of her Department, its agencies and non departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27750]

Mr. Field [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information requested is set out in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account Her Majesty's Government will take of US Government policy in determining their policy towards (a) lifting and (b) amending UN sanctions against Iraq. [31763]

Mr. Fatchett: The criteria for lifting sanctions are set out in paragraphs 21 and 22 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 687; they relate to the policies and practices of the Government of Iraq and implementation of the Security Council Resolutions. The Security Council cannot consider lifting sanctions until the Government of Iraq have shown themselves willing to meet those criteria.

We do not wish to see sanctions maintained for any longer than is necessary. We have welcome the recent Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq. In it, the Government of Iraq reconfirm their acceptance of all relevant UN resolutions and undertake to co-operate fully with UNSCOM and the IAEA. When the Government of Iraq comply with the relevant Security Council Resolutions, sanctions can be relaxed.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria govern the (a) lifting and (b) amending of United Nations sanctions imposed against Iraq; and what factors will influence the timing of such action. [31760]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to his question 31763.

United States policy on sanctions is a matter for the US Government.

Qualified Majority Voting

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of qualified majority voting as permitted under Article 34(2)(c) of the Treaty on European Union. [32000]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Article 34(2)(c) of the Amsterdam Treaty provides for the adoption, by unanimity, of decisions within the scope of Title VI on any matters other than the approximation of laws. Measures to implement these decisions are to be adopted by qualified majority voting. Under the Maastrict Treaty (Article K.3.2(b) measures implementing Third Pillar joint actions may be adopted by qualified majority voting.

Vietnam

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Vietnamese Foreign Minister. [31976]

Mr. Fatchett: The Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, Mr. Nguyen Manh Cam, called on me on 6 February as part of his Guest of Government visit to the United Kingdom from 5–6 February.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations on the case of Mr. Thich Sue he has made to the Government of Vietnam. [31977]

Mr. Fatchett: Human rights issues were raised during Ministers' discussions with the Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, Mr. Nguyen Manh Cam, during his visit to the UK from 5–6 February. We passed to Mr. Cam a list of specific cases of concern, including the case of Mr. Thich Sue Sy.

Amsterdam Treaty (Tapes)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if representatives of his Department have asked to review the General Secretariat's tapes of the Amsterdam Treaty in relation to the Schengen opt-in procedure; and which other bodies have done so. [32235]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Secretariat's tapes are for the use of the Secretariat, who assist the Presidency of the day, and who do not constitute an official record. They are not available to Member States.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was first informed of the existence of tapes of the Amsterdam negotiations held by the General Secretariat of the European Council. [32234]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is normal practice for the proceedings of such meetings to be recorded by the Secretariat General of the Council for their own internal use. These tapes are not available to Member States.

Visa Waiting Times (Beijing)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average waiting time for a Chinese passport holder to receive a United Kingdom visa from the Embassy in Beijing; and what percentage of applications were refused in the last available year. [31958]

Mr. Fatchett: Where an application is straightforward, a Chinese passport holder applying for a UK non-settlement visa in Peking could expect to be issued with a visa on the same day. Where a further interview is required, the applicant may have to wait up to 12 weeks for an appointment. Where an application is for settlement, there is also a 12 week queue for an interview appointment.

In 1997, the non-settlement refusal percentage was 9.13 per cent. and the settlement refusal percentage was 7.75 per cent. The overall refusal percentage was 9.1 per cent.

Ethical Foreign Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the changes which have been made to European Union foreign policy objectives as a result of the UK's commitment to an ethical foreign policy. [32601]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear in his speech on 6 December launching the Presidency, we are using the UK Presidency to promote an ethical EU foreign policy. This is a theme which will run through all the work of the Presidency. Some specific examples included: work towards an EU Code of Conduct on arms sales; a tough, pragmatic approach to the forthcoming meeting of the UN Commission on Human Rights; EU work on freshwater management at the forthcoming meeting of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development; and EU anti-narcotics programmes in Central Asia and the Caribbean.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those occasions on which the United Kingdom Government have raised the issue of enfranchisement of Gibraltarians in Europe since 1 May; and if he will make a statement. [32044]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As my hon. Friend knows, we well recognise the importance of this issue for Gibraltar; and have looked hard at the scope for change. Our approach, including in any contacts with other Governments, however, reflects the clarity of the legal advice on the issue.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Voting Systems

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 26 February 1998, Official Report, column 545, if he will make available the results of the study which he commissioned in respect of electors' views on voting systems. [32956]

Mr. Straw: I have arranged for a copy of the results to be placed in the Library.

Low Newton Prison

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Minister of State with responsibility for prisons visited the unit or wing of Low Newton prison containing 15 and 16 year olds on remand during her visit on 20 February. [31334]

Ms Quin: During my visit to Low Newton on 20 February, I visited D wing, one of the wings which holds 15 and 16-year-old male remand prisoners. I also met prisoners of this age group during my visit to the educational facilities. Low Newton holds 15 and 16-year-old female remand prisoners within its female wing, and I also visited that part of the establishment.

Cannabis

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for possession of cannabis in England and Wales in the years 1992 to 1997 were sentenced alone and without convictions simultaneously for other offences. [31639]

Mr. George Howarth: Information from the court proceedings database for 1993 to 1996 (latest available) is given in the table. Prior to 1993, the offence of possession of cannabis could not be identified separately by the statistics collected on indictable drug offences.

People convicted for possession of cannabis[1,2] at all courts who may or may not have been convicted simultaneously for other offences, 1993–1996

[2] Numbers of convictions have been counted only where the possession of cannabis was the principal or only offence.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the method used for distributing resources to local victim support schemes from the national fund. [31647]

Mr. Michael: Last June, we increased Victim Support's annual grant by one million pounds, from £11.7 million to £12.7 million. The additional grant is being used partly to establish a national telephone helpline and partly to assist the general work of Victim Support. In 1996–97 some 11 per cent. of the annual grant went towards the cost of Victim Support's National Office, with the remainder being allocated to local schemes and witness services by Victim Support's Local Funding Panel.

The funding panel is a sub-committee of Victim Support's National Council, and is independent of both local groups and the Home Office. It considers applications from local groups in accordance with grant criteria agreed annually between Victim Support and the Home Office. This means that the allocation of Home Office funds and the priorities which guide that funding are matters for Victim Support.

Many local groups also raise income, in cash and in kind, from local sources, including local authorities.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of domestic violence were reported in the Greater London area during 1997. [31657]

Mr. Michael: Statistics on crime are recorded by offence type and not by the relationship between the victim and the offender, so there is therefore no definitive figure for the number of violent crimes which were domestic in nature.

The Metropolitan police, whose force area is broadly co-terminous with Greater London, have been noting offences which appear to them to be of a domestic nature. Their information for 1997 is attached.

Offences of domestic violence in the Metropolitan Police District 1997

	Number
Violence against the person
Murder	4
Grievous Bodily Harm	675
Actual Bodily Harm	13.044
Other violence	1.314
Violence against the person total	15.037
Sexual offences
Rape	212
Other sexual	193
Sexual offences total	405
Robbery	107
Common assaults (non-notifiable)	16.561

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding was made available by his Department for dealing with domestic violence during 1997. [31719]

Mr. Michael: While the Home Office has responsibility for co-ordinating policy on combating domestic violence, most funding from central Government is channelled through the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund and budgets which reflect the specific responsibilities of other Departments. While the responsibility at a local level lies with local agencies, the Home Office Programme Development Unit has provided funds for local projects in the past. Domestic violence was not selected in 1995 when the themes for its last three years funding round were decided.

We have recently provided £10,000 from the Home Office budget to secure the continuance of the national domestic violence helpline run by the Women's Aid Federation (England). For the future, funding issues are being examined in the context of the increased priority being given to the issue by this Government and the inter-departmental strategies currently being developed to combat domestic violence, both through prevention and through information and support for those who have already been victims.

Arson

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of arson were carried out by people under the age of 18 years, in each of Wales' police authorities, in the last five years. [31364]

Mr. Michael: It is impossible to answer the question as asked because the age of the arsonist will be known only where there has been a detection. Available information on the number of persons aged under 18 years who have been cautioned, prosecuted and convicted for arson offences is given in the tables.

Table A: Number of cautions for arson given to children under 18 years of age in Wales by police force area 1992–1996

Cyclists

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the fixed penalty notice system to cyclists in respect of all traffic signs or orders. [31585]

Mr. Michael: There is no need to extend the fixed penalty system in the way that is suggested in the question. Cyclists, in the same way as drivers of motor vehicles, can already be issued with fixed penalty notices for failing to comply with traffic signs, such as Stop and No Entry signs or automatic traffic signals, or with traffic "orders". By "orders" we mean "traffic regulation orders" made by local authorities under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 for the purpose of controlling the use of roads by traffic, including pedestrians.

Contraventions of traffic signs and traffic regulation orders are fixed penalty offences under provisions of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988. Bicycles are "vehicles" in the context of road traffic legislation and the police can therefore issue fixed penalty notices to cyclists (aged 16 or over) who do not comply with the traffic signs described in section 36 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, such as those mentioned above, or with traffic regulation orders made under the 1984 Act.

Other offences by cyclists which come within the fixed penalty system include cycling without lights and failing to stop for a police constable.

It has been decided that cycling on the pavement, and the riding by more than one person of a bicycle not constructed or adapted for the purpose, should be made fixed penalty offences later this year.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Metropolitan Police have taken to police the flow of information about levels of local crime between members of the Metropolitan Police and local journalists; and if he will make a statement. [31543]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that no specific directions have been passed to members of the Metropolitan Police regarding their dealings with local journalists about local crime levels, but that there is a clear expectation that information will be treated openly while being handled sensitively where appropriate. The principles which underpin the guidance that is given to officers about handling the media in connection with major crime investigations apply also to the handling of crime information.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in the Metropolitan Police have been disciplined for unauthorised contact with local journalists; and if he will make a statement. [31544]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that no Metropolitan Police officers have been formally disciplined for improperly passing information to a journalist, local or otherwise, in the last three years. He tells me that an officer who improperly discloses information in their possession as a member of a police force, to a journalist or anyone else, could be guilty of an offence under Code 6 of the Discipline Code which reads as follows:

"Improper disclosure of information, which offence is committed where a member of a police force:

(a) without proper authority communicates to any person any information which he has in his possession as a member of a police force, or

(b) makes any anonymous communication to any police authority or any member of a police force, or

(c) without proper authority makes representations to the police authority or the council of any county or district comprised in the police area with regard to any matters concerning the force, or

(d) canvasses any member of that authority or of such a council with regard to any such matter.

For the purposes of this paragraph the Isles of Scilly shall be treated as if they were a county".

Hillgrove Farm

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the space allowance for cats kept at Hillgrove Farm. [31644]

Mr. George Howarth: The space allowance exceeds the requirements of the Code of Practice for the Housing and Care of Animals Used in Scientific Procedures (published in 1989) and the European guidelines.

There are no indications of any welfare problems, but a programme of improvements to bring the facilities up to the standards of the "Code of Practice for the Housing and Care of Animals in Designated Breeding and Supplying Establishments" (published in 1995) has been agreed.

One significant difference between the two Codes is that shelf space cannot be taken into account in the breeders' code. If shelving is included in the calculation, the accommodation approximates to the space allowances in the breeders' code.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Hillgrove Farm has a Named Veterinary Surgeon. [31643]

Mr. George Howarth: Yes. Section 7(5)(b) requires that Certificates of Designation for breeding establishments specify a veterinary surgeon or other suitable qualified person to provide advice on the animals' health and welfare. In the case of Hillgrove, this person is a veterinary surgeon. He visits the establishment regularly.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inspections have Home Office inspectors made at Hillgrove Farm in Oxfordshire in the last 12 months; and how many of these visits were unannounced. [31642]

Mr. George Howarth: In the last 12 months, five visits of inspection were made, of which three were unannounced.

The cats are kept in units designed to ensure they remain specific pathogen free. This places restrictions on entering the units, but the inspector has observed the cats on all occasions and has twice entered the specific pathogen free areas.

Crime Reporting

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis has taken to ensure that crime levels are accurately reported in the local press; and if he will make a statement. [31545]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan Police's Performance Information Bureau (PIB) collates information centrally including divisional crime statistics. If journalists contact the Metropolitan Police to request crime figures they should be dealt with by the press bureau at New Scotland yard or be referred to one of the five area press offices, which will liaise with PIB. Figures would be given out automatically if they were already in the public domain, for example in one of the Metropolitan Police's publications, or have been given out by local police commanders at public meetings or to Police Community Consultative Groups. From time to time, senior officers take the initiative personally to brief local media about their crime figures. The accuracy of the reporting of the information given to them is the responsibility of the journalists concerned, but the press bureau would seek to correct any inaccuracies or misinterpretations which came to their attention.

Under-age Sex (Prosecutions)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prosecutions of (a) heterosexuals beneath the age of 16 and (b) homosexuals beneath the age of 18 years for breaching the legal age of sexual consent in England and Wales over the last five years. [31459]

Mr. Michael: The specific information requested is given in the table, which does not include offences such as rape, indecent assault on a male or female or gross indecency with children.

Number of males prosecuted for specific sexual offences by age, 1992–1996

England and Wales

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Males aged under 16
(a) heterosexual offences
Unlawful sexual intercourse with girl under 13	2	5	11	7	4
Unlawful sexual intercourse with girl under 16	6	4	5	9	3
Males aged under 21 from 1992 to 1994 and under 18 from 1995 onwards[1]
(b) homosexual offences
Buggery	52	48	57	18	10
Indecency between males	33	13	17	6	1

[1] Section 145 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 amended section 12 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967—lowering from 21 to 18 the age at which men may lawfully perform consenting homosexual acts in private.

Animal Experiments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many project licences issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 involve interference with either organs of special sense or the brain of cats; and of those how many were carried out on (a) conscious cats, (b) decerebrate cats and (c) cats under terminal anaesthesia, in the last available year. [31646]

Mr. George Howarth: During 1996, 17 project licence holders reported carrying out procedures using cats and involving organs of special sense or the brain. Of these, none involved conscious cats.

Information which might distinguish those involving decerebrate cats from those carried out under terminal anaesthesia is not kept centrally. In total, 15 of the projects involved either decerebrate cats or terminal anaesthesia.

In the remaining two projects, general anaesthesia was used and the cats were allowed to recover consciousness.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many project licences issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 that are currently in force and involve the use of cats have (a) mild severity bandings, (b) moderate severity bandings, (c) substantial severity bandings and (d) unclassified severity bandings. [31645]

Mr. George Howarth: Central records show that the total number of current project licences authorising the use of cats is 110. The number in each severity category is as follows:

(a) mild—40;

(b) moderate—59;

(c) substantial—none; and

(d) unclassified—11.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32472]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The role of Green Transport co-ordinator is undertaken by the Home Office's Environmental Issues Manager who was appointed in March 1997. The Home Office has been represented at inter-departmental meetings on green transport plans since their inception in 1996.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32454]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At present, the Home Office has no plans to reduce the number of, or introduce charges for, car parking spaces for staff. However, as part of our environmental strategy, those with responsibility for the larger buildings on the estate will be asked to review their car parking policy. The scope for reducing, or charging for, car parking spaces will be dependent on local circumstances and, in particular, the availability of adequate public transport. It is also important that any car parking policy takes into account equal opportunities, including the needs of staff with child care responsibilities or medical conditions which preclude their use of public transport. The current policy for the Home Office Central London Estate reflects this by allocating regular car parking spaces for commuting purposes only to staff falling into these categories.

Police Manpower (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra police officers could have been established in Essex in 1997–98 as a result of the extra funding made available to meet the target of 5,000 extra police officers in the United Kingdom over three years; and how many extra officers will actually be recruited in 1997–98 in Essex. [32340]

Mr. Michael: Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force.

For 1997–98, Essex Police received £1.1 million in what was described by the previous Government as funding for extra officers. At the end of September 1997, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 2,944 officers in the force, 17 fewer than at 31 March 1997.

Electoral Procedures

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to enable blind and partially sighted people to vote in person and unaided in the European elections in 1999. [32804]

Mr. George Howarth: This is a matter which is being considered by my Working Party on Electoral Procedures.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects his Department's working party on electoral procedures to report. [32805]

Mr. George Howarth: The Working Party has a full programme of work which will take it into the new year. A report on its findings and recommendations will be placed in the Library when the programme has been completed.

Parking Restrictions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has issued to the Metropolitan Police concerning enforcement of parking restrictions in bus lanes and at bus stops; and if he will make a statement. [31494]

Mr. Michael: No Home Office guidance has been issued. Parking enforcement in London, where it is carried out by the Metropolitan Police and traffic warden, is an operational matter for the Metropolitan Police Commissioner.

The main responsibility for parking enforcement in London rests with the London local authorities and their parking attendants. Metropolitan Police enforcement of parking offences in bus lanes and at bus stops is largely limited to offences committed on the priority "Red Routes".

The Metropolitan Police are working closely with the Traffic Director for London on a project to develop cameras to enforce bus lane restrictions on moving and stationary vehicles. A pilot scheme to test the cameras is currently running in North London, and if successful will be extended on a London-wide basis.

Crime (Witnesses and Victims)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the protection given to witnesses into a more formal framework allowing local authorities to relocate witnesses to, and victims of, crime. [31710]

Mr. Michael: On 13 June last year, we announced a wide ranging review of the way in which vulnerable and intimidated witnesses are treated in the criminal justice system. The review, which is nearing completion, is examining measures to assist intimidated witnesses from the investigation stage through to the trial itself and beyond. The existing housing legislation already enables a local housing authority to allocate accommodation to witnesses and victims who need to be relocated.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to support and protect witnesses to crimes during and after giving evidence. [32045]

Mr. Michael: We wish to offer greater protection to vulnerable or intimidated witnesses and means of doing so are being considered by the inter-departmental review of vulnerable or intimidated witnesses, which was announced by my right hon. Friend on 13 June 1997. The review, which is nearing completion, is wide ranging and is examining procedures to assist witnesses from the investigation stage through to the trial itself and beyond.

Gambling

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what data his Department has collated concerning addiction rates amongst (a) 16 to 18 year olds and (b) those aged over 18 years for (i) amusement with prizes machines, (ii) scratchcards and (iii) on-line lotteries. [32660]

Mr. George Howarth: The report Oflot published on 26 February covers gambling by 11–15 year olds on the National Lottery on-line draw, scratchcards and amusement-with-prizes machines.

There is no equivalent Government study of adults. Oflot has published regular research into player behaviour on the National Lottery.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the advice given to him by Dr. Mark Griffiths in respect of on-line frequent lotteries. [32661]

Mr. George Howarth: A submission by Dr. Mark Griffiths on the social impact of on-line lotteries was sent to the Home Office on 13 February. We are carefully considering this, along with the other responses to our consultation paper.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many organisations responded to his consultation process on the Draft Lotteries (Frequent Draws) Bill; how many supported his proposals; how many did not; and if he will publish a list of all responding organisations. [32659]

Mr. George Howarth: We have received 116 responses. I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 513, and the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Sanders) on 19 February 1998, Official Report, column 791.

Private Detectives

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a licensing system for private detectives. [32589]

Mr. Michael: We intend to introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry, including private detectives, as soon as possible. We will not be able to bring forward early legislation, as we warned before the election, but we have recently completed a consultation exercise with the industry and others on the best way to provide a comprehensive, effective and streamlined system. We want to look beyond the narrow proposals put forwards by the previous Government, which focused only on criminal record checks for the contract-guarding sector of the industry and to put in place regulations which will protect the public by ensuring basic standards of probity, training, supervision and good practice within all sectors of the industry.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters dated 10 September and 20 November 1997 and 8 January 1998 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. Mohammed Amin, husband of Mrs. Stazin Amin, 2 Fir Grove. [32592]

Mr. Straw: The correspondence was transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 20 August 1997. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will respond to my right hon. Friend's letters, and I am sure he will do so without any further delay.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters dated 11 November and 18 December 1997 and 22 January 1998 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mrs. Haslin Nasrin, 58 Clitheroe Road. [32593]

Mr. Straw: I have now replied to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Solihull, dated 23 February 1998, concerning his constituent Dr. Zaw, Dr. Zaw's mother and their passports. [32314]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Shortly. Dr. Zaw's mother's case has been decided.

European Convention Human Rights

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Church of England regarding the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law; what further meetings he expects to hold with representatives of the Church; and if he will make a statement. [31733]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A meeting was held on 22 December 1997 between Home Office officials and representatives of the Church of England and other Churches, at which a number of points of concern to the Church were discussed. My noble Friend the Lord Williams of Mostyn also had discussions with the right Rev. Prelate, the Bishop of Ripon. Following those meetings, and debates in Another Place, the Government brought forward an amendment to the Human Rights Bill to remove the ability of Ministers to make remedial orders amending Church Measures. The Other Place also passed a number of other amendments relating to Church matters, against the advice of the Government. In the debate on the Second Reading of the Bill on 16 February 1998, Official Report, columns 779-80,my right hon. Friend announced that before coming to a final conclusion on those amendments, he would be happy to discuss the questions at issue further with representatives of the Churches. A meeting has been arranged for next week.

Prisoners (Literacy)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of adult prisoners who are functionally illiterate; and if he will make a statement. [32100]

Ms Quin: Knowledge about literacy rates among prisoners is derived from the results of the basic skills screening test for numeracy and literacy which prisoners are invited, but not required, to take. These suggest that, while very few prisoners are actually illiterate, 60 per cent. of the prison population need help to improve their communication skills.

The Prison Service strives to improve levels of literacy among prisoners by focusing its education provision on the core curriculum of key basic education skills (reading, writing and numbers) life and social skills and information technology skills.

Proportional Representation

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seats were won by the Labour Party in (a) the Scotland region and (b) England and Wales in his Department's simulation of the 1994 European elections using the d'Hondt divisor and the Ste-Lague divisor. [30825]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Home Office officials calculated the effect of using different divisors, based on the results of the 1994 European Parliamentary elections, in six of the eleven proposed electoral regions. In five of them, the Labour Party would have won the same number of seats using the d'Hondt and Sainte-Lague divisors. They were:

East Midlands: 3 seats

London: 6 seats

North East: 3 seats

South West: 2 seats

Wales: 3 seats.

In Scotland, the Labour Party would have won four seats with the d'Hondt divisor and three seats with the Sainte-Lague divisor.

Sex Offenders

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list treatment programmes for sex offenders funded by his Department; what assessment he has made of their effectiveness; what proportion of (a) convicted child sex abusers, (b) convicted rapists and (c) those convicted of other sexual abuses of adult women receive treatment; and what plans he has to extend the provision of sex offender treatment programmes. [31085]

Ms Quin: Sex offender treatment programmes are run, and funded, by both the Prison Service and the Probation Service. The Prison Service sex offender treatment programme (SOTP) consists of four elements: the core programme for all sex offenders; the booster programme, a follow-up to the core programme; the adapted programme for sex offenders with learning difficulties; and the extended programme for offenders who are at highest risk. The latter two programmes are an extension to the original SOTP which are being introduced in 1998–99. The recently appointed Director of Regimes is examining future work in this area.

Records are not available centrally as yet which list by offence the numbers of sex offenders who have completed the SOTP.

The Home Office probation unit provides funding for the Wolvercote sex offenders clinic. This centre provides a national residential treatment service. It has 21 places, 16 of which are reserved for referrals from the Probation Service. The Home Office pays the full weekly charge of £595 for parole board referrals, and £405 per week for Probation Service referrals. The local probation service pays the balance of the fee.

Most treatment for sex offenders is arranged locally by individual probation services. Probation services run these sex offender treatment programmes in co-operation with adjacent services or in partnership with specialist organisations. Treatment programmes arranged by probation services are available to sex offenders on release from imprisonment and to those on community supervision. Programme content and delivery are evolving in the light of inspection and research into both prison-based and community provision and an accreditation process for community based programmes is being considered.

The Home Office is committed to a long-term evaluation of the effectiveness of sex offender treatment programmes. To this end, it funds the sex offender treatment evaluation project (STEP) team, based at the Wolvercote Clinic. Results are not expected for some time, but similar programmes in the United States and Canada have reduced the rate of offending by about 25 per cent.

Totalisator Board

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) loan guarantees and (b) increased borrowing approvals the Tote has received in the last three months. [32690]

Mr. George Howarth: The Tote has neither sought nor received any external loan guarantees. In the last three months, it has negotiated increased borrowings with its bankers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Food Safety Research

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current status of the all-Ireland Institute of Public Health, agreed to in December 1995 by the then Minister for Health in Northern Ireland and the Government of the Irish Republic. [30806]

Mr. Worthington: The Institute of Public Health will become operational following the appointment of a Director. An advertisement for the recruitment of the Institute's Director has been placed in newspapers and professional journals.

Civil Servants

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors led to her recent decision to appoint as Under-Secretary in her Department a candidate not proposed by the Appointments Board convened for that purpose; which individuals in which Civil Service positions constituted that board; and if she will make a statement. [31317]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The appointment in question was a transfer to a new senior post in Central Secretariat to meet the growing and prospective workload generated by the political talks and the associated need to prepare for a devolved administration. Given that the responsibilities of the post include the provision of support and advice to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and her Ministers, it was decided, exceptionally, that the appointment would be subject to her endorsement. After an interview with the candidate recommended to me the Secretary of State decided not to endorse his appointment. The Chairman of the selection panel then submitted the name of a second suitable candidate whom the Secretary of State also interviewed. The Secretary of State then endorsed his appointment. The selection panel was chaired by John Semple (Head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service), and its members were Pat Carvill (Permanent Secretary, DENI) and Clive Gowdy (Permanent Secretary, DHSS).

Finbar Ross

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to date regarding the request for extradition of Finbar Ross from the United States of America. [31996]

Mr. Ingram: It is the practice of the relevant authorities not to give details of the actions being taken to secure the apprehension of wanted persons or the progress thereof. To do so could undermine the effectiveness of those actions.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many works of art she has borrowed for use in her offices; which organisations she has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance she received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31567]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Vehicle Registration Numbers

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the issue of age-related registration numbers for (a) vintage cars and (b) other vintage vehicles. [32062]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland under its chief executive, Mr. Brendan Magee. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brendan Magee to Mr. David Trimble, dated 2 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about the issue of age-related registration marks for vintage cars and other vintage vehicles.

In Northern Ireland, registration marks are not directly age related and historically all registration series were used to exhaustion. As a result there is an extremely limited supply of old marks available. For some years there are no marks at all left and for others only a handful. The policy has been developed of saving old registration marks for vehicles of real historical significance such as very rare models, prototypes or vehicles associated with a particular event.

Other vehicles have to be registered with a registration mark from a current series, of course if the registration of the vehicle is known and the applicant can satisfy DVLNI as to the identity of the vehicle, the old registration mark is restored.

A meeting has been arranged with the office holders of the Association of Old Vehicles Clubs NI Ltd. on 8 March to discuss ways of dealing with their concerns.

Inward Investment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on recent inward investment to Northern Ireland from (a) Japan, (b) South Korea, (c) Taiwan, (d) Hong Kong, (e) China and (f) Singapore. [31962]

Mr. Ingram: Details of externally owned investment projects from the six locations which have been assisted by the Industrial Development Board to locate or invest in Northern Ireland in each of the last three financial years are set out in the tables.

Parades Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the names of the members of Parades Commission since its establishment, the dates of their appointments and where appropriate resignations, the length of the normal period of service and the salaries to be paid to the Chairman and to each member. [32256]

Mr. Ingram: On 26 March 1997 the previous Government appointed Mr. Alistair Graham as Chairman, and Mr. David Hewitt, Rev. Roy Magee, Mr. Frank Guckian and Mrs. Berna McIvor as members of the Parades Commission. The appointments were for a period of two years. Rev. Magee resigned with effect from 31 December 1997 and Mrs. McIvor with effect from 18 February 1998.

On 19 February 1998 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appointed Mr. Alistair Graham as Chairman of the Parades Commission for a period of one year. She also appointed as members Mr. David Hewitt and Mr. Frank Guckian for a period of one year; and Mr. Tommy Cheevers, Mr. Glen Barr, Mr. Aidan Canavan and Mrs. Rose Anne McCormick for a period of two years. The Chairman of the Parades Commission receives remuneration of £30,000 per annum, which is paid to his employer; and each of the members £25,000 per annum.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the sums paid to date to each member by the Parades Commission and under such headings as may be convenient other sums paid to such members which have arisen in respect of their work. [32257]

Mr. Ingram: In the period 26 March 1997 to 26 January 1998, the Chairman of the Parades Commission received remuneration of £11,750. In the same period two of the three members who are paid on a monthly basis, received £20,833 each, and the third, £18,750; while the other, who is paid on a quarterly basis, also received £18,750. The amount paid to the Chairman is relatively low because payment is made on the basis of invoices received from his employer. In the same period, a total of £6,963 was paid to the Chairman and members by way of travel, subsistence and other incidental expenses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Petroleum Stocks

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the adequacy of strategic stocks of petroleum products. [31695]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The oil crises of the 1970s, and the economic damage caused by the two oil price hikes, led to the creation of the International Energy Agency and international agreements on holding stocks of oil and procedures to deal with an oil supply disruption. These arrangements were restricted to oil because of its key role in energy supply and because a large proportion of reserves were located in potentially less stable areas. European legislation based on Article 103 (difficulties in supply of certain products) of the Treaty led to provisions for individual countries to hold oil stocks. These provisions remain in place and the UK is required to keep stocks of oil equal to or above 76½ days worth of consumption at any one time. The latest provisional data for stocks as at 1 January 1998 show the UK as having 13.2 million tonnes of oil products (including the product equivalent of stocks of crude oil), equal to 78 days worth of consumption. This is considered to be more than adequate, especially given the level of our indigenous resources, to meet the UK's contribution towards an international response to an oil supply shortage.

Exports (Iran)

Mr. Green: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what current guidance is given to British firms wishing to export to Iran. [32573]

Mrs. Roche: The Department of Trade and Industry provides advice and information to UK firms on opportunities for business in Iran together with guidance on UK strategic export controls.

Energy Saving

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she will take to encourage retailers of electricity to promote energy saving. [32270]

Mr. Battle: The Director General of Electricity Supply sets standards of performance requiring Regional Electricity Companies to promote the efficient use of electricity. The standards require the companies to undertake, before April 1998, projects designed to save over 6,000 gigawatt hours of electricity. The Review of Utility Regulation being undertaken by my Department is considering, among other matters, the environmental aspects of utility regulation and a Green Paper will be issued in the near future.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the estimated costs of work still to be carried out in relation to preparing UKAEA's D2670 plant at Dounreay Nuclear Establishment to enable the reprocessing of spent fuel from the ICI TRIGA reactor at Billingham. [31734]

Mr. Battle: The costs for modifying the D2670 plant are covered by the contractual arrangements between UKAEA and ICI and are therefore commercially confidential.

Inward Investment

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to publish the proposed draft concordat on inward investment. [32202]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 3 December 1997, Official Report, column 255.

Radio Communications Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total complement of staff in the Radio Communications Agency, at what grades; and at which locations. [24690]

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the possibility that the multilateral agreement on investment may lead to an increase in litigation. [32094]

Mrs. Roche: The dispute settlement provisions of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) are the method by which it will be enforced, if necessary. If signatories apply their MAI obligations in good faith, dispute settlement cases should be rare, as they are under the similar provisions of the many bilateral investment treaties which already exist both for the UK and world-wide.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the potential for increased power to be given to large multinational companies through the MAI. [32095]

Mrs. Roche: The Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) would benefit all investors, large and small. All, however, remain subject to the national laws of the countries in which they operate.

Mr. Reed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received about the multilateral agreement on investment; and if she will make a statement. [31975]

Mrs. Roche: We have received representations from many interested parties, including Members of Parliament, members of the public, business, unions and non-governmental organisations.

Industrial Tribunals (Cost)

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost to public funds of holding industrial tribunals in each of the last five years. [31999]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The administration of industrial tribunals in Great Britain became the responsibility of an executive agency, the Employment Tribunals Service, on 1 April 1997. Details of its expenditure for 1997–98 and beyond will be published in the Agency's annual report and accounts. Expenditure on the running costs of industrial tribunals in Great Britain in each of the last five years was as follows:

Year	£ million
1996–97	36.8
1995–96	34.7
1994–95	33.3
1993–94	[1]21.8
1992–93	[1]19.9

[1] Excludes rent/rates and building maintenance costs which are not readily available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

All figures exclude capital expenditure, information on which is not available on a consistent basis.

Business Links

Mr. Pearson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the (a) amount and (b) proportion of overall budget spent by each business link on administration in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97. [32085]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is not available. Business Links take a number of different forms. For example, some operate as separate entities jointly owned by their local partners while others operate as subsidiaries of their local partners. We thus do not manage Business Links directly but make a contribution to the cost of the services they provide, including a provision for reasonable over-head costs. But we do not collect detailed information on the costs of administering the services they provide.

Free Zone (North Korea)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice and facilities are available to British businesses regarding the Rajin-Sonbong free economic and trade zone in North Korea. [31957]

Mrs. Roche: There are no diplomatic relations between the UK and North Korea and no British representation in North Korea. We are thus unable to offer advice to British businesses about it.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Mid-Essex Local Radio

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on when the Radio Authority is expected to announce the successful bid for the Mid-Essex local radio licence applications. [32038]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Decisions on the award of licences to operate commercial radio stations, including the timing of announcement of such decisions, are wholly a matter for the Radio Authority. However, I understand that the Radio Authority expect to announce their decision on the award of a small-scale independent local radio licence within Mid-Essex on Thursday 5 March 1998.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26631]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 5 February 1998]: In 1996–97 the cost of Ministerial overseas travel was £50,385. Figures for the financial year to date are £36,776. Information is not readily available for Ministerial overseas travel in 1995–96, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Touring Opera Companies

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much public funding was given to touring opera companies in the last three available years; what was the breakdown of this funding; and if he will make a statement. [31398]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The table gives a breakdown of grant-in-aid allocated by the Arts Council of England to touring opera companies operated in England for the most recent three years for which figures are available.

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26628]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information is given in the following tables.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations his Department has received regarding the future of the high speed Channel Tunnel rail link: and if he will make a statement. [31838]

Mr. Tom Clarke: This Department has not received any representations regarding the future of the high speed Channel Tunnel rail link.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what analysis his Department has made of the number of additional tourists to and from Europe, and the value of any additional inward tourism to the United Kingdom that would arise from the introduction of a high speed Channel Tunnel rail link; [31840]

(2) what projections his Department made of the impact on the United Kingdom tourist industry of the high speed Channel Tunnel rail link; and if he will make a statement. [31839]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department has conducted no analysis into the potential effects on the United Kingdom tourist industry arising from the introduction of a high speed Channel Tunnel rail link.

DEFENCE

Anthrax

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the vaccination of HM forces against anthrax bacteria. [31472]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The measures being taken at any given time to protect UK forces against chemical and biological weapons are based upon the prevailing operational circumstances and the latest threat assessment. In the light of Iraq's failure to account properly for its acknowledged programmes to acquire weapons of mass destruction, a range of equipment—chemical and biological agent detectors, warning and reporting systems, individual and collective protection, decontamination equipment, and medical countermeasures—has already been sent to the Gulf theatre for use by UK forces if necessary.

In order that MOD has access to the best possible medical and scientific advice, I have established an independent Advisory Group on Medical Countermeasures, chaired by Professor Peter Blain of Newcastle University and made up of leading outside medical experts. Having sought and received advice from the new Group on the current situation, I have decided that UK service personnel and MOD civilians in the Gulf region should be strongly recommended to accept immunisation against anthrax. The vaccination programme will commence later this week and involve personnel receiving three injections over the next six weeks and a fourth injection after a further six months, using the UK manufactured and licensed anthrax vaccine. No other vaccine will be co-administered with the anthrax vaccine and special arrangements have been made to ensure that the medical records of all those involved are properly annotated to register whether they receive the vaccine.

The US and Canadian Governments are providing vaccination for their forces in the region in the same timescale, and are making similar announcements.

I have written to those Service and civilian personnel who are being advised to accept anthrax immunisation explaining the background to this decision. A copy of the test of my letter and the accompanying information leaflet are being placed in the Library of the House.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times the spouses of Ministers in his Department have accompanied Ministers on overseas visits; and what was the cost of their travel and other expenses. [25168]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 278.

Holy Loch

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the risks of disturbing material containing Cobalt 60 and PCB in the Holy Loch during clean-up operations. [31871]

Mr. Spellar: An extensive environmental radioactivity survey, which focused on Cobalt-60, was conducted jointly by the MoD and US Navy in 1992. This concluded that there was no radiological hazard to the public in the Holy Loch area. An Environmental Assessment Report commissioned by my Department from independent specialist consultants, published in early 1997, concluded that seabed clearance was unlikely to cause a measurable increase in exposure.

The Scottish Environmental Protection Agency undertook a study last year on the potential for contamination, including by PCBs, which concluded that disturbance of sediment during clearance was unlikely to result in significant toxicity. Other work by the Centre for Environmental, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science at Burnham supported this view.

Clearance will be governed by a comprehensive environmental protocol. Ecotoxicology studies form a constant component in the monitoring regime. Indications of a rise in toxicity will result in the lifting of debris being suspended.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funding the American Government will provide for the removal of waste from the site of their previously occupied Scottish naval base. [31964]

Mr. Spellar: I assume the question refers to Holy Loch in Scotland. The terms of occupation of the site place no obligation on the American Government to fund the clearance of waste.

Group Captain Ingle

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons Group Captain Lagle's request for redress of grievance was rejected; and what factors underlay the length of time taken to reach this decision. [32268]

Mr. Spellar: I assume that the question refers to Group Captain Ingle. It would not have been possible to grant Group Captain Ingle's request for consideration of redress without a waiver of the normal time limits. A waiver was not given because his concerns had been addressed by the review of POW pay deductions, the results of which were notified to the House on 24 July 1997, Official Report, column 722. The decision on the waiver was not taken until this review was completed.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the construction projects and work conducted at RAF Menwith Hill since 1 January

1994 and paid for under the bilateral cost-sharing arrangement between the United Kingdom Government and the United States Government. [30470]

Mr. Spellar: Construction Projects at RAF Menwith Hill conducted under the bilateral cost-sharing arrangement for which detailed planning clearance has been sought and received since 1 January 1994 are listed:

Land Ranges

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the DERA Land Ranges Rationalisation Study Stage 2 requested information from MoD departments about re-provisioning of work carried out at Pendine; [30821]

(2) what submissions have been sought from MoD departments on the re-provisioning of small and medium calibre work carried out at Pendine; [30823]

(3) if the DERA Land Ranges Rationalisation Study Stage 2 only requested information from MoD departments on re-provisioning of work carried out at Eskmeals and Shoeburyness. [30820]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 23 February 1998]: As part of the second phase of its land ranges rationalisation study last year, the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency consulted both the Ministry of Defence and British industry to assess the total volume of work likely to be available over the next five years. The data were gathered on a project-by-project basis, on both the technical requirements and the funding available for the proposed testing over the next five years, including small and medium calibre work conducted at Pendine.

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27764]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Staff Qualifications

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what minimum standards of qualification have been set by the DEO(W) for EPO and PMO graded staff. [31938]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

European Regional Test Centre

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the establishments which are being considered for the NATO European Regional Test Centre for small and medium calibre weapons. [30822]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The land ranges rationalisation study, compiled by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, makes no specific recommendations on the relocation of the NATO European Regional Test Centre for small and medium calibre weapons. Some facilities exist at the DERA establishments at Fort Halstead and West Freugh. Royal Ordnance has sites at Nottingham and Foldingworth that offer a capability comparable with that at DERA Pendine. Ely Cartridges have a range at New Radnor currently owned by MoD.

Prisoners of War (Pay)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment was made by his Department, when compiling the report on the pay of prisoners of war during World War II, of the true value to the individual prisoners of war of services supplied to them by the enemy during World War II. [32267]

Mr. Spellar: The task of the Review was to examine the policy decisions taken during and immediately after the Second World War in respect of the pay of officer prisoners of war and protected personnel, particularly in relation to pay deductions, and to see if these were properly taken at the time. It found that the question of the value which those in captivity could obtain for their money, and the complaints received that this was inadequate, were properly understood and considered at the time and that where possible and appropriate, measures were taken to adjust pay matters accordingly. This subject is addressed in the report of the Review.

Chinese Nationals

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Chinese nationals are currently working in (a) the MoD and (b) its agencies; and if he will list them and give details of the work which they are carrying out. [32346]

Mr. Spellar: My Department does not keep central records of the nationality of civilian staff and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Barristers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many barristers on the panels for common law and chancery work are (a) women and (b) from the ethnic minorities. [31514]

The Attorney-General: The number of women on the panels is as follows:

Panels	Number
Common Law panel	0
Chancery panel	0
Common Law supplementary panel	13
Directors disqualification panel	9
Provincial panel	3
Total	25

There are currently no data available in relation to how many of the barristers on these panels are from the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many barristers are on the panels he uses for common law and chancery work; and how they are selected. [31515]

The Attorney-General: I maintain five panels of barristers for common law and chancery work. They are as set out.

Panels	Number
Common Law panel	11
Chancery panel	10
Common Law supplementary panel	72
Directors disqualification panel	45
Provincial panel	62
Total	200

Barristers on the panels have been appointed personally by me or my predecessors on the basis of merit, after the Treasury Solicitor's Department or the Government department concerned initiated inquiries and prepared recommendations.

Specialist Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many counsel he retains for specialist work; what is the criteria for inclusion on the list; and how often the list is reviewed. [31511]

The Attorney-General: Twenty counsel are appointed for specialist work as Standing Counsel to various departments. Standing Counsel are appointed for their expertise in the relevant area. The list is reviewed when an appointment falls vacant.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Development

14. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he next plans to meet representatives of local government to discuss development issues. [30635]

Mr. Raynsford: This morning, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister chaired a meeting of the Central Local Partnership, a regular forum for major issues affecting local government. Two further meetings of the Partnership are planned this year.

Water Charging

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received on water charging policy. [30637]

Angela Eagle: We have received representations about a range of water charging issues including the high level of charges and the fairness of different methods of charging.

Local Government Finance

16. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on his proposals to reform capping of local authorities. [30638]

Ms Armstrong: We have received a number of representations on the future of capping.

23. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations have been received on the 1998–99 local government financial settlement. [30645]

Ms Armstrong: The Department received 406 written representations within the deadline for responses. I, and other Ministers at the Department, also met the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government, delegations from 95 local authorities, and one special interest group during the consultation period.

25. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of average council tax levels in 1998–99. [30647]

Mr. Raynsford: It would be premature to make such an assessment until all local authorities have set their budgets.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans next to meet the Local Government Association to discuss the SSA methodology. [30627]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department will meet shortly with the Local Government Association and other local authority representative organisations to begin its 1998 round of discussions on Standard Spending Assessment methodology and related issues. In addition, SSAs continue to feature in our discussions with the LGA and others in our current review of local government finance.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations have been received on the 1998–99 local government financial settlement. [30634]

Ms Armstrong: The Department received 406 written representations within the deadline for responses. I, and other Ministers at the Department, also met the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government, delegations from 95 local authorities, and one special interest group during the consultation period.

Greater London Authority

17. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish the White Paper on the Government's plans for a new greater London authority. [30639]

Mr. Raynsford: The White Paper setting out proposals for a Greater London Authority will be published in the week commencing 23 March 1998.

Regional Development Agencies

18. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Cornwall on his proposals to set up regional development agencies. [30640]

Mr. Caborn: In response to our consultation on regional development agencies in England, we received 253 letters from the South West region, 58 of which were from Cornwall. Since then, we have received a large number of pro-forma representations about matters relating to Cornwall, including our proposals for RDAs, as well as further individual representations.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he will take to ensure political balance in, and industrial expertise amongst, government appointments to regional development agencies. [32681]

Mr. Caborn: We have advertised publicly for candidates and are seeking nominations from a broad range of organisations including those representing business and industry. We intend that boards be business led, but they will also need an effective presence from the public sector which is also very active in the regional economy. Political balance is not a primary consideration in making appointments to the RDAs. Individuals will be appointed on their merits for the particular expertise and background that they will bring to the RDA. However, we propose that local government representation on each board will reflect the balance of the electorate in a region as regards type and size of authority, geographical spread, and political balance.

Offices of the Regions

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he proposes to increase the accountability of the Government offices of the regions. [30641]

Angela Eagle: The Government Offices are already fully accountable to Parliament through the Ministers of the three departments of which they are part. The three departments are Environment, Transport and the Regions; Trade and Industry; and Education and Employment.

Housing (North-east Lancashire)

20. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to assist with the renovation of dilapidated housing stock in north-east Lancashire. [30642]

Mr. Raynsford: My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing visited Pendle on 24 February to see at first hand the particular problems in East Lancashire and to discuss ideas which Pendle Borough Council have for addressing them.

Parish Councils

21. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on the role of parish councils in rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [30643]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Minister and Local Government and Housing on 3 June 1997, Official Report, column 169.

House Building

22. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his target for the proportion of new homes to be accommodated on land which has been developed. [30644]

Mr. Raynsford: We expect local planning authorities to be able to raise the national proportion of new homes to be built on previously developed land to 60 per cent. over the next ten years. We will also expect Regional Planning Conferences to draw up regional targets for inclusion in their draft Regional Planning Guidance.

Local Government Reform

24. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his consultation on the future of local government. [30646]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister launched a wide ranging consultation paper on modernising local government on 9 February, when he published the consultation paper "Local Democracy and Community Leadership".

A second paper, "Local Services Under Best Value", has been published today. Further papers on the new ethical framework and on aspects of local government finance will be published shortly. Following consultation, the Government will set out their firm proposals in a White Paper this Summer.

High Explosives

26. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research (i) the Environment Agency and (ii) his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the environmental effects of high explosives; and if he will make a statement. [30453]

Angela Eagle: My Department and the Health and Safety Executive sponsored a consultancy on the environmental impact of accidents involving explosive manufacturing and storage facilities in 1996. The work was specifically related to the implementation of EU Directive 96/82/EC on the control of major-accident hazards involving dangerous substances (the "Seveso II" Directive). Discussions are continuing between the industry, the Environment Agencies and DETR to evaluate the implications of this report.

Local Authorities (Best Value)

27. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to seek best value in the services that they provide. [30648]

Ms Armstrong: We have today published a consultation paper on the framework for improving local services through best value. Copies of the paper have been deposited in the Library of the House and a copy of the paper is being sent to all Members of Parliament.

The consultation paper, which is the second in our series aimed at modernising local government, seeks comments on the framework that we intend to put in place to require local authorities to deliver local services to the standard that people want and at a price they are prepared to pay. It will require continuous improvements in performance, including quality and efficiency, and encourage local authorities to examine every way to secure improvements, including working in partnership with the private sector when this will deliver better performance.

Speed Cameras

39. Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the advantages of devoting resources from speeding fines directly towards the running costs of speed cameras. [30661]

51. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to allow for the reinvestment of income from traffic speed cameras in local authority traffic calming schemes. [30673]

Dr. Strang: Research conducted by my Department and the Home Office has shown that enforcement cameras can offer a cost-effective method of tackling speeding. The Government are currently considering the funding regime to establish whether more can be done to encourage their use.

Train Services (Punctuality)

40. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of train operating companies which ran services which performed with worse punctuality in the last quarter of 1997 than in the same period of 1996. [30662]

49. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of train operating companies which ran services which performed with worse punctuality in the last quarter of 1997 than in the same period of 1996. [30671]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Dartford (Mr. Stoate) and for Tamworth (Mr. Jenkins) on 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 629. I would add that the comparative figures given in these answers were for twelve-month periods to the end of 1997 and to the end of 1996 as published in the Franchising Director's latest Quarterly Bulletin. Performance within the Autumn Quarter 1997 was poorer in relation to Autumn Quarter 1996. The Franchising Director expressed his concerns and disappointment with performance levels generally and is looking to Train Operating Companies and Railtrack to work together to achieve improvement.

Road Schemes

41. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how soon after the completion of his review of road schemes he plans to proceed with those with highest priority. [30663]

Dr. Strang: The relative priority to be given to the various options for improving our transport system is a key issue in both the Integrated Transport Review and the Roads Review. I cannot at this stage say how quickly any road schemes which form part of our integrated strategy might be taken forward.

Cars (Fuel Efficiency)

42. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his proposals to improve the fuel efficiency of new cars. [30664]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are a number of measures and initiatives to increase fuel efficiency in road vehicles, including the 6 per cent. annual fuel duty increases announced by the Chancellor in July last year, the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force and the EU CO_2 from cars strategy. We will also be considering further measures as part of the integrated transport policy and the climate change programme that we will be developing later this year.

Drink Driving

43. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what new measures he is taking to reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries caused by drinking and driving. [30665]

Dr. Strang: A number of proposals are discussed in the consultation paper "Combating Drink Driving: next steps" which was published on 2 February. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library.

Channel Tunnel

44. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of passenger traffic forecasts for the channel tunnel. [30666]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have not made any forecasts of Channel Tunnel passenger traffic. This is a matter for Eurotunnel who operate the shuttle trains for cars and coaches and who are paid a charge in respect of passengers passing through the Tunnel on Eurostar trains.

Radioactive Material (Air Transport)

45. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce further regulations relating to the transportation of radioactive material by air. [30667]

Dr. Strang: The International Civil Aviation Organisation will revise its requirements for the transport of radioactive materials in the 2001/02 edition of its "Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air". It is my intention to amend the Air Navigation (Dangerous Goods) Regulations to adopt them from 1 January 2001.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

46. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the measures Her Majesty's Government plan to take to alleviate the problems facing small and medium businesses facing blight on the channel tunnel rail link route. [30668]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London and Continental Railways, under the Development Agreement which remains in force, are obliged to follow compulsory purchase rules and honour the undertakings given to businesses during the passage of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996. The provisions include: purchase on request of business premises with a rateable value of less than £18,000; all businesses to receive regular information and the offer of estimates of compensation; and early negotiations where previously promised.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if all agreements reached between London and Continental and landowners on the line of the Channel Tunnel Link route between Kent and London will be honoured, separately identifying those relating to timescales and funding for parallel operations. [32673]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For agreements reached in the near future the Secretary of State is willing to provide on request written assurances that if the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Development Agreement were to be terminated he would take on the purchases on those terms that would apply had compulsory purchase powers been used. Claims would be settled by agreement or, failing this, by reference to the Lands Tribunal.

Speed Limits

47. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on speed limits in residential areas. [30669]

Dr. Strang: We are working to encourage greater compliance with speed limits in urban areas, which could result in a substantial reduction in deaths and injuries. We have also encouraged the creation of 20 mph zones, and I have already announced that we intend to give local authorities the power to decide whether reductions to 20 mph should be made in appropriate cases without reference to the Department.

Fishing Industry

48. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve maritime safety in the fishing industry. [30670]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Several measures are currently planned to improve maritime safety in the fishing industry. These include bringing into force regulations implementing EC Directives on occupational health and safety on board fishing vessels: further work with industry on the development of a Code of Safe Practice for smaller fishing vessels and a joint initiative with fishing industry organisations to reduce accidents and encourage positive attitudes to safety.

Freight (Rail Transport)

50. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage inward investors to make arrangements to transport their products to EU countries by rail; and if he will make a statement. [30672]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are spending more than ever before on rail freight grants to cover the extra cost of transporting goods by rail. We have secured important commitments from Eurotunnel and the French Government to increase rail freight through the Channel Tunnel and beyond.

House Purchase

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce his proposals to facilitate house purchases. [30626]

Ms Armstrong: My Department has commissioned a wide-ranging study aimed at identifying the root causes of delays and other areas of inefficiency in the home buying process. I expect to be in a position to announce the outcome in the autumn.

China

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will discuss human rights and Tibet with the Chinese authorities during his visit to China in June; and if he will make a statement on those discussions on his return. [30415]

Mr. Prescott: During my visit to China in June, I plan to discuss a broad range of issues and expect to make a public statement at the end of my trip. On my last visit to China, in January 1997 as Deputy Leader of the Opposition, I held useful discussions with Chinese leaders on human rights issues. This included discussion about one individual who was later released.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the engagements which (a) he and (b) the Minister for Transport undertook in the United Kingdom in the course of their duties during January indicating in each case which were accessed by (a) car, (b) train, (c) aeroplane and car, (d) aeroplane and train and (e) other means. [28945]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 10 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend and I undertook a wide range of engagements during January. These took place in this and other Departments' offices, in the House, in other parts of London and elsewhere in the UK. We travelled to and from these engagements by whatever means were most convenient to enable us to conduct Government business most efficiently. This included walking, car and public transport.

White Asbestos

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned into the protection of workers from white asbestos; what representations he has received from the Health and Safety Commission on such protection; and if he will make a statement. [30733]

Mr. Meacher: I have asked the Health and Safety Commission to develop proposals on a full range of regulatory measures to provide further protection for workers from all forms of asbestos. These measures include consideration of a mechanism and timetable for introducing a domestic ban on the import, supply and use of white asbestos. I will be making an announcement shortly on how the Government intend to proceed.

Travellers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to make damage to sites by travelling people a criminal offence; [31050]

(2) what plans he has to introduce compensation for private landowners and local authorities who have had damage done to their property by travelling people. [31051]

Mr. Raynsford: I have considerable sympathy for landowners who suffer from damage to their land from unauthorised encampments.

We have no plans to make damage to land by travelling people a specific criminal offence, nor to introduce compensation for private landowners and local authorities who have suffered damage to their land. Trespassers on land are bound by the general criminal law as is anyone else. If they behave in a threatening or violent way, or commit offences such as criminal damage, the police may take appropriate action to deal with them.

Section 61 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 enables the police to direct trespassers to leave land if there are two or more persons present with the common purpose of residing there, and if any of the persons has caused damage to the land or to property on the land, or has used threatening, abusive or insulting behaviour towards the occupier, a member of his family or an employee or agent of his; or if the trespassers have between them six or more vehicles on the land. Failure to comply as soon as practicable with a direction to leave, or return to the land as a trespasser within 3 months of the date of the direction, are offences attracting a maximum fine of £2,500, or a maximum 3 months' imprisonment, or both. An offence under section 61 envisages serious nuisance having been caused, or being likely. It therefore carries a higher maximum penalty than an offence under section 77, of failing to comply with a local authority direction to leave land.

Local authorities have long been advised by my Department to consider providing emergency stopping places where gipsies can camp for short periods whilst visiting their area. The provision of such sites on council land, with basic sanitary and refuse collection facilities, may help to deter gipsies from camping on more unsuitable public or private land and from causing a nuisance to local people.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the powers available to (a) local authorities and (b) private landowners to remove travellers from their land. [31052]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 77 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 gives all local authorities in England and Wales powers to direct any unauthorised campers to leave land where they are camped without consent. Failure to leave the land as soon as practicable when directed to do so, or return to the land with a vehicle within 3 months of the date of the direction, are offences attracting a maximum fine of £1,000.

It is open to any private landowner to ask his local authority to use their discretionary powers in section 77 of the 1994 Act to direct unauthorised campers to leave his land. If the authority choose not to do so, it is open to the private landowner to seek repossession of his land through the civil courts.

Damp Homes

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of homes that are affected by problems of (a) damp penetration, (b) condensation and (c) black mould growth. [31338]

Mr. Raynsford: Detailed estimates of the frequency and distribution of damp penetration, condensation and mould growth were published in the Department's "English House Condition Survey 1991: Energy Report" (Stationery Office 1996, Chapter 14) and copies placed in the Library. Estimates from the 1996 EHCS will be included in the next Energy Report, which is due for publication in Autumn this year.

London City Airport

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will complete his review of the proposed increase in the number of air traffic movements at London City Airport. [31253]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 February 1998]: We expect to announce soon the Secretary of State's decision on whether or not to call in for his own determination the planning application for which the LDDC have resolved to grant planning permission.

Community Alarm Schemes

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to issue guidance on the statutory powers available to local authorities to provide community alarm schemes for their residents; and if he will make a statement. [31462]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans to issue such guidance. We are seeking views, in our consultation paper 'Local Democracy and Community Leadership', on local authorities' powers to meet the needs and priorities of their local communities, including the provision of such services as community alarms.

Smuggling

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many vehicles involved in tobacco and alcohol smuggling and bootlegging have been found to be (a) untaxed, (b) uninsured, (c) stolen, (d) containing stolen parts and (e) driven by people who have no driving licences or whose licences have been withdrawn in each year since January 1993; [31519]

(2) how many prosecutions have been brought by trading standards departments of pubs, clubs, restaurants and off licences which have been selling bootlegged or smuggled alcohol in each year since 1993. [31520]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No central records are kept.

Taxi Drivers (London)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the time it takes for a typical applicant for a licence to pass the knowledge test to become a London taxi driver administered by the Public Carriage Office from the day of registration; what was the equivalent figure (a) five and (b) 10 years ago; and what plans he has to reform testing procedures. [31765]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are two stages to 'Knowledge' testing. Once an application for a taxi driver's licence has been accepted the applicant is invited to an 'initial talk' at which the topographical knowledge requirements are explained and the book of routes to be learned ('the Knowledge') is issued. The applicant is then allowed up to two years (extendable on request) to learn the Knowledge and apply for a first examination interview ('an appearance'). The average time between initial talk and first appearance has been:

1997: 484 days.

Thereafter, an applicant may require several appearances. The average time taken between first appearance and becoming licensed has been:

1987: 519 days

1997: 781 days.

The time taken for each stage depends on various factors, including the amount of time which an applicant can devote to Knowledge learning. The standard required of applicants has remained unchanged throughout the period.

Changes to testing procedures which have been introduced by the Public Carriage Office include:

an expanded booklet of the routes to be learned giving greater explanation of what is required;

an updated 'initial talk';

a written test which has to be passed before the applicant is granted a first 'appearance', so that the resources of examiners in oral interviews are not taken unnecessarily;

a revised marking and points system which ensures that candidates who are making progress move forward in the system whilst those who are under-performing revert to a previous stage, again without taking examiners' resources unnecessarily;

a more open assessment system.

Changes which the Public Carriage Office plan for the future include:

an increase in the number of examiners;

adoption of the Business Excellence Model (in progress);

an independent review of the Knowledge process; and an investigation (already commenced) into the possible introduction of a computer-based testing system.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many officials are employed by the Public Carriage Office; and if he will list their grades and salaries. [31764]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Public Carriage Office tell me that staff financed through licence fees are as follows:

Grade	Number	Local pay average per annum
Principal	1	38,152
Senior Executive Officer	1	29,910
Higher Executive Officer	1	24,553
Executive Officer	4	20,080
Administrative Officer	14	14,605
Administrative Assistant	2	11,134
Typist	1	11,134
Paperkeeper	1	12,475
Messenger	1.5	12,475
Senior Knowledge of London Examiner	1	24,553
Knowledge of London Examiner	6	14,605
Chief Inspecting Officer	1	29,910

Grade	Number	Local pay average per annum
Senior Public Carriage Examiner	4	24,553
Public Carriage Examiner	27	20,080

I am similarly told that Public Carriage Staff financed through the Metropolitan Police Fund and not through licence fees (because this is not a licensing function) are as follows:

	Number	Local pay average per annum
Cab Rank Liaison Officer
Executive Officer	1	20,080
Lost Property Office
Higher Executive Officer	1	24,553
Executive Officer	1	20,080
Administrative Officer	8	14,605
Administrative Assistant	1	11,134
Storeman	1	12,016
Messenger	0.5	12,475
Cab Enforcement Section
Police Sergeant	1	36,757
Police Constable	4	33,600

Local pay averages include London Weighting and other allowances.

In addition to the staff figures shown, there is at present a supernumerary police constable in each of the Knowledge of London and Cab Enforcement Sections.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets have been set by the Public Carriage Office as to the number of licensed taxi drivers it intends to recruit in future years. [31767]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Public Carriage Office does not set any targets or limits as to the number of London taxi drivers it licenses. All applicants who meet the criteria are licensed.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are currently registered applicants on the knowledge examination to become a licensed taxi driver; and how many applicants there were in (a) 1970, (b) 1975, (c) 1980, (d) 1985, (e) 1990 and (f) 1995. [31771]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information on the number of registered applicants is not available in a useful form, as it is not known how many people who have initially registered have subsequently decided not to pursue Knowledge testing. The Public Carriage Office tell me that the number of new applicants in the years in question was as follows:

1970: 2,276

1975: 2,244

1980: 2,118

1985: 4,878

1990: 3,821

1995: 3,607 (calculation based on 10 months' data)

1997: 4,107.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each meeting which has taken place between his Department and the Public Carriage Office in the last year indicating its purpose. [31768]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There have been various meetings and discussions on a range of issues, including London minicab regulation, and resources and procedures for Knowledge of London testing for would-be taxi drivers.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the relationship between the Public Carriage Office and his Department indicating to whom the Principal Officer of the Public Carriage Office reports. [31769]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State's statutory responsibility in respect of taxi regulation has been delegated to an Assistant Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Service. The officer in charge of the Public Carriage Office reports to that Assistant Commissioner. The fees charged by the Public Carriage Office are subject to approval by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what annual reports the Public Carriage Office publishes; and if he will place copies of these in the Library. [31834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Public Carriage Office (PCO) does not produce an annual report. The PCO is a branch of the Metropolitan Police Service, and each year the Commissioner presents his Annual Report for the Service to the Home Secretary.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many full-time examiners have been employed by the Public Carriage Office in each of the last 10 years. [31766]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Public Carriage Office tell me that the information in respect of Knowledge of London examiners is as follows:

Year	Number
1989	6
1990	7
1991	7
1992	6.5
1993	7
1994	6.75
1995	6.5
1996	6.5
1997	7
1998	[1]8

[1] Including a supernumerary Police Constable.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Public Carriage Office has to recruit more examiners to test applicants to become a licensed taxi driver. [31770]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Public Carriage Office intend to recruit two additional Knowledge of London Examiners in the coming year, subject to Ministerial approval for the licence fees, and subject to savings being achieved within the PCO.

Leaseholders

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many leaseholders in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each London borough, who bought their properties from local authorities under the Right to Buy scheme, have been required to contribute financially to the cost of improvement works carried out by local authorities to their properties in each of the last five years; and what has been the average amount leaseholders have been required to contribute to the cost of improvement works in (a) and (b). [31651]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally. In 1995 my Department published research on local authority leaseholders as "Leaseholders and Service Charges in Former Local Authority Flats", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. This includes information about levels of service charges including improvements and other works, but it does not include information at the level of detail sought by my hon. Friend.

Mileage Rates

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the bodies accountable to him which pay private mileage rates proportionate to car engine size, setting out the rates payable in each case; and if he will make a statement. [31683]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 27 February 1998]: Following are the rates payable within my department and its Agencies:

Rates per mile in pence

	Engine size in cc
	–1000	1000–1500	1500–2000	+2000
Former DOT standard rate
Up to 4,000 miles pa	27	35.7	42.0	46.0
Over 4,000 miles pa	15.0	19.0	23.0	30.0
Public transport rate		23.8—all engine sizes
Former DOE standard rate
Up to 4,000 miles pa	—	34.0	43.0	47.0
Over 4,000 miles pa	—	19.0	23.0	30.0
Public transport rate		23.8—all engine sizes

These rates are currently being reviewed.

The Vehicle Certification Agency, the Marine Safety Agency and the Coastguard Agency all have the same rates as those for the former DOT. The Highways Agency and the Vehicle Inspectorate have the same rates as the former DOT except that there is no separate rate for up to 1000cc. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency pays 27p up to 1000cc; 35.7p for 1000 to 1500cc and 44.2p over 1500cc. The rates of the Planning Inspectorate and Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre are the same as those for former DOE.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reduce car use by Government departments and the number of car-parking spaces available to Ministers and staff. [32222]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Government Departments will consider the availability of workspace parking spaces when drawing up Green Transport Plans. All Government Departments have been asked to draw up these plans for key buildings with the objective of minimising the environmental impact of their transport activities. The plans will be tailored to each location and the operational needs of individual Departments and the number of parking spaces required will be considered accordingly. The guide to Green Transport Plans issued to Government Departments in September last year explicitly encourages Departments to consider options for reducing or charging for car-parking spaces.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32455]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department will review the number of places and charging policy in preparing its green transport plan.

Northumberland National Park

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the persons he has appointed to the Northumberland National Park Authority and state which of those appointees lives within the park area. [32491]

Angela Eagle: The Secretary of State appoints ten members to the Northumberland National Park Authority. Six of them are appointed to represent the national interest; the remainder are nominated by parish councils in the National Park area. The current appointees are listed. All of them were appointed to the National Park Authority with effect from 1 October 1996.

Peter Forrester

Mr. Bryan Harwood

Mr. Peter Loyd

Mr. David Owen

Mr. Simon Rowarth

Ms Frances Rowe

Mr. Graham Dixon (parish member)

Mr. Clive Emerson (parish member)

Mr. Philip Straker (parish member)

Mr. John Wilson (parish member).

Of these, Mr. Loyd, Mr. Dixon and Mr. Wilson live within the park area.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32473]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has had a Green Transport co-ordinator since the Department was created in June 1997.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32442]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information on employee travel costs for my Department is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Land Development

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (c) national parks and (d) hectares were affected by road building, housing or retail developments; and how many miles of roads were built on (a) to (c) in each of the last 12 years by (i) county and (ii) region. [32318]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on the number of designated area sites affected by road building, housing or retail development is not available. Information on damage to sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) is published, but does not specifically cite damage by road building or housing and retail development. This information is published in "Digest of Environmental Statistics No. 19 1997", table 8.18. A copy of this is available in the House of Commons Library.

Local Authorities and the Highways Agency provide information on road lengths and changes in road lengths each year. However, they are required to provide only brief details of roads built and so statistics of road building in environmentally sensitive areas are not available.

The Department's Land Use Change Statistics for England provide some information on the number of hectares of land changing to highways and road transport, residential and retail uses. The table shows estimates of the number of hectares of land changing use to these three categories, for the period 1985 to 1992 (the latest data available). The figures represent all recorded changes to the specified new use; some of these changes will have been on previously developed sites.

Total land[1] changing to particular developed uses: England

hectares[2]

	New use
	Highways and transportation[3]	Residential	Retail
1985	1,970	8,750	705
1986	1,780	7,050	570
1987	1,725	7,495	615
1988	2,185	7,720	830
1989	1,840	6,070	920

Total land[1] changing to particular developed uses: England

hectares[2]

	New use
	Highways and transportation[3]	Residential	Retail
1990	2,595	8,065	930
1991	1,895	4,990	645
1992	1,875	5,640	680

[1] Estimates of the area of a site changing use, and the year in which the change took place, are made by OS surveyors, sometimes some years after the change happened. When a surveyor is uncertain of the exact year, their estimate is more likely to be for a round number such as 1990, than 1989 or 1991, say. Thus the allocation of change to specific years should be treated with caution.

[2] Rounded to the nearest 5 hectares.

[3] Includes bus stations and car parks.

Land Use Change Statistics.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on Green Belt land in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in England; [32327]

(2) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on greenfield land, excluding Green Belt, in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in England; [32326]

(3) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on recycled land in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in England. [32328]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held centrally. Most decisions on planning applications for out-of-town shopping and leisure developments are taken by local planning authorities. They provide statistical returns of all major "retail, distribution and servicing" applications which they handle, in order to provide an overall picture of planning activity. These data do not classify applications by location. It is, therefore, not feasible at the moment, to assemble such information, except at disproportionate cost.

Social Housing

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will reduce the number of units or hectares in a housing development above which local authorities can require an element of social housing to be provided in the development. [32335]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government consulted on proposed revisions to Circular 13/96: Planning and Affordable Housing in July last year, including one to lower the thresholds above which Local Authorities may require an element of affordable housing to be provided in a housing development. We proposed to lower the thresholds from 40 dwellings or 1.5 hectares normally and 25 dwellings or 1 hectare in Inner London and small rural settlements, to 25 dwellings or 1 hectare and 15 dwellings or 0.5 of a hectare. The Government will shortly be issuing a revised Circular on planning and affordable housing.

Planning Guidelines

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend planning guidelines to allow local authorities greater scope to turn down planning applications on the grounds of poor quality or design. [32334]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities have always had a discretion to refuse planning permission on grounds of poor quality or design. Detailed guidance on design issues are contained in PPG1: General Policy and Principles, published in February 1997.

Council Tax (Carers Discount)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department has written to all local authorities within the last six months to remind them of the requirements of council tax regulations in respect of the carers discount. [32677]

Mr. Raynsford: My officials wrote to all local authorities about the carers discount disregard on 15 September 1997. My officials also wrote to local authorities on 25 February about MENCAP'S report "Simply Disregarded—Why many Council Tax offices are failing the nation's carers", published on 23 February.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to instigate an advertising campaign advising carers of their entitlement to the carers council tax discount. [32341]

Mr. Raynsford: My officials wrote to all local authorities about the carers discount disregard on 15 September 1997 and 25 February. It is the responsibility of local authorities to inform taxpayers about their entitlement to discounts taking into account their individual circumstances.

Minicabs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his proposals for the regulation of minicabs and their drivers in London. [30651]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It remains Government policy that the London minicab trade should be regulated. The Government support the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Bill, introduced by the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young).

Car Advertising

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage adherence to the self-regulatory code on car advertising in other EU member States. [31709]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There is as yet no such EU Code governing the advertising of new cars with regard to road safety consideration. The European Commission hopes to bring forward, in the summer, proposals for voluntary guidelines, similar to the UK voluntary Codes, dealing with car advertising. My Department is keen to advance these proposals during the UK Presidency.

Social Housing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the present legislation concerning the allocation of local authority housing. [31711]

Mr. Raynsford: When we bring forward proposals to implement the Manifesto commitment to place a new duty on local authorities to protect those who are homeless through no fault of their own and are in priority need, these will include consideration of any changes needed to the legislation on the allocation of social housing.

Council Tax

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of levels of increase in council tax in 1998–99. [30621]

Ms Armstrong: It would be premature to make such an assessment until all local authorities have set their budgets.

Correspondence (Femco Projects Ltd.)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will arrange for a substantive reply to be sent to Femco Projects Ltd. following their inquiry sent to Mr. Paul Lancaster of his Department in connection with the Channel Tunnel Link route on 3 February. [32674]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Femco Projects Ltd.'s request for the Secretary of State to offer assurances in relation to a property transaction required detailed discussions and drafting with lawyers. Femco's agent was kept in touch with progress and an agreement was sent on 20 February, and a revision, expressly to meet Femco Project Ltd.'s further concerns, issued on 27 February.

Police Officers (Stansted Airport)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many police officers have been deployed at Stansted Airport over each of the past five years; and how many of these were special constables. [32676]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that the number of police officers and special constables deployed at Stansted Airport over the past five years is as follows:

Calendar year	Number of regular police officers	Number of special constables
1993–94	49	—
1994–95	49	—
1995–96	53	—
1996–97	53	—
1997–98	56	9

Second Homes

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has evaluated into the numbers of second homes let for fewer than 140 days a year. [32656]

Mr. Raynsford: None.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of the exemption of second homes let for fewer than 140 days per year from the uniform business rate in the last year for which figures are available. [32658]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has no information on which to make such an estimate.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by local authority area the numbers of second homes let for fewer than 140 days a year. [32654]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department does not keep this information.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the uniform business rate concession regulations relating to properties let for fewer than 140 days a year; and what measures he proposes to eliminate fraudulent claims in this area. [32657]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no regulations granting rating concessions to properties let for fewer than 140 days in a year. Under the provisions of section 66 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 such properties are classified as domestic and subject to the Council Tax. Where it is the intention of the owner to let the property for 140 days or more the Act prescribes the property as being non-domestic and subject to the rates. It is the statutory duty of the Valuation Office Agency to maintain the rating list and to ensure that all properties that should be rated are entered into it.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about business rate concessions on properties let for fewer than 140 days a year; and if he will make a statement. [32655]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has received one representation about the loss of revenue to Central Government by not rating second homes and self catering holiday accommodation let for less than 140 days in a year. Under primary legislation, such properties are domestic and therefore subject to the Council Tax. Where it is intended to let these properties for more than 140 days to persons whose remain or sole residence is elsewhere on a short-term basis then they are classified as non-domestic and subject to the rates. These provisions were introduced so as not to discourage owners of second homes from letting their premises as holiday accommodation on an occasional basis. We have no plans to change them.

Green Belt (Planning Consents)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for how many dwellings situated in the Green Belt he has given planning consent on appeal since 1 May 1997. [32258]

Mr. Caborn: Three hundred and seventy-three dwellings.

HEALTH

Cancer Surgery

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent statistics his Department has collated on waiting lists for cancer surgery; and what is his forecast for waiting lists in the first quarter of 1998. [29013]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not available in the form requested. However, last year we set up a specialist Working Group to advise on the implementation of our manifesto commitment to end waiting times for cancer treatment. One of the group's main recommendations has been incorporated into our recently published White Paper "The New NHS". This guarantees that by April 1999 everyone with suspected breast cancer will be able to see a specialist within two weeks of their general practitioner deciding they need to be seen urgently and requesting an appointment, and by the year 2000 all suspected cancers will be dealt with in this period. We are currently looking at ways of monitoring achievement of these targets.

Homeopathic Treatments

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which health authorities currently fund homeopathic treatments (a) through contracts with service providers and (b) as extra contractual referrals; [29753]

(2) how many people have received homeopathic treatment on the NHS over the last five years and how many in each year in each health authority; [29754]

(3) how much has been spent each year over the last five years by each health authority on homeopathic treatment and how much as a proportion of their total budget. [29755]

Mr. Milburn: No information is collected centrally on the amount of homeopathic treatment being provided or on expenditure on these services. Some information on contracts for homeopathic treatment may be collected locally by health authorities but is not authorised or validated centrally.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance the Government gives to health authorities on the use of and funding of homeopathic treatments; and if he will make a statement. [29756]

Mr. Milburn: Health authorities are able to include homeopathic services within the range of health services purchased to meet the health needs of their populations, if they wish to do so. Availability of homeopathic treatments within the National Health Service depends, therefore, on the decisions taken locally by health authorities and general practitioners about the clinical and cost effectiveness of such services, and the priority to be given to their provision in the light of other competing demands for the resources made available for local health needs.

No specific guidance has been issued to health authorities on the use and funding of homeopathic services and we have no plans to issue any.

Legal Actions

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department gives to health authorities and trusts about committing themselves to legal actions; and what procedures exist to (a) monitor and (b) audit the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of such actions. [31509]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service trusts and health authorities have a legal duty to ensure public money is properly spent and are duty bound to exercise value for money. They have access to legal advice which will help them make judgments on whether any action they propose would be a good use of public funds. The decision whether or not to proceed with legal action is a matter for local discussion, which is taken after considering all the facts available at the time. No guidance has been issued by the Department on this issue.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department gives to health authorities and trusts on payment of costs incurred by employees summoned to answer charges brought by professional health bodies. [31510]

Mr. Milburn: The Department has not issued central guidance on this subject, which is a matter for local management decision.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the expenditure of the North and East Devon Health Authority and its predecessors on legal and other costs connected with its disputes with Mrs. Carol Rudd and other associated UKCC proceedings. [31508]

Mr. Milburn: The South and West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive have investigated the expenditure of North and East Devon Health Authority and its predecessor in connection with its disputes with Mrs. Carol Rudd and are satisfied that the expenditure was lawful and proper.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 552, in what ways NHS trusts will be obliged to co-operate with other trusts; and what sanctions will apply against those not complying with the new regulations. [31332]

Mr. Milburn: Our changes will replace the former incentives for National Health Service trusts not to co-operate with each other, moving the emphasis from the competitive relationships and short-termism of the internal market to the development of stable longer-term partnerships focused on improving the health and health care of the local community.

NHS trusts will have new opportunities to shape local plans through the local health improvement programme, and will then be expected to play their agreed part in implementing these. In the rare event that an NHS trust failed to play its proper part in this, paragraph 6.20 of "The New NHS" sets out a graduated range of possible sanctions.

We shall bring forward detailed proposals for the revised legislative framework to support these changes, including the new statutory duty of partnership, in due course.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the likely impact on the recruitment of nurses and midwives in the NHS of the recent pay award and the time scale of its implementation. [31752]

Mr. Milburn: Research shows that pay is not the most significant factor for young people deciding on nursing a career, for nurses changing jobs or leaving the profession, and for persuading trained nurses to come back into nursing employment.

Community Care

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to make more money available to local authorities to provide for community care; and if he will make a statement. [31584]

Mr. Boateng: An additional £371 million will be made available to local authorities in England in 1998–99, for adult services. Of this amount, £350 million will be paid as a special grant which must be used for community care.

Pen Needles

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assumptions his Department makes in assessing the issue of pen needles on prescription of (a) the number of times each needle is likely to be used for repeat injections and (b) the likely conversion of people with insulin dependent diabetes from using a syringe to using a pen injection device if needles were prescribable; [32056]

(2) what is his Department's current estimate of the cost of making pen needles available on prescription; [32084]

(3) if his Department is reviewing whether to make pen injection devices available on prescription. [32083]

Mr. Milburn: We are currently considering whether general practitioners should be allowed to prescribe insulin injection pens and pen needles on the National Health Service. Department of Health officials are in discussion with the major suppliers with a view to refining the cost estimates which are currently between £10 million and £30 million a year. In arriving at these figures we have taken account of the likely range of such factors as frequency of needle change and conversion from syringes to pens. We have not, at this stage, sought to estimate an average figure for these factors.

Children's Hospices

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has provided to local health authorities relating to expenditure on and provision of children's hospices. [31973]

Mr. Boateng: Funding has been built into health authorities' general allocations to allow them to commission services to meet the needs of children suffering from life threatening and terminal conditions, including those services provided by children's hospices. Guidance on the provision of such services was published on 25 February, "Evaluation of the Pilot Project Programme for Children with Life Threatening Illnesses", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Continence Products

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his policy to encourage NHS trusts to sell continence products to NHS patients. [31865]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 2 March 1998]: We are committed to the principle that access to the National Health Service should be based on need alone, and not on ability to pay or who a patient's general practitioner is or where they live. This principle is set out in the White Paper "The New NHS" which was published on 9 December 1997.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out for each category of continence product purchased by the NHS National Supplies Trust in each of the last four years (a) the numbers of items purchased, (b) the total cost, (c) the percentage change in the number purchased from year to year; and what were the totals for all categories of continence products. [31867]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The available data (for only the last two years) are contained in the table. The overall drop in value and volume is likely to be explained by the ongoing trend towards home delivery rather than products going through National Health Service Supplies warehouses.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for his Department to issue guidance to NHS trusts about the availability of manual bowel evacuation to people with incontinence. [31864]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 2 March 1998]: We have no plans to issue guidance on this specific issue. Advice on continence services is included in ML(91)1 "An agenda for continence". Copies are available in the Library.

Smoking

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of people who died from smoking-related illnesses in the (a) United Kingdom, (b) Northern Region and (c) Teesside area in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997. [32262]

Ms Jowell: The Health Education Authority estimate that in the United Kingdom in 1995 at least 120,000 people died as a result of their smoking. No estimates have been made for Northern Region or Teesside for the years requested.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32469]

Ms Jowell: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), encouraged departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. The Department appointed a co-ordinator in January.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32439]

Ms Jowell: Information is not held in the form requested. Costs incurred in 1996–97, and recorded to date in 1997–98 were:

	1996–97	1997–98
Reimbursement of cost of staff's use of their own cars	793,793	689,283
Costs of official vehicles	2,021,608	387,926
Car hire, rentals and other expenses	358,054	1,250,978
Public transport	3,001,368	2,699,959

Information for earlier years is not available on a comparable basis.

These figures do not include some expenditure by the Department's agencies which account separately for such payments.

I shall write to the hon. Member with more details as soon as possible.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32452]

Ms Jowell: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member of Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), the Department will be actively considering this issue in preparing green transport plans for its key buildings.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to amend the notional rent scheme in respect of general practitioners' surgeries to ensure that notional rent is not paid on the proportion of capital arising out of fundholder savings. [30846]

Mr. Milburn: It is our intention to ensure that National Health Service funding supports general practitioners fairly, for the benefit of patient care. In principle, we see no justification for the payment of notional rent on that part of premises improved using public moneys such as fundholder savings. We are considering the way forward on this.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact of the phased pay award for GPs on those GPs retiring during the year. [32488]

Mr. Milburn: General Practitioners' pensions are based on total career earnings.

TREASURY

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown of the calculations of his estimate of the tax relief cost arising from the introduction of individual savings accounts and the abolition of PEPs and TESSAs. [19771]

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total gross cost of the tax relief on the planned individual savings accounts in 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [20683]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 15 December 1997]: The estimated cost to the Exchequer of the ISA proposals is broadly similar to the combined cost of TESSAs and PEPs, but estimates are sensitive to assumptions made, e.g. on the level of take up.

Inheritance Tax (Heritage Property)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual cost to the Exchequer of the conditional exemption for heritage property from inheritance tax, and how many properties took advantage of the scheme, in the last year for which figures are available. [30465]

Dawn Primarolo: In 1996–97, the estimated cost to the Exchequer of conditional exemption was £30 million for chattels and £5 million for land and buildings. Conditional exemption was granted for chattels in 41 cases and for land and buildings in 16 cases. A case may include one or more conditionally exempt assets.

Film Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total revenue received from the film industry in each of the past 10 years. [29370]

Dawn Primarolo: Available estimates of the tax paid on the profits of companies and unincorporated businesses whose tax records show that their primary business is film or video production are as follows:

Year	£ million
1992–93	30
1993–94	30
1994–95	50
1995–96	50
1996–97	50

The figures exclude tax revenues from enterprises which make films but who are mainly involved in other aspects of the entertainment industry, for example television companies. They also exclude revenues from businesses which do not themselves make films or videos but which supply services to those who do, for example specialist lighting companies and set designers. Income tax paid on employment earnings in the film industry is also excluded.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many employers with more than 50 employees he estimates have a majority of employees who earn below (a) £3.50 per hour, (b) £4 per hour and (c) £4.50 per hour; [31329]

(2) how many employers employ 50 employees or fewer; and what is the total number of employees involved. [31330]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 3 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions on employers.

There are 940,000 employers in the UK that employ 50 employees or fewer. These cover 5.3 million employees.

This is extracted from the ONS Inter Departmental Business Register (IDBR), which covers all UK businesses that are registered for Value Added Tax (VAT) and/or operate a Pay As You Earn (PAYE) scheme.

The data relate to April 1997 (time at which an annual extract is taken from the IDBR), and is based on the dataset used for the annual IDBR publication PA1003 (Size Analysis of UK Businesses).

The primary source of employee data on the IDBR is the ONS inquiry Annual Employment Survey.

Information from businesses about the pay of individuals is based on a one per cent. sample of employees. The number of returns for any single business is too small to assess rates of pay.

Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce his decisions on the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review. [31548]

Dawn Primarolo: Ministers are considering the findings and recommendations of the Review in the run up to the March Budget. There will be no announcement prior to the Budget.

Excise Duties

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the issue of harmonisation of specialist excise duties was on the agenda of discussions on the single currency in an official EU forum since the Maastricht Treaty was agreed; and when it is planned to be (a) during the British presidency and (b) thereafter. [31516]

Dawn Primarolo: In the context of the single currency there have been no such discussions. However, excise duty rates on alcohol, tobacco and oils within the EU were discussed in ECOFIN on 23 October 1995 and at a Commission chaired conference held in Lisbon between 13 and 15 November 1995. So far as our current Presidency is concerned, and in so far as alcohol and tobacco are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 386.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on the exchange rate; what steps he has taken to ensure its implementation; and if he will make a statement. [31362]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government want to see a stable and competitive pound over the medium term, consistent with their objective of price stability. Government policy is designed to achieve the low inflation and sound public finances which are necessary conditions for sustained exchange rate stability.

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) at what level of earnings an employer would pay more national insurance under the regime proposed in Mr. Martin Taylor's letter of 19 February than is currently the case; [31552]

(2) what the employer national insurance charge would be under Mr. Martin Taylor's proposals set out in his letter of 19 February 1998 in respect of weekly incomes of (a) £107, (b) £108 and (c) £109; and how this compares to current rates; [31549]

(3) what the employer national insurance charge would be under Mr. Martin Taylor's proposals set out in his letter of 19 February 1998 in respect of weekly incomes of (a) £136, (b) £137, (c) £138, (d) £139, (e) £140, (f) £141, (g) £142, (h) £143, (i) £144, (j) £145, (k) £146, (l) £147, (m) £148, (n) £149, (o) £150, (p) £151, (q) £152, (r) £153 and (s) £154; and how this compares with current rates; [31550]

(4) what is the amount of employer national insurance payable under Mr. Martin Taylor's proposals in his letter of 19 February 1998 in respect of weekly incomes of (a) £188, (b) £189, (c) £190, (d) £191, (e) £192, (f) £193, (g) £194, (h) £195, (i) £196, (j) £197, (k) £198, (l) £199, (m) £200, (n) £201, (o) £202, (p) £203, (q) £204, (r) £205, (s) £206, (t) £207, (u) £208 and (v) £209; and what is the national insurance charge under current rates. [31617]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 February 1998]: Details of employer national insurance contributions payable on earnings for 1998–9 under the proposals contained in Mr. Martin Taylor's letter of 19 February are in the table, copies of which have been placed in the Members' Library.

Mr. Darling [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The power to cap local authorities in Scotland currently rests with the Secretary of State for Scotland. The Government's proposals for capping after Devolution are set out in chapter 7 of the White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament" [Cm 3658].

Travel Insurance

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances the rate of insurance premium tax is 17½ per cent. on travel insurance. [31531]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 February 1998]: Higher rate insurance premium tax of 17.5 per cent. applies to travel insurance where the contract is arranged through or supplied by:

(i) a tour operator or travel agent;

(ii) a person connected to a tour operator or travel agent; or

(iii) a person who pays any part of the premium, or a commission or fee relating to the insurance contract, to one of the aforementioned.

However, where travel insurance is supplied free of charge to the consumer the premium paid to the insurer by the retailer is only subject to the standard rate of insurance premium tax (4 per cent.), regardless of supplier.

EAGGF Fund

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the 1996 underspend on the EAGGF fund is attributable to Britain. [31914]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 February 1998]: Because European Community Budgets do not generally earmark amounts to individual member states at the start of each budgetary year, there is no yardstick against which the outturn for each member state can be judged in order to ascertain what proportion of any underspending or overspending is directly attributable to them.

Abortions

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) pregnancies and (b) abortions were undergone by girls under 16 years of age in each year from 1980 to 1995 in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Scotland. [32727]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Malcolm Moss, dated 3 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on pregnancies and abortions undergone by girls under 16 from 1980 to 1995.

The numbers of conceptions to girls aged under 16 in England and Wales are published in:

1985 Birth Statistics FM1 No 12 (for 1980–83)

1995 Birth Statistics FM1 No 24 (for 1984–94)

ONS Monitor FM1 97/2 Conceptions in England and Wales 1995.

These publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

The conceptions figures for England and Wales relate to pregnancies resulting in a live birth, a stillbirth or a therapeutic abortion; they do not include miscarriages or illegal abortions.

The numbers of conceptions to girls aged 13–15 in Scotland are as follows:

Year	Number
1984	811
1985	847
1986	848
1987	803
1988	828
1989	794
1990	750
1991	773
1992	761
1993	772
1994	801
1995	828

Data prior to 1984 and for girls aged under 13 are not readily available and could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Figures for Scotland relate to pregnancies resulting in a live birth, stillbirth, a therapeutic abortion or a spontaneous abortion (miscarriage).

Information on the number of legal abortions performed in England and Wales can be obtained from the OPCS/ONS Abortion Statistics publications, Series AB Nos. 7–22, 1980–96, available in the House of Commons Library.

The numbers of therapeutic abortions performed in Scotland on girls aged under 16 are as follows:

Year	Number
1980	236
1981	202
1982	246
1983	240
1984	320
1985	304
1986	310
1987	280
1988	283
1989	262
1990	240
1991	280
1992	247
1993	285
1994	293
1995	312

Dr. Vis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many residents of Northern Ireland obtained abortions in England and Wales in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [32818]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Rudi Vis, dated 3 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on abortions on residents of Northern Ireland.

The numbers of legal abortions performed in England and Wales on residents of Northern Ireland for each of the last three years for which figures are available are as follows:

Year	Number of Abortions
1994	1,678
1995	1,548
1996	1,573

Retail Petrol Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what point in the supply chain the tax point arises for duty levied on (a) petrol refined in the United Kingdom and (b) imported petrol, in the case of supply to (i) independent retailers and (ii) supermarket outlets; and if he will make a statement. [31700]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The duty point for excise duty on petrol refined in the United Kingdom is on removal of the oil from the UK refinery to home use. The duty point for excise duty on imported petrol is on removal of the oil from UK direct import warehouse to home use. The duty point is the same for both independent retailers and supermarket outlets.

Single Currency

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the studies referred to in paragraph 3.8 of his Department's document "UK Membership of the Single Currency-An Assessment of the 5 Economic Tests". [32071]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The paragraph referred to discusses the evidence on exchange rate volatility and investment. It says that while there is some evidence that greater exchange rate volatility leads to lower investment, it is not conclusive.

Earnings

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of individuals in receipt of weekly earnings between (a) £107 and £109, (b) £136 and £154, (c) £188 and £209 and (d) £444 and above. [32490]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Michael Fallon, dated 3 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on weekly earnings.

The latest information, from the New Earnings Survey 1997, is contained in the table below:

Employees on adults rates, whose pay for the survey pay-period was unaffected by absence, new earnings survey—April 1997

	Percentage of employees with gross weekly earnings (including overtime) in the range
£	Full-time	Part-time	All
107–109	0.1	1.1	0.3
136–154	2.7	6.2	3.5
188–209	6.1	3.2	5.4
444 and above	24.1	1.2	18.9

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32459]

Mrs. Liddell: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), the Treasury is considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for its key buildings.

SCOTLAND

Birds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he plans to have with the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds over Schedule 5 of the Scotland Bill. [23307]

Mr. McLeish [holding answers 16 January 1998]: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries in Scotland held a seminar, on devolution and sustainable development, on 3 November at which the RSPB was represented at senior level, to give a range of public and non-government bodies an opportunity to consider a wide range of devolution issues with Ministers. No further discussions are currently arranged.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27766]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: (a) The costs to my Department for Ministerial Cars and drivers are:

	£000
1996–97	358
1997–98 (to January)	372
1997–98 estimate	446

Figures for 1995–96 could be made available on a comparable basis only at disproportionate cost.

(b) The majority of my Department's use of taxis is covered by a contract arrangement in Edinburgh. Costs incurred under this contract are:

	£000
1995–96	53
1996–97	64
1997–98 (to January)	67
1997–98 estimate	80

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the rates of absenteeism in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if he will make a statement. [26641]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The estimated rates of sickness absence (average number of working days absence per staff year) for the Scottish Office core and its Executive Agencies other than the Scottish Prison Service were 9.6 days for 1995 and 8.5 days for 1996 (calendar years). The corresponding figures for the Scottish Prison Service are 12.5 days in 1995 and 10.8 days in 1996.

These figures are extracted from published reports by the Occupational Health Service, on behalf of the Cabinet Office, on sickness absence patterns across the Civil Service. The report for 1997 is not yet available.

Information on absence rates for Non-Departmental Public Bodies is not held centrally.

CBI Scotland

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet representatives of CBI Scotland to discuss their participation in the development of the Scottish Parliament's consultative procedures. [28796]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend and I have met representatives of CBI Scotland on a number of occasions in recent months to discuss a wide range of issues regarding the Scottish Parliament, including procedures for consulting business. The most recent meeting was on 30 January with my right hon. Friend. Further meetings are likely, but no dates have yet been fixed.

How the Scottish Parliament will work will be for the Scottish Parliament itself to determine. However, the all-party Consultative Steering Group which I chair will take forward consideration of this. The Group is keen to ensure that the views of interested bodies and individuals are taken into account in its deliberations. Should CBI Scotland wish to contribute to this process, the Group will be pleased to consider any submission which they may wish to make.

Market Testing

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the health services which have been market-tested or notified to his Department and won by the private sector indicating (a) the location and (b) the organisation winning the tender. [28623]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 9 February 1998]: The Department has been notified of the following contract awards within the NHS in Scotland to private sector companies.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures he followed in the appointment of a consultant to report on the opportunities for Gaelic broadcasting in the digital era; what criteria were used for selecting the person appointed; how many candidates were considered for the position; what is the consultant's remit; what access the consultant has to commercially sensitive information; what timescale and fee the consultant has been given; and if he will make a statement. [29213]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 February 1998]: A consultant was appointed following consideration of the need for informed advice on future options for Gaelic broadcasting. The consultant was invited to carry out the work on the basis of his knowledge of Gaelic broadcasting and of developments in digital broadcasting. The remit is:

"To assess the opportunities for Gaelic broadcasting with the advent of digital technology, with particular reference to the possibility of a co-ordinated Gaelic television service on a single dedicated channel;

To consider against this background of new opportunities, the contribution to Gaelic broadcasting of current service providers and future providers and the structure within which this might be implemented;

To make recommendations and report by 20 February 1998".

The consultant has no access to commercially sensitive information other than that offered by his informants. The study is to be completed by 20 February. A fee of £3,000 is payable. The study was announced by way of a Scottish Office news release and by direct communication with the broadcasting authorities.

Spend to Save Scheme

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much each unitary and island authority in Scotland has saved as a result of the spend to save scheme in 1997–98. [31380]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The spend to save scheme allows authorities to forgo part of their capital allocation and receive extra revenue grant instead. It is for authorities themselves to ensure that value for money is obtained from the use of the extra grant. In most cases, savings are likely to accrue over a number of years and it is not possible to say now what these might amount to.

Petrol Stations

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the number of retail petrol stations in remote parts of Scotland to meet the needs of motorists. [31705]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: A study into rural petrol stations was announced in March 1997. It is looking at the contribution rural petrol stations make to the local community and at security of petrol supplies in Scotland in the future. It is gathering data on the characteristics of petrol stations in rural areas of Scotland. It will look into a range of issues, including the importance of petrol stations to the local economy. As part of the work, a survey of households has been undertaken to obtain information on petrol purchasing behaviour. We hope the study will also find innovative ways of securing and maintaining petrol supplies in rural areas. It is expected to report later this year.

Empty Properties

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) empty local authority homes, (b) empty private homes, (c) empty Government homes, (d) empty flats above shops, (e) vacant offices suitable for conversion into homes and (f) other non-residential premises suitable for conversion into homes there are in each region in Scotland. [32227]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Information received from local authorities indicates that there were 18,085 vacant local authority dwellings as at 31 March 1997 and the figures for each local authority area are published in The Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin, "Housing Trends in Scotland: Quarter Ended 31 March 1997" (HSG/1997/7), November 1997. As at 1 October 1997, there were 4 houses owned by The Scottish Office empty for more than 6 months. Information on the other categories of empty properties is not held centrally.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his Department has allocated in the current financial year to fill (a) empty local authority homes, (b) empty private homes, (c) empty Government homes, (d) empty flats above shops, (e) vacant offices suitable for conversion into homes and (f) other non-residential premises suitable for conversion into homes in each region in Scotland. [32228]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: In the current financial year, £2 million has been allocated to an Empty Homes Initiative designed to help bring empty properties back into use for housing. These funds were allocated to 16 local authorities following a bidding process and I announced in December 1997 that a further £7 million will be available to fund empty homes projects through the Initiative in 1998–99. This is in addition to resources made available to local authorities and Scottish Homes for housing purposes which are not hypothecated specifically for expenditure on empty homes.

National Galleries of Scotland

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he had with the Chair of the Trustees of the National Galleries of Scotland prior to the recent appointment of new trustees; and if he will make a statement. [31927]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Following convention, my right hon. Friend took the views of the Chairman on the list of candidates considered to be suitable for appointment by the Departmental Advisory Panel on Public Appointments.

Phosphorous Bombs

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of phosphorous bombs which are likely to be washed ashore as a result of the laying of the Scotland to Northern Ireland electricity interconnector. [32027]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: I refer to my answer on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 445. It is not possible to estimate the number of phosphorous bombs, if any, which may be washed ashore but as I indicated in my answer the intention is that the cable will be laid to avoid any unidentified objects lying on the sea bed.

Beaufort's Dyke

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unexplained explosions have been noted by the British Geological Survey in the vicinity of Beaufort's Dyke over the last 20 years; and what was their strength. [32025]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The issue of unexplained explosions in an area stretching from Islay to the Isle of Man was publicly aired by the British Geological Survey in December 1995. This was followed up by the Scottish Office at that time and all explosions occurring in the Beaufort's Dyke area during 1995 were fully accounted for by either defence or marine construction activities including pipelaying. The passage of time precluded similar investigations of earlier years but there is no reason to believe that the source of these explosions was greatly different.

St. Ninian's Isle

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure incurred by Historic Scotland in the maintenance and preservation of the St. Ninian's Isle Church site in Shetland since 1983. [31068]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: No expenditure has been incurred by Historic Scotland in the maintenance and preservation of the St. Ninian's Isle Church site in Shetland since 1983. St. Ninian's Kirk and burial ground, on St. Ninian's Isle, is a scheduled monument in private ownership.

Scalloway Castle

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps Historic Scotland has taken to remove the temporary windows installed in Scalloway Castle in 1993; and if he will make a statement. [31069]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Historic Scotland installed temporary windows in Scalloway Castle in a trial to establish their efficiency in reducing erosion caused by the scouring action of the wind on the masonry of the window openings. This experiment has been a success and Historic Scotland is now considering alternative designs for permanent window treatments, having regard to the general principle that they must be reversible and not damage the monument. The Agency will liaise with Shetland Islands Council on the design of permanent window treatment.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator, and on what date the appointment took effect. [32481]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend appointed a green transport co-ordinator on 27 November 1997, with immediate effect.

Land Use Statistics

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (c) national parks and (d) hectares were affected by road building, housing or retail developments; and how many miles of roads were built on (a) to (c) in each of the last 12 years by (i) county and (ii) region. [32329]

Mr. McLeish: The information being sought by the hon. Member is not held centrally. However, some information on damage to Sites of Special Scientific Interest is contained in the Digest of Environmental Statistics, No 19, 1997, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications to the Scottish Legal Aid Board seeking damages as a result of the contracting of CJD have been made in each of the last five years; how many such applications (a) succeeded and (b) were refused; and what reasons were given for those which were refused. [32671]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Legal Aid Board has received 2 applications for civil legal aid in connection with actions for damages arising out of the contracting of CJD. These were made in 1997. Both were refused as they did not satisfy the statutory merits tests of probable cause and reasonableness.

Elderly People

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of the future numbers of elderly people in (a) Scotland, and (b) Grampian; and what projections he has made of the numbers of elderly people in each case who will require over the next 10 years (i) continuing care in the National Health Service, (ii) long-term residential care and (iii) domiciliary care support services from local authorities, and on what basis he calculated those projections. [32254]

Mr. Galbraith: The estimated number of people over the age of 65 and 75 in Scotland and in the Grampian Health Board area for the years 1996 to 2006 is set out in the tables.

	Scotland		Grampian
Year	65+	75+	65+	75+

Government Actuaries Department in consultation with the Registrar General based on 1996 population projections for Scotland.

Assessment of current and future needs for care services for the elderly in their areas is primarily a matter for Health Boards and local authorities. The aim for all groups is to secure the most effective package of health and social care services, both in hospital and in the community, that meet the specific needs of individuals and, where appropriate, their carers.

The Government's assumption is that the growth in requirement for community services will broadly keep pace with the growth in numbers of older people. The balance between residential and domiciliary care services and between health and social care is best determined locally, to meet the needs of the local population.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria are applied in respect of the admission of elderly people in Grampian to continuing care in the National Health Service to assess whether they require continuing medical and nursing care; and in what respects these criteria differ from the criteria which are applied in other health board areas in Scotland. [32255]

Mr. Galbraith: The criteria are determined by guidance issued by the Scottish Office Department of Health to the NHS in Scotland and local authorities in 1996. Although local criteria may be developed, they must not involve a reduction of the published national terms. In this respect, Grampian does not differ from any other health board in Scotland. However, decisions about individual patients' care needs are ultimately for the clinical judgment of the consultant involved.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland had been on waiting lists for NHS treatment for (a) nought to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to nine months, (d) nine to 12 months and (e) over 12 months, on (i) 1 January 1998, (ii) 1 October 1997, (iii) 1 July 1997, (iv) 1 April 1997, (v) 1 January 1997 and (vi) 1 January 1996. [31070]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on the number of patients with a guarantee and the time spent on waiting lists for NHS treatment in Scotland in the last 2 years is provided in the table. Data on waiting lists are recorded centrally via a census undertaken at the end of each quarter. Information is not available centrally on the number of patients waiting on the first day of each quarter.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Millennium Compliance

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the cost to her Department of (a) consultants and (b) contractors engaged to address millennium computer compliance problems; and if she will list them. [32414]

Clare Short: The cost of the millennium compliance for the main corporate systems was included in the move to general resource accounting. A specific consultancy cost for millennium compliance cannot be attributed. We have engaged Expertech Systems Ltd at a cost of £18,000 to convert non-compliant spreadsheets. A specification for further work expected to cost around £55,000 has also been drawn up. A company has not yet been selected for this additional work.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss her Department's progress towards millennium compliance. [32281]

Clare Short: I have not discussed the millennium compliance of my Department with the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many of those working within her Department on millennium compliance issues have (a) given notice of their intention to leave or (b) left her Department in the last six months. [32282]

Clare Short: None of my officials working on the millennium compliance issues has given notice of their intention to leave nor have any left the Department in the last six months.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when all testing on millennium compliance will be completed within her Department. [32413]

Clare Short: We expect testing for millennium compliance to be completed by end-November 1998.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department will be fully millennium compliant. [32415]

Clare Short: My Department will be millennium compliant by the end of 1998.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what will be the cost of millennium compliance to the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [32276]

Clare Short: The incremental costs of compliance for the Commonwealth Development Corporation are very small and cannot be disentangled from the normal process of replacing hardware and software packages which would have needed to happen in any case.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met a Treasury Minister to discuss the costs of millennium compliance in her Department. [32284]

Clare Short: I have not discussed the millennium compliance of my Department with a Treasury Minister.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when all testing on Year 2000 compliance will be completed within the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [32274]

Clare Short: The Commonwealth Development Corporation expect testing for millennium compliance to be completed by end-November 1998.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be fully millennium compliant. [32275]

Clare Short: The Commonwealth Development Corporation will be millennium compliant by the end of 1998.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development from which budgetary sub-head the costs of millennium compliance will be met by her Department. [32283]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development will meet millennium costs from sub-head CO2 (Running costs, capital).

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she expects to bring forward legislation to introduce private capital into the Commonwealth Development Corporation; and if she will make a statement. [32287]

Clare Short: We are seeking to bring forward legislation to enable the creation of a new Public/Private Partnership for CDC as soon as parliamentary time permits.

North Korea

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the Government's response to the recent appeal of the United Nations World Food Programme regarding North Korea. [32058]

Clare Short: We are considering the appeal from the World Food Programme and discussing an appropriate response with counterparts in the European Union. The UK is expecting to lead a European Union technical mission to North Korea this month to assess current needs and review the targeting, delivery and sustainability of humanitarian assistance during 1998. The European Community has already allocated some £39 million to North Korea, mainly in food aid, since October 1996. The UK's share is over £6 million.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if Her Majesty's Government will increase aid to Yemen to alleviate poverty. [32059]

Clare Short: Future country allocations are currently being considered in the context of this year's Resource Allocation Round, and the wider Departmental Spending Review. We are reconsidering our assistance to Yemen as part of this process.

Women

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what initiatives are currently being pursued by her Department consequent on the Fourth World Conference on Women Platform for Action agreed in Beijing in 1995; in which countries; and at what cost. [32088]

Clare Short: We are fully committed to the implementation of the Platform for Action agreed at the Fourth World Conference on Women at Beijing in 1995. We are pursuing numerous initiatives in support of this, and are systematically incorporating gender concerns across the broad spectrum of work we support throughout the developing world. As is made clear in the White Paper on International Development, we are clear that there is a direct link between gender inequality and world poverty and that advancing the education of girls and the position of women is a precondition of development. We are pursuing a twin-track approach, addressing gender inequalities as an integral part of all our development activities, as well as continuing to support specific and focused initiatives to enhance women's empowerment, both in our own programmes and in our support to relevant national and multilateral organisations.

Over the past three years the proportion of bilateral commitments and expenditure which explicitly include gender concerns have increased by more than 50 per cent. In 1996–97 this amounted to expenditure of £155 million and a commitment of £310 million across a broad range of sectors, within which explicit attention is being paid to women's needs and gender equality. We expect this figure to continue to rise. We are also playing a leading role in the international community in building a global commitment to the Beijing Platform for Action. The facilitation of a renewed commitment among EU Member States and the European Commission to the implementation of the Beijing Platform is a priority of our current EU Presidency.

Polio

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contribution her Department is currently making towards the eradication of polio from (a) India and (b) the rest of the world; and if she will make a statement. [32093]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development is currently supporting the mass polio vaccination programme in India with a contribution of £47.5 million over three years. In 1996–97, support for general vaccination and immunisation programmes throughout the world amounted to £13.5 million. These programmes, mainly in Africa, also include polio activities but disaggregation of polio specific components is not readily available.

UN Development Agencies

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid is planned to be channelled through UN development agencies by her Department in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and what will be the sums involved. [32091]

Clare Short: In 1997–98, we plan to channel £126 million through UN development agencies. Future years' expenditure is currently being considered within my Department's resource allocation round.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32436]

Clare Short: I regret that this information is not collected centrally and could not be produced other than at disproportionate expense.

World Poverty

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list by country those development projects which will be (a) cancelled and (b) reduced in size to take account of the recommendations contained in the White Paper, Eliminating World Poverty. [32286]

Clare Short: My Department is revising Country Strategy Papers. These will consider how we can work in partnership with individual developing country Governments towards the goal of poverty eradication set out in the White Paper. We expect this to result in some restructuring of individual country programmes. Country Strategy Papers will be made publicly available when they are finalised.

Afghanistan

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what requests she has received since 1 January for assistance in Afghanistan; and if she will make a statement. [32087]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) has received the 1998 United Nations Consolidated Appeal for Afghanistan. This includes assistance to UN organisations and non governmental organisations and amounts to $157,308,144 (approximately £98 million). DFID has responded by providing £2 million for demining and mines awareness training, £1.9 million for support services (e.g. aircraft and communication) and strengthening co-ordination. A sum of £500,000 has been provided for the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) for food security.

We have also received a request for a contribution to an appeal from the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) for Afghanistan which amounts to Sfr 128,487,564 (approximately £53 million). We have responded with a contribution of £2 million for protection and medical relief services.

In addition we have also committed a total of £1 million bilaterally to various NGOs working in areas such as child protection, education and relief services. Additionally DFID provided a sum of $300,000 (approximately £187,000) to the United Nations in February 1998 to assist the victims of the recent earthquake in northern Afghanistan.

Africa (HIV)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is currently giving towards the reduction of HIV in Africa; in which countries; and if she will make a statement. [32092]

Clare Short: The Department is contributing to combating HIV/AIDS in Africa through the work of UNAIDS, which is responsible for co-ordinating the UN response to HIV/AIDS, the EC and international non governmental organisations such as the International Planned Parenthood Federation. DFID has significant bilateral co-operation in HIV prevention and care in many African countries, including Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Nigeria, South Africa, Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe. We are also funding research which is contributing to the development of new methods of protection against HIV, such as microbicides.

A full policy statement is contained in a speech I gave to mark World AIDS Day in December 1997, a copy of which is being placed in the Libraries of the House.

Multilateral Contributions

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her Department's programme multilateral contributions was spent on the European Community in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; what percentage is planned to be so spent in 1998–99; and in each case what are the sums involved. [32090]

Clare Short: In 1996–97, around £151 million was spent through the European Development Fund. We do not yet have final figures for aid expenditure attributed to this Department through the EC budget but estimate it at about £460 million. Together these figures would represent some 60 per cent. of our multilateral expenditure in 1996–97.

In 1997–98, planned EC expenditure is £659 million. This represents around 60 per cent. of my Department's multilateral budget.

Future years' expenditure is currently being considered within my Department's resource allocation round.

Child Labour

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what initiatives her Department is taking to alleviate problems arising from child labour. [32539]

Clare Short: I am supporting initiatives to raise awareness of the evils of exploitative child labour. One of these is the Global March Against Child Labour which will take place in many of the countries where child labour is common. Representatives of the march will arrive in Geneva as the Member states of the International Labour Office (ILO) begin work on a new international convention on child labour. My Department has provided assistance to the organisers of the March in developing countries and to the UK organising committee. The March will come to this country during the first two weeks in May. I hope to take part in the ILO Conference in Geneva in June when the new convention is discussed. We are already working with ILO's International Programme for the Eradication of Child Labour and I plan to increase our support this year.

I have also provided a grant to the Ethical Trading Initiative which brings together private sector companies, unions and NGOs to develop best practice in monitoring and implementing codes of practice for suppliers. Through this we are promoting a positive engagement between importers and their suppliers so that where child labour is found they will work together to find solutions. These must address the welfare of the children. In Pakistan we have financed a pilot project to provide social protection for children leaving the football stitching industry. This project, which was developed by Save the Children UK and the Pentland Group of companies, is an example of positive engagement. More initiatives are in preparation.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32465]

Clare Short: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), my Department will be considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32470]

Clare Short: Green Transport issues are dealt with by a team of officials concerned with Green Housekeeping issues as a whole. No single individual has been designated to co-ordinate Green Transport issues separately.

Land Mines

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to assist with (a) landmine clearance, (b) landmine stockpile destruction and (c) recovery and rehabilitation of survivors of landmine injuries. [32181]

Clare Short: Last October, I announced the doubling, over the next three years, of UK annual commitments to demining activities from £5 million to £10 million. These funds will be used to support the detection and clearance of anti-personnel landmines and are available to help developing countries implement their obligations under the Ottawa Convention which may include stockpile destruction.

We contribute to international assistance to landmine survivors through our support to organisations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the World Health Organisation. In addition, in November 1997, the European Community committed some £5.9 million to the ICRC's 1997 and 1998 Special Appeals for Assistance to Mine Victims; the UK share of this assistance is about £860,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Enforcement

Mr. Timms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to improve the effectiveness of fisheries enforcement in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [32957]

Mr. Morley: The Fisheries Departments and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency are currently spending some £25 million a year on fisheries enforcement, primarily on monitoring the application of the Common Fisheries Policy and ensuring that measures designed to conserve fish stocks and to safeguard the long-term interests of the fishing industry are respected.

Our present enforcement arrangements are highly regarded and I would like to pay tribute to the dedication of our UK fishery officers on shore and those at sea, including the Royal Navy and the SFPA Marine Service. There is, however, no room for complacency. Enforcement must be effective and, since taking office, this Government have made clear their determination to tackle the problems created by undeclared landings of fish.

Last year, we announced that we would be introducing a new licence condition prohibiting the discarding of stowed fish. That took effect from 1 January this year. We also advised that we would be assisting the Marine Safety Agency with checks for vessel safety certificates and crewing certificates. Checks by British Sea Fishery Officers on vessel safety certificates will begin in April and those for crewing certificates in June.

Progress is being made with the requirements for the introduction of satellite monitoring. The Fisheries Departments expect to award a contract for the establishment of a vessel tracking system in the next two months. That system should be operational by mid summer and within 18 months will monitor the movements of all UK vessels over 24 metres as well as those from other Member States operating in our waters. This will allow us to make more effective use of the resources we devote to aerial surveillance and inspections at sea.

Similarly, we need to make the best use of the resources we devote to port surveillance. We believe that the effectiveness of our land-based Inspectorates would be significantly improved by introducing a system of designated ports and discharge times for all non-pelagic landings made by vessels of 20 metres overall length and above. These vessels account for over 70 per cent. of the total tonnage and 65 per cent. of the total value of non-pelagic landings into the UK made by the over 10 metre fleet, and the ports that will be designated will cover over 90 per cent. of such landings. Nonetheless, we recognise that there are some vessels which are based at, or land into, non-designated ports. We shall continue to permit this, subject to these vessels providing a minimum of four hours notice of the discharge of their catch. A consultation paper setting out our proposals is being issued to the fishing industry and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. These arrangements, which will be subject to clearance with the European Commission, will complement those which already exist for the landing of pelagic species where the operation of designated ports, coupled with more rigorous surveillance at sea and separate area licensing has had a significant impact on addressing undeclared landings in the pelagic sector. The new control measures will be kept under close review by the Fisheries Departments to ensure that they are effective and practical and that they are meeting the desired objectives.

Apart from introducing designated ports, we continue to keep under review other measures for strengthening enforcement in the UK. This includes improving the arrangements for the submission of sales note data which has been a Community requirement since 1994. Further consideration will also be given to the adoption of a system of administrative penalties for fisheries offences. Such arrangements, which would need to be the subject of consultation with the fishing industry, would depend on changes being made to existing legislation so that action could be taken in respect of offences other than breaches of licence conditions.

Although action is being taken to improve the effectiveness of our national enforcement arrangements, the Government are equally committed to raising enforcement standards throughout the Community. If the CFP is to succeed, it is essential that fishermen should be subjected to the same level of control wherever they land. To this end we have been intensifying co-operation on enforcement with other Member States. Also, I am pleased to say that the Commission has now issued a report on fisheries monitoring under the CFP in time for discussion at the March Fisheries Council. That report reviews the operation of the existing fisheries enforcement arrangements in the Community and sets out a programme of action to improve control leading to a fairer and more effective enforcement regime. We will seek to take this work forward during the remainder of the UK Presidency.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32484]

Mr. Morley: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), encouraged Departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. The Department appointed a co-ordinator on 9 October 1997 and the appointment took effect from that date.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments in excess of (a) £500,000 and (b) £1 million were made under the arable area payments scheme in the last year for which figures are available. [32121]

Mr. Rooker: Under the 1997 Arable Area Payments Scheme, 25 claims attracted payments in excess of £500,000 and a further 5 claims payments in excess of £1 million in the UK.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made on the safety of unpasteurised milk; what representations he has received from (i) individuals and (ii) organisations who believe it to be safe to drink; and if he will make a statement. [32119]

Mr. Rooker: The independent Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food has expressed concern about the microbiological quality of unpasteurised cows' milk for drinking, and has recommended that sales of such milk be banned in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, as they are in Scotland.

In response to the consultation on our proposal to ban such sales, we have received several hundred letters from individuals claiming the right to decide for themselves what they drink. We have received several petitions signed by like-minded individuals. A number of organisations also wish for sales of raw cows' drinking milk to continue.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people in England he estimates regularly drink unpasteurised milk. [31911]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 27 February 1998]: This information is not available.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated current value of the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich. [32118]

Mr. Rooker: Assessments of value as at 31 March 1997 have been prepared for Capital Charging purposes. These valuations on a depreciated replacement cost basis have been made in accordance with the Appraisal and Valuation Manual published by the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors. The values assessed are £87,750,000 and £7,800,000 for Sand Hutton, York and for Colney Lane, Norwich respectively. They do not purport to be the values that might be achieved on disposal.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for the Central Science Laboratory at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich, the items of scientific and laboratory equipment, with their estimated current value, included in the National Asset Register. [32117]

Mr. Rooker: The National Asset Register summarised the asset groupings for the Central Science Laboratory. A list of the items concerned could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The estimated current value for scientific and laboratory equipment at the Sand Hutton, York site is £3.3 million and for the Colney Lane, Norwich site, £1.6 million.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many non-scientific staff were employed and what was the total non-scientific pay bill at the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich, in each of the last three years. [32109]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Central Science Laboratory commenced relocation to Sand Hutton, York in the autumn of 1996 and this was completed in the summer of 1997. There is therefore no information available in relation to the Sand Hutton site for the last three years. The information for Colney Lane, Norwich is set out in the table.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much income was received by the Central Science Laboratory in the 1996–97 financial year from research contracts based primarily at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich, from (i) his Department, (ii) other public sector agencies and (iii) private companies. [32112]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Central Science Laboratory commenced relocation to Sand Hutton, York in the autumn of 1996 and this was completed in the summer of 1997. It is therefore not possible to provide information on the income from research contracts undertaken primarily at Sand Hutton for this period. The information for Colney Lane, Norwich is set out in the table.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the available laboratory and office space at the Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York, would remain unoccupied if the Norwich-based scientific staff of CSL were relocated to York. [32116]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: There would be no unoccupied laboratory and office space were the Norwich Laboratory to be relocated to York.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the annual overhead costs of the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich, in each of the last three years. [32110]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Central Science Laboratory commenced relocation to Sand Hutton, York in the autumn of 1996 and this was completed in the summer of 1997. There is therefore no information available in relation to the Sand Hutton site for the last three years. The information for Colney Lane, Norwich is set out in the table.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many scientists working for the Central Science Laboratory are based at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich. [32111]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Of the total number of scientists currently employed by the Central Science Laboratory, 328 are based at the Sand Hutton, York Laboratory and 109 at the Colney Lane, Norwich Laboratory.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich, (i) the total space available for laboratories and offices and (ii) the proportion of laboratory space which is currently unoccupied. [32115]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The office and laboratory floor area capable of practical use at the Central Science Laboratory, Sand Hutton, York is 15,600 square metres. There are no totally unoccupied offices or laboratories but some areas are under-utilised.

At the Central Science Laboratory site in Colney Lane, Norwich, the floor area capable of practical use is 2,200 square metres, but this figure includes common service areas that are duplicated at Sand Hutton, York. There are no unoccupied office or laboratory areas at Colney Lane.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations which have made representations to his Department with proposals for future use of the CSL laboratories at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich; and if he will place a summary of these representations in the Library. [32113]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Department has received some correspondence on this matter and there have been meetings, together with my colleagues, with certain interests including representatives of the Universities of York and East Anglia, Bioscience York, and Members of Parliament from both cities. The representations have outlined, respectively, the importance of the Department's scientific activities and laboratories to each city, the present synergies with other local scientific facilities, and the prospects for their development.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration his Department has given to the future of the CSL laboratories at York and Norwich following the conclusion of the prior options review in 1996. [32114]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Following the 1996 Prior Options review of Public Sector Research Establishments such as the Central Science Laboratory, we have been considering the best means of securing value for money given our substantial investments in the laboratories at York and Norwich. Independent management consultancy advice, informing the Prior Options process, noted that a key aspect was to ensure maximum utilisation of the new laboratory at Sand Hutton, York. We have taken no firm decisions at present but are exploring, from a number of aspects, the possibility of collocating the York and Norwich laboratories on the Sand Hutton site. I shall announce our findings on this in due course.

Food Science Research Contracts

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the food science research contracts allocated by his Department in (a)1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97, broken down by length of contract, value of contract and institution securing the contract. [32108]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The information requested by my hon. Friend has been placed in the Library of the House.

Fishing Industry

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and what estimate he has made of the impact on employment levels in the fishing industry if the derogation on fishing vessels is not extended beyond 2002. [31998]

Mr. Morley: The Government are committed to securing extension beyond 2002 of the restrictions on access by foreign fishing vessels within 12 mile limits. If these restrictions were not extended, there would be major adverse economic consequences for Member States' inshore fishing industries.

Departmental Report

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimated outturn for the financial year 1997–98 for each of the programmes listed in Annex 1: Cash Plan Table of his Ministry's Departmental Report 1997. [31915]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The 1997–98 estimated outturn information is still being prepared. It is due to be published on 7 April in MAFF's 1998 Departmental Report, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Calshot Oyster Fishery

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 166, what fishing activities are currently permitted in the area proposed for extension to the Calshot Oyster Fishery; what enforcement action has taken place in the last four years; and what is his assessment of its effectiveness. [31730]

Mr. Morley: Trawling, dredging or laying nets in the area of the proposed extension is prohibited by directions issued by the Harbour Master for the Port of Southampton, in order to prevent obstruction of shipping using the main navigation channel entering the port of Southampton.

Enforcement of these restrictions is a matter for the Harbour Authority.

Vitamin Supplements

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 550, how many representations from scientists he passed on to the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment on the subject of vitamin B6; and how many representations he did not pass on. [31872]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to him on 2 March 1998, Official Report, columns 497–98.

Farm Subsidies

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average level of subsidy per farm holding paid to (a) hill farmers, (b) dairy farmers and (c) cereal farmers at 1996 prices in each year since 1979. [31087]

Mr. Rooker: Information on direct subsidies by type of farm is available only from 1984–85. The figures in the table do not include indirect subsidies such as market support measures. Due to a change in the definition of farm types, data for years before 1987 are not wholly comparable with the more recent data. Data for 1987–88 are given on both farm type definitions to give an indication of the degree of change.

Subsidies paid direct to full-time farms in England: £/farm in real terms at 1996 prices, as deflated by the RPI

Year	Dairy	Hill and upland livestock	Specialist cereals

1986–87	800	13,800	800
1987–88	600	12,500	700

	Revised farm type definitions:
Year	Dairy	LFA cattle and sheep	Cereals
1987–88	500	11,900	800
1988–89	700	12,900	1,200
1989–90	1,100	11,800	1,700
1990–91	1,300	13,200	2,000
1991–92	1,400	16,800	3,000

1995–96	5,300	28,200	41,800
1996–97	5,500	29,100	40,900

[1] From 1994–95 subsidies were recorded in the year in which they were due. In previous years, subsidies were recorded in the year in which they were paid.

Farm Business Survey (England).

The figures in the table need to be interpreted with care because of the different mechanisms used to support agriculture and the changes in these mechanisms. For instance, subsidies paid to dairy farms reflect the direct payments in respect of other enterprises on the farm; support for milk is through market prices. Also, the MacSharry reforms of 1992 switched some support from consumers to taxpayers.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid (CJD)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications to the Legal Aid Board for England and Wales seeking damages as a result of the contracting of CJD have been made in each of the last five years; how many such applications (a) succeeded and (b) were refused; and what were the reasons given in respect of those which were refused. [32672]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board has received applications in respect of two categories of CJD cases. The difference between the two types is the alleged causation factor. The cases relate either to new variant CJD (nvCJD) allegedly arising out of BSE or the fear of contracting CJD as a result of receiving Human Growth Hormone (HGH) treatment. The table sets out the number of applications received in each action and those granted or refused.

	Applications		Granted		Refused
	nvCJD-BSE	CJD-HGH	nvCJD-BSE	CJD-HGH	nvCJD-BSE	CJD-HGH
1994	0	50	0	50	0	0
1995	0	38	0	38	0	0
1996	8	39	2	39	6	0
1997	8	21	8	19	0	2
1998	[1]3	4	1	3	0	1

[1] Two cases awaiting decision.

The six CJD-BSE cases refused legal aid in 1996 were refused as they failed to meet the merits test in each case.

One CJD-HGH case was refused in 1997 as the applicant was not financially eligible for legal aid, the other case was withdrawn.

The CJD-HGH case refused in 1998 was refused as the applicant was not financially eligible for legal aid.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32482]

Mr. Hoon: The Energy and Environment Manager of the Court Service assumed responsibility for green transport issues within my Department in November 1996. He was formally appointed as the green transport co-ordinator on 15 January 1998.

Legal Aid Board

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects the Legal Aid Board's corporate information system to be fully operational. [32678]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board's Corporate Information System is already operational in two of its thirteen area offices and in its central departments. Implementation is taking place on a phased basis and is planned to be completed by the end of 1998.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32462]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has no final plans as yet to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for staff or to introduce charges for workplace parking. The provision of car parking does, however, form part of our draft Revised Environment Strategy and Green Transport Plan; it is our intention to carry out a full review of the provision and cost of parking spaces.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32448]

Mr. Hoon: The table details expenditure on 'staff travel and subsistence' and 'official cars' for LCD Headquarters and Associated Offices, the Court Service Agency and the Public Trust Office Agency. The Department does not monitor separately expenditure incurred in the categories requested and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[1] PTO and Court Service assumed agency status July 1994 and April 1995 respectively, therefore figures for 1994–95 are included in LCD Headquarters.

Recovery of Costs

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the possible impact of capping successful litigants' ability to recover costs from their opponents on the ability of unions to pursue cases for their members. [31708]

Mr. Hoon: I have had several meetings with the TUC, with individual unions, with union lawyers and with Members of Parliament to discuss their concerns about this issue. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and I will be taking all these views into consideration as we consider proposals for the future of the fast track costs regime.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the oral answer of the Secretary of State for Defence of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 987, what discussions he has had with the US authorities about the implications of their research at (a) Fort Detrich Maryland biological warhead facilities and (b) elsewhere into the likely effects of a near-miss of missiles or bombs on (i) anthrax and (ii) other chemical and biological warhead facilities. [31012]

The Prime Minister: I have had no such discussions. However, UK/US research collaboration on Chemical and Biological Defence is governed by a trilateral Memorandum of Understanding (UK/US/Canada) originally signed in 1980, and by the Technical Cooperation Programme and officials in the Ministry of Defence keep in contact with their US counterparts under the provision of these agreements.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received since 1 May in respect of the Millennium Dome, (a) in total and (b) which were (i) broadly supportive, (ii) broadly opposed and (iii) neither. [31928]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 March 1998]: I have received a number of representations expressing a wide range of opinion about the Millennium Dome.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Remploy

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many workers have been recruited by Remploy in the last 12 months; how many of these are in Remploy's factories; how many vacancies existed, at the latest available date, in these factories; and if recruiting is continuing as vacancies arise. [32598]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Alan Williams, dated 3 March 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply direct to your questions about how many workers have been recruited by Remploy in the last 12 months; how many of these are in Remploy's factories; how many vacancies existed, at the latest available date, in these factories; and if recruiting is continuing as vacancies arise. I am replying because the Employment Service has operational responsibility for Remploy.

On the question of recruitment, I understand from Remploy that they have recruited 1551 disabled people in the last 12 months, and that 757 of these were people placed into Remploy factories.

Turning to your question about vacancies, at the end of January—the latest date for which figures are available—there were 14 vacancies in Remploy factories.

As for vacancy filling, I am told by Remploy that, although in order to keep within their operating budgets they have temporarily suspended recruitment in some of their factory groups, they are continuing to recruit disabled workers into their Manufacturing Group.

I hope this is helpful.

New Deal (Employer Agreements)

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers signed contractual agreements to provide places under the New Deal arrangements between 6 February and 17 February. [31869]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A total of 1,362 employers agreements were signed between 5 January and 20 February 1998. It is not possible to provide the number of sign-ups for the specific dates requested.

Access to Work

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how much Government money has been distributed to business as part of the Access to Work scheme since its inception; [32198]

(2) what methods of advertising the Access to Work scheme are currently being used; [32199]

(3) how much of the 1997–98 budget for the Access to Work scheme has been spent to date. [32201]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Peter Collis to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 27 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis, the Chief Executive of the Employment Service, to write to you about how much money has been distributed to business as part of the Access to Work scheme since its inception, what methods of advertising the Access to Work scheme are currently being used, and how much of the 1997–98 budget for the Access to Work scheme has been spent to date. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis. I am replying in his absence.

It may be helpful if I explain that information leaflets and other promotional material concerning the Access to Work scheme are freely available from Jobcentres, and Disability Employment Advisors visit employers to make them aware of the programme and other disability issues. The Employment Service also promotes Access to Work and other services through national and regional exhibitions and events aimed at employers and those seeking work, including disabled people.

Our own promotion is reinforced by a wide range of other organisations, particularly in the voluntary sector, who represent disabled people. We collaborate with them to help publicise Access to Work and our support for disabled people and employers seeking to employ people with disabilities.

Access to Work provides support to individual disabled people to help towards the extra costs in employment that result from their disability. Money is not always distributed directly to business, and often goes directly to the individual or to suppliers. Annual expenditure on Access to Work since its inception in June 1994 is as follows:

£ million

Year	Expenditure
1994–95	15.7
1995–96	19.9
1996–97	12.6
1997–98 (to January 1998)	11.3

I hope this is helpful.

Schools (Toilet Facilities)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the cost in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01 and (d) 2001–02 of ensuring that by 2002 no maintained school has to rely on outside toilet facilities. [32315]

Mr. Byers: This information is not held centrally.

Class Sizes (Northumberland)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those schools in Northumberland with class sizes of over 30. [28450]

Mr. Byers: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally.

Failing Schools

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list English local education authorities in order according to the numbers of failing schools each has, as identified by Ofsted inspectors. [29581]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 February 1998]: The position as of 12 February 1998 is given in the following table:

Family Credit

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much of the current expenditure on family credit would be reclassified as negative taxation if converted into an equivalent working families tax credit. [31389]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 February 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

Past and current expenditure on family credit is classified as part of General Government expenditure in the national accounts; outturn data for family credit would continue to be recorded in that way if family credit was replaced.

The treatment of any payments under a working families tax credit, if introduced, would need to be decided in the light of the details of any scheme which may be announced in the Budget.

Work Permits

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the Government Departments which have applied for work permits for foreign nationals to work on computer-related matters since 1 May 1997. [32350]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government Departments which have applied for work permits for work on computer-related matters since 1 May 1997 are the Home Office and the Department for International Development.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the companies which have applied for work permits for foreign national IT staff in the last year. [32351]

Mr. Alan Howarth: A complete list of the companies which have applied for work permits for IT staff in the last year is not available from the Department's computer record and would be disproportionately costly to produce.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many requests for work permits have been received in the past 12 months for foreign nationals to work on computer-related matters. [32349]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Precise figures are not readily available. Approximately 4,800 work permit applications were received in the past 12 months in respect of work on computer-related matters.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits have been issued to Indian nationals to work on computer-related matters in the last 12 months. [32348]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Precise figures are not readily available. Approximately 2,800 work permits were issued to Indian nationals for computer-related work in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what checks for work permits are made on IT consultancy firms who employ foreign nationals on contract in the United Kingdom. [32345]

Mr. Alan Howarth: All work permit applications are assessed against published criteria. Checks on companies' compliance with requirements for work permits is a matter for the Home Office.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the number of IT professionals from countries whose nationals require a work permit, who are currently working in the United Kingdom without a work permit. [32344]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I am not able to make an estimate of the number of IT professionals currently working in the United Kingdom without a work permit.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits have been issued to Chinese nationals to work on computer-related matters in the last 12 months. [32343]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Precise figures are not readily available. Approximately 40 work permits were issued to Chinese nationals for computer-related work in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits have been issued to IT professionals from countries outside the United Kingdom in the last 12 months. [32342]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Precise figures are not readily available. In the last 12 months over 3,000 work permits were issued to IT professionals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Discretionary Social Fund

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes she plans to the Discretionary Social Fund; and if she will make a statement. [32875]

Mr. Denham: I am pleased to announce that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be introducing a special Social Fund measure to provide more explicit help in the form of Community Care Grants for homeless people setting up home.

Homelessness is a major cause of poverty and social exclusion. The Government want to take all possible steps to prevent people from falling through the net.

This change will give many vulnerable people a better chance of getting permanent accommodation and leading a normal life.

That is why we are extending the rules to include specific help for people setting up home as part of a planned resettlement programme.

In addition, the Secretary of State is introducing a number of minor amendments to discretionary Social Fund directions and guidance to take effect from 6 April 1998.

Details of these changes have been placed in the Library.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 23 February, Official Report, columns 124–25, concerning disability living allowance claimants who have had their claims disallowed under the Benefit Integrity Project, if she will supply the equivalent figures for claimants who have had their disability living allowance reduced. [31885]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefit Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefit Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 2 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary question asking pursuant to her answer of 24 February concerning Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claimants who have had their claims disallowed under the Benefits Integrity Project (BIP); if she will supply the equivalent figures for claimants who have had their DLA reduced. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

As at 31 December 1997, a total 40,615 cases have been examined as part of the BIP. Of the total cases dealt with 978 have had their benefit increased, 31,920 have been unchanged, 4,931 have had their benefit reduced and 2,786 have had their benefit stopped. The total includes 7,462 renewal cases; of which 242 had their benefit increased, 3,868 remain unchanged, 1,993 have had their benefit reduced and 1,359 have had their benefit stopped.

A brief monthly statistical report is produced and a copy of the report for December 1997 and subsequent months can be found in the House of Commons Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the measures taken by (a) her Department and (b) the Benefits Agency to make disability living allowance claimants who are subject to the Benefit Integrity Project aware of their right to request copies of previous disability living allowance claims. [31888]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefit Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 2 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the measures taken by (a) her Department and (b) the Benefits Agency (BA) to make Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claimants who are subject to the Benefits Integrity Project (BIP) aware of their right to request copies of previous DLA claims. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

Information about BIP has been publicised through disability organisations, the media, and by appearances in the media by Ministers.

We have made no specific assessment of the measures taken in relation to BIP. This is because it is normal practice to give customers copies of DLA claim packs used to decide their current entitlement, on request. This has always been the case and is not specific to the BIP.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she has personally reviewed individual Benefit Integrity Project appeal cases. [32333]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Responsibility for the administration of the Social Security appeals system rests with the Independent Tribunal Service. It would be improper for Ministers to intervene.

N. T. Lawless

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to offer a date for a DLA review to N. T. Lawless (ref YR 983555A), which was requested on 3 December 1997. [31673]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. David Lidington, dated 27 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding when she expects to offer a date for a DLA review to N. T. Lawless, which was requested on 3 December 1997. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

Following Mr. Lawless' request, an Adjudication Officer reviewed the claim on 16 February 1998 and Mr. Lawless was informed of the decision on 20 February.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Parking Car

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32464]

Mr. Field: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), this Department will be actively considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for its key buildings.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many companies bid for the tender to provide outsourcing of the Benefits Agency Medical Service. [32200]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Three companies bid for the provision of the medical service to the Department.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32468]

Mr. Denham: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), encouraged Departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. This Department appointed a co-ordinator in December 1997. The appointment took effect from 1 January.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32435]

Mr. Field: The information is not yet available in the format requested. Such information as is available for staff numbers between 82,000 and 93,000 in the relevant years is as follows.

Claims for travel and related expenses are made and authorised locally across the Department with only the total amount paid being recorded in the accounting system. Changes have been made to the Department's payroll systems to provide greater analysis of the individual elements of expenses payment from April 1998 onwards. No information is held centrally on the journey times involved in official travel. Figures are not yet available for 1997–98.

Departmental UK travel

Year	Amount of UK travel
1994–95	24,500,782
1995–96	24,158,110
1996–97	21,147,786

For planning and estimating purposes the Department has a statistical model based on a sampling exercise which breaks down the total expenses paid into travel costs (fuel, rail journeys and other public transport) and subsistence costs (hotel, meal allowances etc). The information based on this estimating model is as follows.

Departmental travel and subsistence costs

£ million

Year	Subsistence costs	Travel costs
1994–95	10.1	14.4
1995–96	10.0	14.2
1996–97	8.6	12.4

Note:

1. Figures do not sum due to rounding.

Pension Review

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures the Secretary of State will be taking, in the course of the Government's pension review, to provide a more flexible decade of retirement for pensioners aged 55 to 65 years. [31707]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 469.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) she and (b) other Ministers within her Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23754]

Ms Harman [holding answer 19 February 1998]: No such visits have been made.

Lone Parents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the 1,015 lone parents who have gained employment through the New Deal for lone parents between July and 31 December 1997 are now in receipt of income support and have no earnings. [32040]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The information requested is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

To calculate how many lone parents who have gained employment through the New Deal for lone parents between July and 31 December 1997 are now in receipt of Income Support and have no earnings, it would be necessary to examine each individual's records on two different computer systems.

The cost of this exercise is directly related to the number of lone parent cases to be investigated. It was possible to answer the hon. Member's previous question on a similar subject on 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 205, because only 433 cases needed to be examined. The investigation of over a thousand cases could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

The Government will conduct a full independent evaluation of the New Deal for Lone Parents, which will measure the impact of the New Deal for Lone Parents in the eight prototype areas with the outcomes for lone parents in six similar but geographically separate control areas, where the New Deal for Lone Parents is not available.

Buildings Refurbishment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will make a statement. [26623]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

It is estimated that this Department spent a total of £50.677 million refurbishing its buildings in 1995–96 and £29.236 million in 1996–97. Up to 31 December 1997 the Department had spent a total of £8.888 million on building refurbishment and estimates show that a total of £16.213 million will be spent during the whole of the current financial year.

Notes:

1. The information relates to refurbishment works costing more than £5,000.

Welsh Language

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of his Department's expenditure is spent on the teaching and promotion of the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement. [31542]

Mr. Ron Davies: In 1996–97, the latest outturn year available, some 0.2% of the expenditure within my right hon. Friend's responsibility was spent on teaching and promotion of the Welsh language. Local authorities also fund Welsh medium education; the funding comes from the unhypothecated annual local government revenue settlement, and it is for individual authorities to decide how much they spend.

Abortion

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many residents of Wales who met the requirements for an abortion as specified by the Abortion Act 1967 were unable to obtain an abortion paid for by the NHS in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [31345]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not collected centrally or at a local level.

Hospital Appointments

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients who failed to turn up for appointments with consultants at (i) Ysbyty Gwynedd, (ii) Ysbyty Glan Clwyd and (iii) Ysbyty Maelor in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [31741]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information is given in the table.

Merchant Designs Manufacturing

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to recover the money paid by Powys TEC to Merchant Designs Manufacturing for employee training; and from whom; [31893]

(2) what communication he has had from the receiver concerning the money given to Merchant Designs Manufacturing for employee training by Powys TEC; and if he will make a statement. [31892]

Mr. Hain: No correspondence has been received from the Official Receiver about funding given to Merchant Designs Manufacturing by Powys TEC. The TEC has been told that any funding received from the Welsh Office which was not used for training will be repayable to the Department. Recovery of its funding from the company is a matter for the TEC.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has in respect of redundancy payments for the former employees of Merchant Designs Manufacturing in Machynlleth; and if he will make a statement. [31896]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

Merchant Designs Manufacturing was put into creditors' voluntary liquidation on 30 January 1998. Claims from fifty nine former employees for payment of statutory redundancy entitlement and salary and holiday pay arrears under the Employment Rights Act 1996 were received at Birmingham Redundancy Payments Office on 10 February. All those who were entitled have been paid. Claims for pay for unworked notice are being received and processed.

Rural Economy

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the rural economy in Wales. [32208]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government's policies and programmes for creating jobs, protecting and enhancing the environment, strengthening and supporting communities, creating opportunities for education and training and supporting businesses are relevant throughout Wales.

Nevertheless, the uniqueness and special needs of the countryside mean that the rural dimension is an important consideration of any Government policy affecting these areas. My right hon. Friend is committed to fostering an integrated approach to rural policy and to sustaining growth of the rural economy.

On 13 January, my right hon. Friend told the Welsh Affairs Committee that, in addition to strong regional directorates, he envisaged the new economic development powerhouse would have a central rural affairs unit. This, in partnership with the National Assembly for Wales and others, would be well placed to meet the needs and secure the future prosperity of rural communities.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32483]

Mr. Hain: A Green Housekeeping co-ordinator was appointed by the Welsh Office in 1992. Green Housekeeping covers a wide range of environmental action, including policies and initiatives aimed at reducing vehicle emissions.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32449]

Mr. Ron Davies: Records of costs are not held separately in the form requested.

Parking Car

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32463]

Mr. Hain: (a) None; (b) None.

Air Quality

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those areas, by unitary authority, where air quality breached the limits set by his Department during 1997. [31742]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information is not available in the form requested. A summary of air quality information recorded at national automatic monitoring sites in Wales, during 1997, is presented in the table in the form of the national air quality descriptors—'low' pollution, 'moderate' pollution, 'high' pollution, 'very high' pollution. The breakpoint between 'low' pollution and 'moderate' pollution corresponds to the national air quality standards set out in the National Air Quality Strategy.

Out-of-town Developments

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on Green Belt land in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in Wales. [32321]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None. There are currently no Green Belts in Wales.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on green-field land, excluding Green Belt, in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in Wales; [32320]

(2) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on recycled land in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in Wales. [32322]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not held centrally.

Designated Land (Development)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (c) national parks and (d) hectares were affected by road building, housing or retail developments; and how many miles of roads were built on (a) to (c) in each of the last 12 years by (i) county and (ii) region. [32331]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not held centrally. Information on damage to sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) is published, but does not specifically cite damage by road building or housing and retain development. This information is published in "Digest of Environmental Statistics No. 19 1997", table 8.18. A copy of this is available in the Library of the House.

Empty Properties

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on trends in the number of empty (a) local authority homes, (b) private homes, (c) Government properties containing residential accommodation and (d) flats above shops in each of the last 12 years. [32332]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The number of vacant dwellings owned by local authorities in each of the last 12 years is shown in the table, along with the other available information from 1994. The number of unoccupied homes owned privately is not collected centrally. Unoccupied homes owned by Government Departments other than the Welsh Office are not disaggregated for Wales. Statistics are not collected centrally on empty flats above shops.

Planning Applications

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend planning guidelines to allow local authorities greater scope to turn down planning applications on the grounds of poor quality or design. [32338]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No. Existing guidance, as contained in Planning Guidance (Wales): Planning Policy (May 1996) and Technical Advice Note (Wales) 12 'Design' (October 1997), makes it clear that applicants for planning permission should demonstrate how they have taken account of the need for good design in their proposals, and that local planning authorities should reject obviously poor designs.

Social Housing

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will reduce the number of units or hectares in a housing development above which local authorities can require an element of social housing to be provided in the development. [32339]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Guidance in Wales does not advise local authorities on thresholds for this purpose.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of the Welsh Development Agency has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32769]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Development Agency is in the process of conducting an in-house millennium compliance assessment of all its computer hardware and software and I will arrange for the Chief Executive of the Agency to write to the hon. Member on the questions he has raised. A copy of his letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when all testing on year 2000 computer compliance will be completed in the Welsh Office. [32762]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Central IT Unit at the Cabinet Office and its agent, the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, set a model timetable for Departments to follow. The Welsh Office has followed this timetable and aims to complete its testing by the end of December 1998.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of the Welsh Office has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement; [32766]

(2) when he last met Treasury Ministers to discuss the costs of computer millennium compliance; and from which budgetary sub-head the costs will be met; [32764]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost to the Welsh Office of (a) consultants and (b) contractors engaged by his Department to address the issue of computer millennium compliance; and if he will list them. [32765]

Mr. Ron Davies: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has today presented to Parliament his first quarterly review of progress on tackling the millennium computer problem across central Government. Copies of the questionnaires completed by departments and agencies on progress towards millennium compliance, have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many officials or other individuals in the Welsh Office working on computer millennium compliance have (a) given notice of their intention to leave or (b) left this Department in the last six months. [32761]

Mr. Ron Davies: No officials or other individuals in my Department working on this project have either given notice of their intention to leave or left in the last six months.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of the Development Board for Rural Wales has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32771]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Development Board reviewed the millennium compliance of its IT and telecoms systems during 1996–97. Although the result was that some systems were not compliant at that time, the Board concluded that its normal programme of upgrading and replacement would achieve full compliance by 2000.

It is expected that compliance will be achieved at minimal additional cost to public funds since programmed upgrades and replacements have specified year 2000 compliant products.

The process of merger into the economic powerhouse has halted DBRW investment in its IT systems, except in those areas which have been agreed to be a requirement of the new WDA. Millennium compliance for the new body will be a matter for the merger implementation team to consider.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many officials or other individuals in the Welsh Office are currently working on computer millennium compliance. [32760]

Mr. Ron Davies: An assessment of the effect of the millennium date change has been undertaken and around 25 staff are spending some time working on the various systems throughout the Department. A central unit is co-ordinating this work.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss the progress of the Welsh Office towards achieving computer millennium compliance. [32763]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), attended the two meetings of the Cabinet Ministerial Group on the millennium date change, at which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster was present, at the end of January 1998.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contingency plans he will establish in case of failure on 1 January 2000 of computer systems in the Welsh Office. [32773]

Mr. Ron Davies: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has today presented to Parliament his first quarterly review of progress on tackling the millennium computer problem across central Government. Copies of the questionnaires completed by departments and agencies on progress towards millennium compliance have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of the Land Authority for Wales has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32772]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Land Authority for Wales has consulted its internal auditors and the National Audit Office and, with their agreement, is in the process of conducting an in-house millennium compliance assessment of all its computer hardware and software. No problems have yet been detected.

Computer Systems

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the main computer systems in the Welsh Office and its agencies. [32759]

Mr. Ron Davies: Basic Office automation systems, Finance and Statistics, Grants and Subsidies are the main computer systems in my Department.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what results he obtained from his first quarterly review of progress on tackling the millennium computer problem within central government. [32993]

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to inform the House about progress of government departments on millennium compliance. [32360]

Dr. David Clark: In my statement to the House on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 1104-16, I announced that I would review progress on tackling the millennium computer problem within central Government on a quarterly basis. To this end, monitoring questionnaires were sent to all departments and agencies last month. I am arranging for all the completed questionnaires and a summary to be placed in the Libraries of the House and published on the internet.

The progress reports indicate that many organisations have reached the testing stage, and in some cases completed work, for significant systems. On skills and resources, programmes continue generally to be assessed as adequately resource. The returns also indicate an increased awareness of the need for contingency planning.

Departments and agencies report that they have sought and in most cases received assurance of compliance from IT product suppliers. We will continue to monitor this closely. More needs to be done to obtain similar assurances from non-IT suppliers, and I have written to Ministerial colleagues to ask them to make sure that this is done, and that projects fully cover non-IT aspects of the problem, such as embedded systems and external dependencies.

As expected, there are a number of variations from the original cost and completion date estimates, and these are documented in the returns. The total cost estimate in the plans is now £393 million, compared with £370 million on the last round. Further variations are to be expected as this work is carried forward. I will continue to monitor these closely and to pursue any points of concern with colleagues.

I will keep the House fully informed in due course, following the next quarterly review.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) which departments have reported problems with obtaining responses from suppliers over remedying the millennium computer problem; [32357]

(2) if he will make it his policy to supply a detailed breakdown of all costs for each department for achieving millennium compliance; [32361]

(3) what estimate he has made of the numbers of departments that have begun code renovation work for millennium compliance. [32358]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner) today and the quarterly progress reports I placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met (a) Treasury Ministers and (b) the Prime Minister to discuss the costs of millennium compliance across Government. [32359]

Dr. David Clark: I am in regular contact with the Prime Minister and other Ministerial colleagues on this issue.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32474]

Dr. David Clark: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), encouraged Departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. My Department is actively considering this issue.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32456]

Dr. David Clark: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), my Department will be actively considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for its key buildings.

Age Profiles

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what statistics he collates on the age profile of those employed in the Civil Service and Government agencies. [32120]

Dr. David Clark: Almost all departments and agencies provide my department with information on the date of birth of each of their permanent staff. Regular analyses of this information are published in "Civil Service Statistics". A copy of the 1997 edition is in the libraries of the House. These analyses include the age profiles of all staff, of entrants and of staff who have resigned (figure 11, tables 8 and 9 respectively). A further source, also in the libraries, is the "Civil Service Data Summary 1996".

Open Government

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to replace the Open Government Code of Practice with a more legally enforceable system. [31712]

Dr. David Clark: The White Paper "Your Right to Know" (Cm 3818) published on 11 December 1997 sets out the Government's proposals for a wide ranging Freedom of Information Act. The Act will provide people with a legally enforceable right to official information and will replace the present non-statutory "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information".

DEFENCE

Official Cars

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many official cars are available for use by Ministers in his Department; and how many new cars have been acquired for the use of Ministers in his Department since 1 May. [25171]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Four official cars are available for use by Ministry of Defence Ministers and no new cars have been acquired for this purpose since 1 May 1997.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contract, with its value, concluded by his Department and its agencies for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–2001 and (e) 2001–2002. [32013]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Royal Dragoon Guards

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance on the prevention of hearing damage has been issued to the 4/7 Royal Dragoon Guards since 1979. [32588]

Mr. Spellar: The 4th/7th Royal Dragoon Guards no longer exists, having amalgamated with the 5th Royal Inniskilling Dragoon Guards in 1992 to form the Royal Dragoon Guards (RDG). Since their formation the RDG have complied with MOD policy on occupational noise as laid down in Joint Service Publication 375 (the MOD Health and Safety Handbook) Volume 3, Chapter 13, a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House. We have no record of guidance which might have been issued separately to the 4/7 RDG before 1992 as documents which pre-date the amalgamation were not retained.

Army (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of maintaining the Army presence in Northern Ireland in each year since 1995; and what is the projected figure for 1998. [32777]

Dr. Reid: The overall budgets held by the General Officer Commanding (Northern Ireland) for 1995–96 to 1997–98 are as follows:

£ million

Financial year	General Officer Commanding (Northern Ireland)'s budget final outturn
1995–96	475
1996–97	[1]514
1997–98	[2]508

[1] This figure represents the estimated outturn given in Vote 1, section B of the 1997–98 Class I Supply Estimates (HC 335).
[2] This figure represents the provision made in Vote 1, section B of the 1997–98 Class I Supply Estimates (HC 335).

The 1998–99 Estimate for the General Officer Commanding (Northern Ireland)'s budget has yet to be finally approved but will be published in the Supply Estimates next month.

Deep Waste Repository

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the impact of the delay to the Deep Waste Repository on the afloat storage of decommissioned nuclear submarines. [33272]

Mr. George Robertson: Afloat storage is not time limited and is safe. However, space at Devonport Naval Base and at Rosyth Royal Dockyard is finite and is expected to reach its capacity some years before any Deep Waste Repository may become available. As a result, my Department is now investigating other options, including interim land storage and other sites for storage afloat. Safety to the public and to the environment will be of paramount importance when considering the way forward.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy for responding to letters received in the (a) Scottish Gaelic, (b) Welsh, (c) Urdu, (d) Hindi and (e) Chinese language. [28055]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 10 February 1998]: A reply, where one is needed, is given to letters received in these as in other languages. The overwhelming majority of letters received a reply in English but replies to letters received in Welsh are given in Welsh. If the hon. Member has information that this policy has given rise to any difficulty I would be glad to have it and to look at the matter.

Social Workers (London Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many social workers are employed in each of the London prisons. [30571]

Ms Quin: None. However, probation officers employed by the London prisons will normally hold social work qualifications. A total of seven senior probation officers and 41.5 probation officers are currently employed in the seven London prisons.

Young Offenders

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effect on 15 and 16-year-old offenders of sharing a secure young offender unit with offenders in the age group 17 to 21 years; [31279]

(2) if he will reduce the age range of the intake at Feltham Young Offender Unit. [31262]

Ms Quin: No final assessment has been made of the effect on 15 and 16-year old offenders of sharing a secure young offender unit with offenders in the age group 17 to 21 years. However, the Government take the view, which has also been taken in Court Judgments and by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, that separation of juveniles is desirable. The Government are also reviewing the juvenile secure estate as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Feltham is used exclusively for young offenders and is the only establishment which covers London. There are currently no plans to reduce the age range of its intake, but the Prison Service is reviewing provision for 15 to 17-year-olds.

Proportional Representation

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the paper of 17 December 1997 written by Professor Ian McLean of Oxford University on the effect of different proportional representation formulae on the allocation of seats to parties in the European elections with particular reference to his conclusions on the use of the d'Hondt and Saint-Lague divisions. [30826]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Professor McLean's paper has been read with interest. The Government remain of the view that the d'Hondt divisor is the most suitable one to use for European Parliamentary elections, a view which was endorsed in a division on 26 February when the Committee of the whole House considered the European Parliamentary Elections Bill.

Firearms

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegally held firearms, by category, have been handed in to the police in each of the last five years; if he will indicate how many were handed in as part of a firearms amnesty; and if he will make a statement. [31955]

Mr. Michael: Information on the number of illegal firearms handed in to the police in general is not held centrally.

During the national firearms amnesty held in June 1996, the number of items surrendered was 22,823, consisting of 4,442 handguns, 1,859 rifles, 8,649 smooth bore guns, 5,361 air weapons and including 1,937 imitation firearms and 575 other.

At the request of the local community and the police, my right hon. Friend endorsed a recent local amnesty held in November in the London Borough of Lambeth. A total of 24 firearms were surrendered, consisting of 16 handguns, four shot guns, two rifles and two air weapons. Additionally, four imitation firearms and a canister of pepper spray were handed in.

We will continue to endorse similar initiatives which have the same excellent level of community and public support.

Driving Offences

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people the police have successfully prosecuted each year since 1990 for the offences of (a) dangerous driving, (b) careless driving and (c) failing to exercise proper control of a vehicle; and what percentage of these were using a mobile phone while driving. [31951]

Mr. Michael: Information on the number of convictions for dangerous driving and careless driving are published annually in Statistical Bulletin 'Motoring Offences, England and Wales' (table 11), a copy of which is in the Library. Careless driving includes offences of failing to exercise proper control of a vehicle, but are not separately identifiable.

The proportion of offences involving the use of a mobile phone while driving is not available, as the detailed circumstances are not collected centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons resident in Pakistan whose asylum applications were determined in each of the last three years had to wait more than (a) five years, (b) six years, (c) seven years, (d) eight years, (e) nine years and (f) 10 years for them to be finally determined. [32219]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table and relates to the time taken to reach an initial decision on those asylum applications lodged in the United Kingdom by nationals of Pakistan.

Europol

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if legal aid and a reimbursement of travel costs will be available to appellants to the Appeal Committee of the Joint Supervisory Body of Europol; [32403]

(2) where the proposed Joint Supervisory Body of Europol and its Appeal Committee are to be located. [32402]

Mr. Michael: These matters have not yet been decided. Both the location of the Joint Supervisory Body of Europol, and any arrangements for the provision of assistance and the reimbursement of costs to applicants to its Appeals Committee will be settled in the context of its Rules of Procedure, which are still under discussion.

Violence (Women)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to bring forward proposals for tackling crimes of violence against women. [31786]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 2 March 1998]: We are closely monitoring the working of the criminal justice system in relation to crimes of violence. One example of a recent initiative is the adoption by the police and other agencies of new procedures for handling cases of domestic violence. Ministers across Whitehall are co-operating in efforts to co-ordinate work to provide help and information to the victims of domestic violence.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security and Minister for Women announced in the House on 27 February 1998 the drawing up of a National Strategy to tackle all forms of violence against women.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice has been received by Ministers on the future role and funding of emergency planning on the basis of the recent consultation exercise; and for what reasons Home Office officials have declined to provide this advice to interested organisations. [32430]

Mr. George Howarth: A working document entitled "The future role and funding of local civil protection in England and Wales" was issued in November 1997 for discussion in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR). The CSR is reviewing all aspects of public expenditure, with a view to ensuring that taxpayers' money is being spent effectively in order to fulfil the Government's manifesto commitments.

It is not current practice to publish the advice given by officials to Ministers.

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the statistics of the replies to the survey questionnaire on emergency planning by categories of council. [32431]

Mr. George Howarth: A working document entitled "The future role and funding of local civil protection in England and Wales" was issued in November 1997 for discussion in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR). The CSR is reviewing all aspects of public expenditure, with a view to ensuring that taxpayers' money is being spent effectively in order to fulfil the Government's manifesto commitments.

The document was sent to all the major stakeholders, including local authority Chief Executives, local authority Emergency Planning Departments, the Local Government Association, the Emergency Planning Society, the emergency services and voluntary organisations. Recipients of the working document were not asked to identify themselves when returning the questionnaire and it is therefore not possible to publish the statistics of the replies by categories of council.

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation process on emergency planning took place at the Home Office Emergency Planning College in Easingwold, near York, on 15 and 16 January 1998; and what was the agreed basis for a review of the future of emergency planning. [32429]

Mr. George Howarth: As part of the Comprehensive Spending Review across central government, the Fire and Emergency Planning Directorate of the Home Office have issued a number of Working Documents for consultation. One of these is on the future role and funding of local civil protection in England and Wales. The Workshop which took place at the Emergency Planning College on 15 and 16 January was part of this consultation process. All the major stakeholders, including the Local Government Association, the Emergency Planning Society, the emergency services and the voluntary organisations were invited to send representatives.

Family Court Welfare Service

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the workings of the Family Court Welfare Service; what plans he has to reform it; and if he will make a statement. [32047]

Ms Quin [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The performance of probation services, including work on family court welfare matters, is subject to independent review to ensure they provide a satisfactory service to the courts and the public by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation. They recently published a report of a review of family court welfare work. This found that judges and magistrates praised and valued the work of court welfare officers.

As part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the full range of services provided to the courts on child welfare matters within family law, including that provided by the Probation Service, is under consideration.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) on 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 465, which announced that further work was to be pursued on the provision of the range of services currently provided to the courts on child welfare matters within family law by the Probation Service, Guardian ad litem and Reporting Officer Service and the Official Solicitor's Department and which set out the detailed terms of reference for that work.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32441]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 3 March 1998]: For the core Home Office (excluding the Agencies and Non-Departmental Public Bodies) the estimates are:

(a) No fuel allowances are paid.

(b) Not available, neither productive nor unproductive time during travel is measured centrally and no reliable estimate can be made.

(c) Motor mileage allowance is paid to officials when they use their own private motor vehicles for journeys recognised by the Department as appropriate for official travel by private motor vehicle. For the years in question, the amounts paid are:

Year	£
1994–95	Disproportionate cost

1997–98 (year to date)	777,270

(d) Public transport costs for the years in question are:

Prison and Probation Service Review

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings (a) Prison Service and (b) Probation personnel have had which involved consultation on the options for the Prison-Probation review; and if he will make a statement. [32485]

Ms Quin [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Review is being led by myself, in light of my ministerial responsibility for both services, and I am in regular touch with service representatives on this and other issues. I have appointed a Project Board to steer the work of the Review. The Board includes members of both services, and the two chief inspectors. The Board has so far met seven times. Since my right hon. Friend announced the Review on 16 July 1997, a variety of meetings have been held at which management and staff from both services have been briefed on progress and given opportunities to make their views known.

Twenty-five meetings have been held with Prison Service staff, at ten of which probation staff were also present; and five with probation committee chairs and chief probation officers. In addition, consultants who are assisting the Review on costing identified options have had a number of discussions with staff from both services.

As my right hon. Friend announced in July 1997, the main public consultation with all concerned will follow my consideration of the Review's examination of options for improving on present arrangements. There is no predetermined outcome; and my right hon. Friend and I shall take the views of all concerned into full account before we decide on the best way forward.

Road Blocks

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was spent by the Metropolitan Police on undertaking road blocks, in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will list the occasions when road blocks were undertaken in conjunction with other agencies, other than for national security reasons. [32584]

Mr. Michael: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that there is no current requirement within the Metropolitan Police Service to keep account of the costs for road checks. The checks are a core function of the Metropolitan Police Service's work and do not incur any additional expense to the budget.

During 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997, nine road checks were carried out. Two checks were for the purpose of ascertaining whether a vehicle was carrying a person reasonably suspected of having committed a serious arrestable offence and seven checks were where it was suspected that the vehicles carried a witness to a serious arrestable offence.

Operation Mermaid, a nationally co-ordinated road check involving most United Kingdom police forces targets the safe operation of commercial vehicles. The checks are undertaken on the same day and for the same duration by each participating police force.

The checks for 1997 were conducted on:

9 April: 0700 to 1500

10 June: 1600 to 2400

10 September: 1200 to 2000

18 November: 0700 to 1500.

Other agencies involved were:

Customs and Excise: for illegally imported goods and/or non duty paid fuel

Vehicle Inspectorate: for vehicle condition

Benefit Fraud Investigation Unit: detection of fraudulent claims to the Department of Social Security.

Additionally, an officer assists Westminster City Council for 12 hours a week with a pilot enforcement scheme under the Road Traffic (Vehicle Emission) (Fixed Penalty) Regulations 1997. The power to stop the vehicles is exercised under section 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988.

Jason Marcus Sebastian

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take following the inquest into the death of Jason Marcus Sebastian; and if he will make a statement. [32699]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service has now received the coroner's comments following the inquest into the death of Jason Marcus Sebastian at Belmarsh prison on 19 September 1997. The evidence which was presented at the inquest and the comments made by the coroner are being carefully considered.

In the light of an internal Prison Service investigation, the governor of Belmarsh has already implemented a number of changes in the prison's procedures and personnel, and carried out a full review of the prison's suicide awareness policies.

These changes include: the appointment of a full-time suicide awareness co-ordinator and a new Head of Health Care, who is a senior nurse; regular care reviews of "at risk" prisoners; and more thorough assessments of all prisoners by a medical officer before they leave the health care centre. All staff working directly with prisoners are receiving refresher training in suicide awareness as a matter of urgency. The procedure for medical assessment prior to adjudications at the prison has also been improved.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many receptions have been held in his Department since he took office; how many people have attended; and what was the total cost of these events. [25178]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, FCO Ministers have hosted 17 receptions attended by approximately 3,400 people at a cost of £42,786.51 (two bills are outstanding).

High Commissions (Sports Facilities)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what categories of persons, other than his Department's staff, are permitted to use the sports and recreation facilities provided at the British High Commissions in (a) Nairobi, (b) Dar es Salaam, (c) Kampala and (d) Harare. [32631]

Mr. Fatchett: Sport and recreational facilities at the four British High Commissions mentioned can be used by the UK-based staff of the mission (and their dependants), other Crown Servants (and their dependants) and their invited guests.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total weekly usage by officials and their families of the sport and recreation facilities provided at the British high commissions in (a) Nairobi, (b) Dar es Salaam, (c) Kampala and (d) Harare for the first week in (i) March, (ii) June and (iii) November 1997. [32629]

Mr. Fatchett: No records are kept of weekly usage of the sport and recreation facilities provided at the four British High Commissions mentioned. The facilities are used on a regular basis.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the costs for the financial year 1996–97 attributable to the operation of the sports and recreation facilities provided for officials and their families at the British high commissions in (a) Nairobi, (b) Dar es Salaam, (c) Kampala and (d) Harare. [32627]

Mr. Fatchett: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Council (Tapes)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Presidency has access on request to tapes held by the General Secretariat of the European Council. [32295]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Secretariat's tapes are for the use of the Secretariat, who assist the Presidency of the day.

EU Information Projects (Funding)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 597, on funding for EU information projects, if he will estimate the amount spent in the United Kingdom in the current financial year. [32196]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Commission Representation in the UK does not compile accounts showing all EU spending on information projects in the UK. It is therefore difficult to estimate the amount spent in the current financial year, but it is probably less than 10% of the total EU budget for such projects.

EU Business

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for March and the major European Union events for the next six months. [32950]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will support the appeal made by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia for funds in support of the Prosecutor's 1998 programme of exhumations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [32951]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully support the work of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia. Progress with the exhumations work is of great importance not only for the investigation and prosecution of suspected war criminals, but for the people of the region who have lost friends and relatives during the war. I am pleased to announce that the Government are making an immediate contribution of £1.22 million ($2 million) to the Tribunal's Trust Fund so that the 1998 exhumations programme can begin on schedule on 1 April.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will offer financial support to the United Nations' programme to develop democratic, professional police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina as a key element in implementing the Dayton Agreement. [32952]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully support the work of the United Nations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in particular its programme to develop a professional, effective, and democratic police force. I am pleased to announce that the Government are making an immediate contribution of up to £3 million to the UN Trust Fund for Police Restructuring, to provide equipment and training for the local police forces in both Entities, under the programme managed by the UN's International Police Task Force.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32477]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Mr. Jackson), encouraged Departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. My Department is actively considering this issue.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32458]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend The Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) my Department will actively be considering the issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for its key buildings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Law

Mr. Caplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has for the reform of company law; and if she will make a statement. [33143]

Mrs. Beckett: I am today publishing a consultation paper, "Modern Company Law for a Competitive Economy". The paper sets out my plans for a major review of company law and its relationship with corporate governance codes. The review will focus on the Companies Act 1985. Insolvency and Financial Services legislation will not in general fall within its scope.

The review is an important part of the Government's strategy to modernise the nation. While much of the relevant statute has stood the test of time, the review will ensure that company law statute can continue to underpin the growth, competitiveness and accountability of British companies into the 21 Century. It will, for example, consider whether, taking account of partnership law and the proposed Limited Liability Partnership, business has the right choice of legislative vehicles for growth. It will address the complexity of the current legislation, and ensure a structure that is clear to users; and it will seek a flexible framework of regulation which is cost effective for companies, and fair to all interests.

The review will be a considered, consultative and long-term process. A Steering Group, chaired by my Department, will manage the review process; and there will be a widely-based Consultative Committee to ensure active representation of all wider interests. Full public consultation will continue at the end of this year with the first report of a first expert working group, and will continue throughout the process.

The review will culminate in the publication of a White Paper on proposed company law reforms, towards the end of this Parliament.

Employment Agencies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to require employment and labour agencies to register with her Department. [32122]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My officials are considering the regulatory structure for the recruitment industry. In due course we plan to issue a consultation document on the existing regulations governing agency conduct, and I am also ready to listen to all suggestions concerning the wider regulation of the industry, including proposals for a registration system.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much (a) public, (b) private and (c) overseas money has been spent on modifying UKAEA's D2670 plant at Dounreay Nuclear Establishment to enable the reprocessing of spent fuel from the ICI TRIGA reactor at Billingham; if she will list the countries of origin of the overseas money; and if she will make a statement. [31749]

Mr. Battle: No public money will be spent on modifying the D2670 plant to undertake this work as the contractual arrangements with ICI allow for the full recovery of UKAEA's costs. Any funds required from the private sector and their sources are a matter for ICI.

Duty Free

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to express the views of the United Kingdom within the European Union on the proposed abolition of the European Duty Free purchasing schemes in 1999. [24080]

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish in the Official Report her letter of 25 February 1998 to the hon. Member for Wokingham concerning the BEUA. [32686]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: No.

Assisted Area Status

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions regional selective assistance has been granted to an investor in an area of intermediate assisted area status at a level higher than usual level because of the potential impact the investment will have on an adjacent area with full assisted area status in each region of England in 1997. [32556]

Mrs. Roche: The ceilings for regional selective assistance in intermediate and development areas are fixed by the EU and cannot be exceeded. The Government also impose cost per job limits on the total RSA that can be offered to individual projects. Within these limits each case is judged on its own merits. One case was approved for exceptional treatment above the internal limits in 1997.

Sulphur Protocol

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Government will announce its conclusions on the sulphur protocol, and its impact on the coal industry. [31880]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The UNECE Second Sulphur Protocol was signed in 1994 and ratified in 1996 by the previous Government. The Government have no plans to announce retrospective conclusions on the Protocol and its impacts.

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The implementation of the terms of the arrangements made in December between the electricity generators and RJB Mining is a matter for the parties concerned.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what ceiling she plans to place on offers of grant made by the regional development agencies to inward investors. [32680]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Government have made clear in their White Paper "Building Partnerships for Prosperity" (Cm 3814), that Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) will remain the responsibility of my Department. The Regional Development Agencies will have no responsibility for making offers of RSA scheme grants.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what communications she has received from the Northern Development Corporation concerning the concordat on Inward Investment; and if she has replied. [32679]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: My Department and the Northern Development Company communicate with each other on a regular basis on a wide range of business. I regard this correspondence as confidential.

Exports (Indonesia)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much loan and cover is required from the Export Credits Guarantee Department for the 16 Hawk jets which were to be supplied to Indonesia after 1 May 1997. [32683]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: ECGD supported a £280 million loan for these aircraft in March 1996. The principal and interest guaranteed in respect to this loan totals £362 million.

Technology Transfer

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking in the development of technology transfer to developing countries under the auspices of the convention on biological diversity. [31988]

Mr. Battle: My Department's approach to technology co-operation relevant to the objectives of the convention on biological diversity is the same as that which applies to environment-related technologies more generally. It continues to promote a framework of policies nationally and internationally, including effective protection of intellectual property rights, which encourages private investment in developing, commercialising and diffusing technology.

To provide practical help, following the Earth Summit in Rio in 1992 where the Convention on Biological Diversity was agreed, the UK launched the Technology Partnership Initiative. TPI, which is run by the Joint (DTI/DETR) Environmental Markets Unit (JEMU), aims to improve access by business in developing countries to information on up-to-date technological solutions and best practice available from UK companies, and foster improved business to business contacts.

French Lorry Blockades (Compensation)

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many claims for compensation have been submitted to the French authorities since 1 January 1995 following lorry blockades; and how many have been (a) paid in full, (b) paid in part and (c) not paid at all. [31923]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 2 March 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information is not available. My Department provided detailed advice and assistance in respect of the 1996 blockades, during which many UK hauliers were stranded, and forwarded those claims that were routed through it. Other claims were submitted direct to the French authorities and so we do not know the total number. Settlement and payment of claims is a matter between the French authorities and individual claimants. My Department is continuing to work closely with the French authorities to ensure that claims are dealt with fairly within the framework of French law.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Estate

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how much has been spent on (a) building and (b) refurbishing works in the parliamentary estate in each of the last five years. [32545]

Sir Sydney Chapman: The responsibility of the Accommodation and Works Committee extends only to areas of the Parliamentary estate administered by the House of Commons. Gross expenditure from the House of Commons Works Vote in each of the past five years is as tabulated.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31290]

Angela Eagle: Ministers at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions receive numerous requests for meetings from both hon. Members and organisations on the full range of the Department's responsibilities. Since 1 May 1997, Ministers have held 277 meetings at which hon. Members were present.

House Building

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25, if he will now reduce the targets for new housebuilding in the West Midlands region in the current plan period. [31512]

Mr. Raynsford: No. The revised provision of 335,000 for the region was based on comprehensive advice from the West Midlands Forum of Local Authorities who worked with both the House Builders Federation and the Council for the Protection of Rural England in arriving at that advice.

This level of provision over the 20 year period 1991–2011 requires no more than maintaining the level of housebuilding achieved in the region during the 1990s.

Green-field Sites

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy in respect of the development of new towns on green-field sites; and what representations he has received on Eagle Star's proposals for Micheldever Station, Hampshire. [31874]

Mr. Raynsford: National planning policy guidance on new settlements is set out in PPGs 3 and 13, and the recent policy document "Planning for the Communities of the Future" (Cmd 3885). It is for local authorities to decide their policy on new settlements in the light of their development plan strategy and the need to promote sustainable patterns of development.

Since the publication of the Hampshire Structure Plan EIP panel report the Government have received around 30 letters of representation concerning the new settlement proposals at Micheldever Station. Lord Lucas also tabled a Lords question in June 1997. The Dever Society has recently sent me a copy of a Sustainability Assessment of BAT/Eagle Star's proposal, prepared for them by Land-Use Consultants.

Leaseholders

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assistance local authorities are able to offer to leaseholders who are unable to meet their share of the cost of improvement works; what additional assistance the Government propose to offer; and if he will make a statement. [31652]

Mr. Raynsford: There are a number of options available to local authorities to assist their leaseholders. The previous Government issued directions to local authorities and other social landlords, allowing them to reduce charges for works of improvement, repair and maintenance in some cases, and requiring them to do so in certain cases where central Government funding was being sought. Other options available to authorities include deferring charges, abating charges in extreme hardship cases, or offering discretionary loans. Local authorities also have powers to repurchase properties. It is for each authority to decide what help it can give, having regard to its existing housing priorities and its available resources.

We are considering, in the context of our Comprehensive Spending Review, whether further measures are needed to help leaseholders. We intend to publish a consultation paper later this Spring on a range of issues of concern to leaseholders.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what new steps his Department is taking to increase the number of bathing waters in the Blackpool/Fylde coast area that comply with EU standards. [31661]

Angela Eagle: Following my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment's call on the Environment Agency and North West Water to work together to identify the causes of failure of these bathing waters and improve performance, they announced on 26 February plans for action both in the short and long term to increase compliance with the EU standards. The Government welcome this announcement and the high priority being given to improving bathing water quality standards along this stretch of coast.

Public Interest Reports

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what statutory authority local authorities make a financial charge for sending out copies of district auditors' public interest reports. [31744]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 18(5) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 requires a local authority to include with the documents open to public inspection before a meeting, a copy of any report prepared by an auditor under section 15(3) of the 1982 Act, which is to be discussed at the meeting. Section 100H of the Local Government Act 1972 provides that members of the public may require copies of such documents upon payment of a reasonable fee. Section 18A of the 1982 Act requires a local authority to provide to any member of the public on request, on payment of a reasonable sum, a copy of, or of part of, any report by an auditor under section 15(3) of the Act made to the authority before the conclusion of the audit.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the information about planning requirements required to be given in response to house purchase searches in respect of listed buildings and buildings in conservation areas; and if he will make a statement. [32096]

Mr. Raynsford: I have no such plans. Except for information recorded on the Local Land Charges Register, the present system for dealing with search inquiries on these matters rests on voluntary arrangements agreed between local authorities and the Law Society. The Government do not determine the content of these inquiries or the information given to inquirers.

Coastguard Stations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what action he has taken following the failure of the database computer at Liverpool Coastguard Station on 31 January 1998; and what action he intends to take to ensure that a full maintenance programme is in place; [31948]

(2) if he will list by coastguard station the dates on which the station has been staffed below the recommended watch level since 1 January; [31950]

(3) if he will list the number of occasions telephone communications between the coastguard station on the Shetland Islands and the Scottish mainland have failed during the last 12 months. [31949]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The failure of the Action Data System at Liverpool on 31 January was dealt with under the current 24 hour maintenance contract within the required response time. There are no plans to change this contract.

In the last twelve months there have been no known occasions when the telephone communications between Shetland Maritime Rescue Sub-Centre and the Scottish Mainland have failed.

There are no recommended watch levels for Her Majesty's Coastguard co-ordination centres. Suggested watch levels were set out in the "Focus for Change" review and can be varied locally following an assessment of perceived and actual operational demand and risk. The attached matrix shows, by station and date, the number of hours when watch levels were below suggested levels.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contract, with its value, concluded by his Department and its agencies for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–2001 and (e) 2001–2002. [32007]

Angela Eagle: The Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport published annual information on surveys and this practice will be continued by the combined DETR Survey Control Unit. I refer the right hon. Member to earlier responses given on this subject on 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 127 and 5 February 1998, Official Report, column 728.

It is not possible to provide costs for opinion surveys that the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and its agencies have yet to carry out.

Social Services

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the level of the SSA on social services on elderly people in Oxfordshire. [31992]

Mr. Raynsford: No such assessment has been made, because the impact of any change in the level of the SSA for Personal Social Services for elderly people depends upon local authorities' decisions on the size and allocation of their budgets.

Hedgerows

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what length of hedgerow in England and Wales has (a) been destroyed in each year from 1992 to 1997 and (b) been created in each year from 1992 to 1997. [32246]

Angela Eagle: The latest survey into changes in countryside hedgerows in England and Wales, which was undertaken by the Institute for Terrestrial Ecology, covered the years 1990 to 1993. This estimated that on average some 3,600 km of hedgerows were lost due to outright removal each year, whilst an average of 4,400 km of new hedgerows were planted per year.

British Rail Land

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much land in Wales previously owned by British Rail has been disposed of for (a) industries, (b) housing and (c) other developments since privatisation; [32240]

(2) how much land previously owned by British Rail has been disposed of for (a) industrial, (b) housing and (c) other developments in the United Kingdom since privatisation; [32239]

(3) how much land previously owned by British Rail has been disposed of for (a) industrial, (b) housing and (c) other developments in Scotland since privatisation. [32241]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I regret that information on sales of land by British Rail since privatisation is not kept in the form requested. Disposal of land transferred by British Rail to Railtrack and other railway businesses at privatisation is a matter for the companies concerned.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the proposals to improve access to open country apply to set-aside land. [32098]

Angela Eagle: Access to set-aside is already encouraged under MAFF's Countryside Access Scheme. The Government's proposals, set out in their consultation paper, "Access to the Open Countryside", identify mountain, moor, heath, down and registered common land as the types of land to which priority for greater access should be given. The Government's proposals do not apply to developed land or to land used for agriculture (including set-aside), other than for extensive grazing.

Grouse Moorlands

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of (a) changes in the population of birds of prey on grouse moorlands since 1990 and (b) the reasons for such changes. [32211]

Angela Eagle: Two species of birds of prey are associated with predation of red grouse on grouse moors, the hen harrier and the peregrine falcon. The last survey of the hen harrier was undertaken in 1988, and a further survey will commence in the summer of 1998. However, recent work on the hen harrier has indicated that their survival rate on grouse moors was lower than on other moorland habitats, and this has been attributed to illegal persecution.

The peregrine falcon has significantly increased in recent years following a decline caused by the use of organochlorines in the 1950s and 1960s. However, persecution and environmental pollutants may restrict the population in some areas.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what policies are applied by English Partnerships when deciding whether to fund development proposals affecting sites of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement. [32080]

Angela Eagle: English Partnerships' statutory remit is to regenerate derelict, contaminated, vacant and underused sites to bring them back into beneficial use. The Agency works exclusively in areas of economic and social need. The nature of the Agency's remit is such that the environmental impact of its work is almost always positive. Where it is involved in proposals affected by SSSIs, it is usually because the Agency is investing in enhancing the environmental quality of that area.

There are, however, hard cases where the Agency needs to consider development proposals which might adversely affect areas of special scientific interest. In these circumstances, the Agency considers all the environmental effects of the project including the removal of environmental hazards and nuisances, the potential visual improvement and nature conservation issues. These factors then have to be weighed alongside the economic and social needs of the local population.

The Agency also operates, however, within the statutory planning system. It would therefore expect issues concerning the status of an SSSI to have been considered in the local development plan and, subsequently, at planning application stage. Of particular relevance in this context is the role of English Nature as statutory consultee.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list those SSSIs that have been affected by development projects funded by English Partnerships; and if he will in each case set out the nature of the damage; [32079]

(2) what SSSIs currently being considered as sites for developments are in part or wholly funded by English Partnerships. [32078]

Angela Eagle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Rainham Marshes

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to call in the proposed development in the Thames Marshes SSSI at Havering Riverside (Rainham Marshes) promoted and funded by English Partnerships. [32081]

Mr. Caborn: This application is currently before the London Borough of Havering for their consideration. If they resolve to grant permission for the development, the application will then be referred to the Secretary of State under the Shopping Direction and consideration will be given to whether the application should be called in.

Climate Change

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government plan to ratify the Kyoto Protocol on Climate Change. [31987]

Angela Eagle: It is the Government's intention that the UK should sign the Kyoto Protocol at an early date, subject to discussion with our EU colleagues to maximise the participation of Member States and the Community in signing the Protocol at the same time. Thereafter, the Government are keen that the Protocol should be brought into force at an early stage. However before ratification satisfactory progress on a number of outstanding issues is necessary, particularly with regard to the operation of flexible mechanisms such as emissions trading, joint implementation and the clean development mechanism.

Sludge

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those bodies classified as sludge producers that maintain registers for the purposes of the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989. [32186]

Angela Eagle: Registers are maintained by:

Anglian Water
East of Scotland Water
North West Water
North of Scotland Water
Northumbrian Water
Severn Trent Water
South West Water
Southern Water
Thames Water
Welsh Water
Wessex Water
West of Scotland Water
Yorkshire Water.

Coal Industry

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors governed the composition of the Steering Committee of his Department's project on chemical variation and end users of coal. [32565]

Mr. Raynsford: The factors involved in this selection included the need to obtain commercially sensitive information from suppliers, users and the owners of coal, to ensure that those responsible for coal industry regulation and for advising on planning applications to extract coal were involved, and to obtain the views of the communities directly affected by the industry's operations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities in the North East Region which have not (a) made representations or (b) sought meetings with Ministers, in respect of the local government financial settlement for 1998–99. [32724]

Mr. Raynsford: Of those authorities within the boundary of the Government Office for the North East, the following did not make written representations during consultation on the provisional local government finance settlement 1998/99:

Hartlepool
Durham City
Sedgefield
Teesdale
Wear Valley
Alnwick
Berwick upon Tweed
Blyth Valley

Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change regulations concerning (a) private hire vehicles and (b) the eligibility of drivers to drive private hire vehicles; and when any new regulations will come into force. [32537]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department consulted last year on a proposal to make an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, with a view to relaxing the constraints on who may drive licensed private hire vehicles in the light of the Benson v. Boyce judgment. The results of that consultation process are at present under consideration.

Telecommunications Masts

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to control the spread of mobile phone communications masts and to establish how many have been erected (a) with and (b) without planning permission; and if he will halt further developments. [31790]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 2 March 1998]: This Government's general policy on telecommunications development is to facilitate the growth of telecommunications systems while protecting the environment. We attach considerable importance to minimising the environmental impact of telecommunications mast development. For that reason, we last year announced our expectation that operators would provide evidence to local planning authorities that they have carefully considered the use of existing masts, buildings and other structures before seeking to erect any new mast. Telecommunication operators licensed by the Department of Trade and Industry generally have permitted development rights to erect masts of up to 15 m in height, subject to a prior approval procedure. This gives the local planning authority the opportunity to say whether it wishes to approve, within 28 days, details of the mast's siting and appearance. If the authority considers that the development will pose a serious threat to amenity, it may refuse approval. A planning application is required for the erection of masts in protected areas such as National parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty and conservation areas, and for masts above 15 m in height elsewhere. It is open to the local planning authority to take enforcement action against masts which enjoy neither permitted development rights nor planning permission. We have no plans to collect centrally information on the number of masts erected (a) with and (b) without planning permission.

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to protect (a) ancient woodland and (b) sensitive wildlife habitats from damage by telephone communications masts. [31791]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Planning Policy Guidance note 9: Nature Conservation gives guidance on how the Government's policies for the conservation of our natural heritage are to be reflected in land use planning. Local authorities are advised that development plans should include planning policies to be applied to nature conservation sites. Such policies should have regard to the relevant guidance given in PPG9. Key ancient woodland and sensitive wildlife sites in England receive protection from development through designation by English Nature as Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs). Other mechanisms which offer protection to ancient woodlands include the requirement to obtain felling licences and the use of tree preservation orders by local planning authorities.

As I explained in my earlier answer to my hon. Friend today, telecommunications mast development is subject to either a full planning application or a prior approval procedure. Where a mast is proposed in an SSSI that lies within a designated area such as a National Park, an area of outstanding natural beauty or conservation area, or where the proposed mast exceeds 15 m in height, a full planning application will be required. The planning authority is required to consult English Nature before granting permission for development in an SSSI. Where a mast is proposed in an SSSI outside such designated areas, the local planning authority is able to give or refuse approval to siting and appearance under the "prior approval procedure". The Code of Best Practice for handling mast/tower proposals under this procedure, published by my Department, highlights the need for early consultation in these cases between the operator, local planning authority and English Nature.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest also derive protection from the requirement for owners and occupiers to notify English Nature of plans to carry out specified operations which it has listed as likely to damage the interest of the site. This could include the erection of telecommunications masts. Notification enables English Nature to consider whether to give consent to the scheme or to invite the owner or occupier to discuss possible modifications.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress in developing the Swanwick Air Traffic Control Centre, indicating the proposed opening date for the new centre. [32725]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer given by my noble Friend Baroness Farrington to Lord Campbell on 26 February 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 787.

New Forest

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement regarding his plans to consult about the future status of the New Forest. [32624]

Angela Eagle: The Countryside Commission will report to Ministers later in the spring on a number of issues relating to the protection of nationally important landscapes. The report will include initial advice on whether National Park status might be a more effective and appropriate solution for any of the areas, including the New Forest, which may be considered as in need of particular protection. All the options for the future protection of the New Forest will be considered very thoroughly in the light of the Commission's advice. The New Forest Committee has also carried out its own consultation, the results of which will be taken into account.

Parish Councils

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recourse is open to a member of the public who is dissatisfied with the treatment he receives from his parish council. [32271]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Individual electors can raise any concern they have about the business or conduct of a parish council at the parish meeting. Where parish councils carry out a function on behalf of a local authority, complaints alleging injustice on account of maladministration may be investigated by the Local Government Ombudsman.

Building Regulations

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the scope of Part M of the Building Regulations to apply to buildings requiring a change of use. [32595]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 March 1998]: There are no current plans for extending the scope of Part M of the Building Regulations to buildings requiring a change of use. Any proposal for making such a change would need to take into account the implications of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and any future legislation relating to disabled people.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to incorporate Part M of the Building Regulations into the criteria for planning approval, when an applicant applies for a change of use. [32596]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The planning system and approval under the building regulations are two separate control regimes with their own objectives and criteria. Planning Policy Guidance Note 1, "General Policy and Principles" explains that

"The grant of planning permission does not remove the need to obtain any other consents which are necessary nor does it imply that such consents will necessarily be forthcoming."

We have no plans to make planning permission conditional on obtaining other forms of consent. However, access issues can be material considerations under the planning system and PPG1 advises that

"Local planning authorities, both in development plans and in determining individual planning applications, should take into account access issues".

Politically Restricted Posts

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the Local Government (Politically Restricted Posts) (No. 2) Regulations 1990. [32597]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 March 1998]: On 30 September my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing announced a review of the regulations governing politically restricted posts in local government. The Government remain firmly committed to the principle of political impartiality among senior and other front line public servants, but we wish to satisfy ourselves that the detail of the restrictions, and the level and number of local government officers affected, are appropriate. We intend to publish proposals for consultation by Easter.

St. Piran's Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to celebrate St. Piran's day in future years. [31792]

Angela Eagle: I have no special plans to celebrate St. Piran's Day.

Empty Housing (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of empty housing units in each district council area in Nottinghamshire in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997, (i) in total and (ii) by sector. [32124]

Mr. Raynsford: The numbers of vacant local authority and housing associations dwellings in each district area council in Nottinghamshire on 1 April are set out alongside the local authority's estimates of private and other public sector vacant dwellings.

Empty Housing

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the latest figures for vacant dwellings in England. [33101]

Mr. Raynsford: The total number of vacant dwellings in England is down by 23,000 on the April 1996 figure. This fall is encouraging.

At 1 April 1997, a total of 81,200 council homes in England were empty, 2.4 per cent. of local authorities' stock. The 1996 figure was 79,600 (2.3 per cent.). All of the increase was in "management vacants" (dwellings available for letting immediately or after minor repairs) which account for 61 per cent. of all vacant local authority homes.

I am disappointed to see that the total number of local authority vacants has risen for the third year running, after falling in successive years between 1990 and 1994. It is clearly part of good housing management practice for local authorities to keep their empty dwellings to a minimum. My Department's Working Group on Best Value in Housing will be looking at performance indicators, and will consider whether it would be appropriate for local authorities to establish local targets for reducing the proportion of their housing stock which is out of effective use.

We are making nearly £800 million available to local authorities in 1997–98 and 1998–99 through the Capital Receipts Initiative, and I hope that local authorities will make the very best use of this additional spending power to improve and renovate their existing stock and make it more attractive to prospective tenants.

It is also disappointing to note that vacancy rates in the Registered Social Landlord (RSL) sector have risen from 23,600 (2.5 per cent.) at April 1, 1996 to 26,800 (2.7 per cent.) at April 1, 1997. The Housing corporation has published research and held seminars to inform and encourage RSLs to take action to reduce void levels. RSLs should also benefit from the development of Best Value in Housing.

Many local authorities and RSLs already have good empty property strategies for which they can take credit. But there is still much to be done, and the Government will continue to encourage social housing providers to develop, and implement, effective empty property strategies to make the best use of existing housing stock.

The number of vacancies in the private sector fell from 667,000 in 1996 to 640,000 in 1997. This is the fourth successive year that the numbers have fallen. About 45 per cent. of private sector empty homes are "transactional" vacancies, which are properties lying vacant for a short period as part of the normal buying and selling process. Some 225,000 are problematic vacants which may require action to bring them back into use.

In the Government sector, the number of empty homes held by my Department, the Ministry of Defence and the Home Office fell by 754 between 1 April 1996 and 1 April 1997. The number of Government empty homes is still too high, and this government is determined to improve on these figures in the future.

I am placing in the Library of the House a list of local authorities in England, ranked on the basis of their management vacants at 1 April 1997.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what conclusions he has reached following his consultations in 1997 in reviewing planning policy on opencast coal. [33127]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, has taken into account the responses to the consultation on planning policy on opencast coal conducted last year, and the announcement last December by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister of a full review of energy policy. In consultation with his colleagues he has concluded that there should be a full review of Minerals Planning Guidance Note 3 on Coal Mining and Colliery Spoil Disposal. This will run in conjunction with the present review of energy policy, and will take into account its conclusions. The energy policy review will in turn take into account the planning issues raised by coal extraction, including the issues on opencast coal dealt with in the 1997 consultation paper.

Water Pollution

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to enhance protection of the aquatic environment against pollution by dangerous substances. [33228]

Angela Eagle: New regulations have today been laid in the House setting environmental quality standards (EQSs) for 20 List II substances under the Dangerous Substances Directive. The substances are:

4-chloro-3-methyl-phenol
2-chlorophenol
2,4-dichlorophenol
2,4 D (ester and non ester)
1,1,1-trichloroethane
1,1,2-trichloroethane
bentazone benzene biphenyl chloronitrotoluenes
demeton dimethoate linuron mecoprop mevinphos naphthalene omethoate toluene triazaphos and xylene.

These substances are in addition to the EQSs for 13 substances in regulations made in November last year.

Nuclear Waste

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the Government's policy towards the management of (a) high level, (b) intermediate level, (c) low level and (d) very low level nuclear waste. [32082]

Mr. Macdonald: I have been asked to reply.

The overall policy on the management of all types of radioactive waste was most recently set out in the White Paper "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy" (Cm 2919), published in 1995.

The Government have been considering the implications of the decision of the former Secretary of State for the Environment to dismiss Nirex's appeal against the refusal of planning permission for a rock characterisation facility at Longlands Farm, near Sellafield. The House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology is currently undertaking an inquiry into nuclear waste management. We welcome the committee's inquiry, and will wish to await their report—which is expected in the summer—and undertake widespread consultation before coming to a firm view on the way forward.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Elections

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the advantages of setting up an electoral commission to report to the Scottish Parliament on measures to reform local government elections. [30704]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 26 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 23 January 1998, Official Report, columns 704–05, the establishment of the Commission on Local Government and the Scottish Parliament. It will be open to that Commission to consider whether any changes to the way in which local authorities are elected are desirable in the interests of promoting their democratic accountability. The Commission will report as soon as possible after the election of the Scottish Parliament.

Funicular Railway, Cairngorm

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with the European Commission with regard to the proposed expenditure of structural funds on the proposed funicular railway on Cairngorm. [31239]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Officials in the Department have maintained contact with desk officers in Directorate-General XVI dealing with Scottish Structural Funds Programmes.

Empty Properties

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on trends in the number of empty (a) local authority homes, (b) private homes, (c) Government properties containing residential accommodation and (d) flats above shops in each of the last 12 years. [32330]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Information on the number of local authority vacant dwellings in each of the last 12 years and the number of Scottish Office vacant dwellings since 1989 is shown in the table. Information on vacant private dwellings and vacant flats above shops is not collected centrally. Information on Scottish Office vacant dwellings is not available for the period before 1989.

Planning Applications

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will amend planning guidelines to allow local authorities greater scope to turn down planning applications on the grounds of poor quality or design. [32336]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 3 March 1998]: "National Planning Policy Guideline 1 (NPPG): The Planning System" informs local authorities and others that quality and design are material considerations to be taken into account when determining applications; thus authorities have scope to reject applications which are deficient in either quality or design. Research is currently underway which will advise on the operation and adequacy of the current framework of guidance, and we intend to issue a consultation paper later this month or early next on the quality of new housing in the Scottish countryside. The need for further guidance will be considered once the findings from both these exercises have been evaluated.

Out-of-town Shopping and Leisure Centres

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on greenfield land, excluding Green Belt, in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in Scotland; [32323]

(2) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on recycled land in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in Scotland; [32325]

(3) what is the number and surface area of out-of-town shopping centres and leisure centres that have been built on Green Belt land in each of the last 12 years by (a) county and (b) region in Scotland. [32324]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 3 March 1998]: This information is not held centrally. However, research has recently been commissioned to investigate the establishment of a new database for monitoring retail development in Scotland.

Local Curfew Schemes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the operation of local curfew schemes; and if he will make a statement. [32583]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office commissioned a research consultant in November 1997 to evaluate aspects of Strathclyde Police's Child Safety Initiative in Hamilton. A draft report is scheduled for submission to The Scottish Office in late summer 1998.

Throat Cancer

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings he has held with the Scottish Laryngectomy Group; what assessment he has made of medical evidence on a link between exposure to asbestos dust and cancer of the throat; if he will place a copy of the medical advice which he has received on this issue in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [31735]

Mr. Galbraith: Scottish Office Ministers have not met the Scottish Laryngectomy Group. I am aware of two reports dealing with asbestos and laryngeal cancer. These are "Asbestos—Effects on Health of Exposure to Asbestos" prepared on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission by Sir Richard Doll and Julian Peto and published in 1985 (HMSO, ISBN 0 11 883803 2) and "Cancer of the Larynx", a report by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (IIAC) to the Secretary of State for Social Security published in 1989 (HMSO CM779).

Millennium Experience (Donations)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that the names of the directors and chief executives of companies contributing to or making donations to the Millennium Experience are notified to the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee. [31353]

The Prime Minister: The names of companies sponsoring the Millennium Experience will be made public, and the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee are free to make such inquiries as they think fit about any individuals referred to them.

Honours System

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to reform the honours system. [31781]

Note:

One Member of the Authority, whose name is not in the public domain, has been given an exemption under Paragraph 14 of the Authority's Code of Conduct from listing his/her interests.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Police Authority for Northern Ireland is taking to prepare for its meetings to be held in public in line with procedures and practices implemented by police authorities elsewhere in the United Kingdom. [31638]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I am informed that the Director of Public Prosecutions requested and obtained a copy of the Judgment in the case of David Adams v the Chief Constable of the RUC, which is presently being considered.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what disciplinary steps have been taken by the Chief Constable of the RUC against those RUC officers who assaulted David Adams whilst in custody following his arrest; and if they are still serving officers. [31630]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: Following a complaint made on behalf of Mr. Adams in 1994, the Independent Commission for Police Complaints supervised an investigation into the circumstances of the arrest and detention. In October 1995 a dispensation was granted by the ICPC on the ground that it was not practicable to complete the investigation given the level of co-operation thus far provided by or on behalf of the complainant. In addition, a file was forwarded to the Director of Public Prosecutions who directed 'no prosecution' against any police officer.

The Chief Constable is studying the findings in the civil court proceedings.

I can confirm that the police officers involved in the arrest of Mr. Adams are currently serving in the RUC.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what files have been sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions as a consequence of the two processions held in Belfast on 22 February 1998. [31905]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: These matters are under investigation. No file has yet been forwarded to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

RUC Divisional Headquarters, Coleraine

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to visit the RUC divisional headquarters in Coleraine. [31907]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans at present to visit Coleraine RUC Divisional Headquarters. She does, however, look forward to visiting Coleraine in the future and would like to visit the RUC station and meet with the staff.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many outstanding warrants of arrest are held by the RUC or other forces for individuals sought in connection with scheduled offences. [30034]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The information is not currently available and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

Police Station, Coleraine

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is her estimate of the cost of a new police station in Coleraine; [31906]

(2) when she expects the Police Authority to decide to begin work on a new police station in Coleraine. [31908]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: As a decision has not yet been taken with regard to replacing Coleraine police station it is not possible to provide (a) an estimated cost, or (b) date for commencement of work.

Social Fund

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what assessment she has made of the advantages of retaining the social fund section of the Newry Social Security Office, and re-organising the other sections in the southern region; [31736]

(2) what consultations have taken place regarding the rationalisation of Social Fund offices in the southern region with (a) elected representatives, (b) consumer groups, (c) community organisations, (d) representatives of client groups and (e) others. [31737]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Chris Thompson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 2 March 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your further Parliamentary Questions about the administration of the Social Fund in the Social Security Agency's South District.

Ref: 31736

The Centralisation of the administration of social fund has been pilotted in two Districts. This has proved that the planned efficiencies can be realised and also that the quality of work can be improved. The Agency is therefore convinced that the centralisation of social fund work in South District will provide a better service to the public and better value for money.

Newry Social Security Office was initially considered as one of the potential locations up to the time of the fire which destroyed that office in mid-July 1997. The temporary premises at Canal Street were ruled out as an option because of insufficient space to accommodate the Social Fund processing unit.

Ref: 31737

On 29 January 1997, South District issued a survey questionnaire to 92 public representatives. The survey formed part of a review of services within the District and included a section related to Social Fund. The questionnaire was issued to voluntary, statutory and community organisations as well as legal and political representatives. A total of 45 replies were received. The SDLP constituency office in Armagh was sent a questionnaire but did not reply.

In addition, on an office by office basis, Banbridge, Dungannon, and Portadown Offices record that they have discussed the centralisation at liaison meetings with voluntary, statutory and community organisations during the course of the past year. Consultations have also taken place with District and Central Trade Union side.

Finally, the District Management team has met Newry and Mourne District Council and individual Councillors to discuss the issue.

I hope this information is helpful.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that digital broadcasting does not rely on use of digital decoder technology controlled by a monopoly supplier. [31746]

Mr. Fisher: It is for broadcasters and receiver manufacturers to determine the decoder technology used to deliver digital services to the consumer, subject to the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1996 and the Advanced Television Services Regulations 1996.

The Government's main aim is to ensure fair access to systems for service providers to enable the delivery of services to viewers. The Broadcasting Act 1996 encourages multiplex licensees to co-operate in ensuring interoperability. The regulations ensure that service providers can reach viewers through any set top box on fair, reasonable and non-discriminatory terms whether proprietary technology is involved or not. The provisions of general competition law to prevent abuse of any monopoly position which might emerge are being strengthened by the provisions of the Competition Bill [Lords] currently before Parliament.

Rugby Union International

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about the England v. Wales rugby union international on Saturday 21 February not being available live to viewers of terrestrial channels. [31982]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received six representations on the subject of the television coverage of this particular match, including two representations from hon. Members. He has received a further 47 representations on the subject of television coverage of the Five Nations rugby tournament since the present review of the list maintained under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996 was announced last September.

Concessionary Television Licences

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to improve the current concessionary television licence scheme. [32564]

Mr. Fisher: The Government have no plans at present for any changes to the concessionary television licence scheme. However, the Government's Agreement with the BBC provides for a review of future funding arrangements prior to March 2002. We shall conduct that review in good time to allow decisions to be taken before then. It will include a detailed consideration of licence fee concessions.

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32460]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 3 March 1998]: In line with the guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my Department will be considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for its key buildings.

Countryside March

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what charge was made by his Department to the organisers of the Countryside March held on 1 March for use of the Royal Parks. [32833]

Mr. Tom Clarke: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. John Austin, dated 4 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question enquiring what charge was made for the Country side Rally on March 1.

We made no charge for the march itself, although we are making a charge of £12,500 plus VAT to reimburse the additional costs incurred by the Royal Parks Constabulary during the march.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Council when she last met Treasury Ministers to discuss the cost of millennium compliance. [32591]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have not discussed the cost of millennium compliance with Treasury Ministers.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each Welsh local authority with responsibilities for education, the amount by which the increase in revenue support grant adjusted for changes in nursery voucher funding and increased NNDR differs from the amount that has been passported through the capping regime to raise standards in schools; what is the total figure for all local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [31541]

Mr. Hain: Both the £37.1 million in re-instated nursery voucher funding and the £49.4 million of extra schools money which is being distributed to local authorities as standard spending assessments are included, pound-for-pound, in revenue support grant. No authority receives less in spending power under provisional capping principles than it will receive in revenue support grant.

A breakdown of 1998–99 local authority capping limits is set out in the table. The information was placed in the House of Commons Library and issued to all local authorities on 9 February.

Local authority 1997–98 budget requirements (column 1)—to which the 3 per cent. basic capping increase is applied—have been adjusted upwards to reflect the re-instatement of the £37.1 million nursery voucher money. The 3 per cent. basic increase (column 5) takes full account of the £49.4 million of extra schools money included in standard spending assessments.

Passporting (column 6) ensures that individual authorities get the full benefit of SSA increases in their spending power. Under the passporting system capping limits take account of the cash increase in SSAs or the cash increase allowable under the basic increase and specific provisos (column 7), whichever is the greater.

Increases in individual SSAs are the result of an increase in the overall amount available for distribution (including the extra schools' money), distribution formula changes, and changes in non-financial data such as relative population increases. It is not possible to isolate in any meaningful way the extent to which the schools' money has impacts on individual authorities' passports.

[2] Additional community care (£21 million), 4 year old provision (£4.4 million) and national grid for learning (£1.2 million).

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26617]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The costs of Ministerial travel on inward investment and trade missions is as follows:

1995–96: £9,600

1996–97: £14,400

1997–98 to date: £6,100.

"Putting Patients First"

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the total cost of implementing the health reforms proposed in his recent White Paper "Putting Patients First". [31366]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The reforms introduced by the White Paper "Putting Patients First" have estimated start up costs of £10 million and are expected to cost £7 million per annum. However, they are intended to release recurrent savings which, over the lifetime of this Parliament, are expected to provide up to £50 million for reinvestment in direct patient care.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to improve the statutory procedures for the appointment of consultants at NHS hospitals in Wales. [31739]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Procedures for consultant appointments are governed by regulations which were framed after detailed discussion with the profession, and which do not detract from an Authority's or Trust's normal responsibilities as an employer. Since 1996, it has been an explicit requirement that an employing body should check not only that a prospective appointee is registered with the General Medical Council but also that he or she is on the Specialist Register. I shall consider any representations made to me about the procedures.

HEALTH

Wheelchairs

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of funding will be provided for the electrically-powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair scheme after the year 2000. [31720]

Mr. Boateng: Additional funding has been made available to health authorities over the years 1996–97 to 1999–2000 to enable the National Health Service to introduce the provision of electrically-powered wheelchairs for severely disabled people. The sum of £6 million in additional funding will be made recurrent in 1999–2000. From 2000–2001 the additional funding will be included in the total allocations made to health authorities.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been distributed to health authorities in respect of the wheelchair voucher scheme since April 1996; and how much will be distributed in 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [31725]

Mr. Boateng: Health authorities received £962,000 in respect of the wheelchair voucher scheme in 1996–97; and have received, so far, £4,959,500 in 1997–98. For 1998–99 and 1999–2000 they are due to receive £8 million in each year.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vouchers have been issued under the electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair scheme since April 1996; and what is the target number of vouchers for the four-year programme. [31724]

Mr. Boateng: The National Health Service voucher scheme does not currently extend to the provision of electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs. This may be reviewed once both schemes have become established.

Mental Health Act

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the Mental Health Act 1983; and if he will make a statement. [32066]

Mr. Boateng: We will be considering carefully the case for reviewing the Mental Health Act 1983 in the context of work on development of the Government's new mental health strategy.

Contraceptive Pills

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the advice given to doctors about appropriate prescribing of contraceptive pills containing desogestrel and gestodene. [32086]

Ms Jowell: The matter is already under review as part of a statutory regulatory process.

Midwives

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of training places, by region, for midwives in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [32830]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available centrally.

I refer the hon. Member to the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for the information that is currently available on the numbers of midwifery training places by region.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the past three years the percentage of expectant mothers who have had a named midwife. [32829]

Mr. Boateng: In 1995, 69 per cent. of mothers had a named midwife. In 1996, the figure had risen to 98 per cent. No figure is available for 1997.

These figures are taken from the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting 1995 and 1996 annual progress reports "Developments in Midwifery Education and Practice". The figure for 1995 is based on the results of a questionnaire sent to every maternity service in England. The 1996 figure is based on information collected from 54 maternity sites.

Copies of both these reports have been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives are below F grade. [32831]

Mr. Boateng: There were 18,260 registered midwives employed by the National Health Service hospital and community health services in England at September 1996. However, it is not possible to sub-divide this number by clinical grade as the Department's non-medical workforce census, the source of this statistic, does not collect information by clinical grade.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Class Sizes

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the additional funds announced to reduce infant class sizes in 1998–99 will be available to the same education authorities in subsequent years. [32694]

Mr. Byers: No decision has yet been taken on how additional funds will be allocated to LEAs in 1999–2000 and subsequent years.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by education authority the sum requested in each bid for additional funds to reduce infant class sizes in 1998–99. [32695]

Mr. Byers: The details of individual Standards Fund applications are a matter for individual authorities.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the details of the calculation which informed his statement of 11 February that the additional funds allocated to Dorset County Council to reduce infant class sizes in 1998–99 will result in 800 pupils being kept out of classes greater than 30 children. [32693]

Mr. Byers: Dorset's application set out how many pupils would benefit from the allocation of different sums. From this the Department calculated on a pro rata basis the number of pupils who would benefit from the £324,000 allocated to Dorset.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils aged five, six or seven years in each local education authority in England are currently in classes containing more than 30 children. [32700]

Mr. Byers: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of pupils aged five, six or seven years in each local education authority area in England who will be in classes of size greater than 30 children in the academic year 1998–99. [32697]

Mr. Byers: This information is not yet available.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils would have been kept out of classes greater than 30 children if all the bids by local education authorities for additional funds to reduce infant class sizes in 1998–99 had been accepted in full. [32696]

Mr. Byers: This information was not supplied by the individual local education authorities.

Sex Education

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he is taking to promote sex education for males in relation to unwanted pregnancies. [32587]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are, with the Department of Health, developing a national strategy for reducing unwanted teenage pregnancies which will focus, among other things, on sex and relationships education. The consultation document "Reducing the Rate of Teenage Conceptions—Towards a National Programme", which was issued by the Department of Health, recognises the importance of addressing both sexes.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Cases (Press Activity)

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the recommendations of the National Heritage Committee in its second report of Session 1996–97, "Press Activity Affecting Court Cases"—HC 86. [31327]

Mr. Hoon: The Government are committed to obtaining an appropriate balance between the due administration of justice, on the one hand, and freedom of speech, on the other. They have concluded that the Committee's recommendations maintain that balance and have therefore accepted them in principle.

The report recommended that there should be legislation forbidding payments to witnesses; and that section 2 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 should be strengthened so that it covers the collective and cumulative effect of pre-trial publicity in risking prejudicing a trial, as well as the effect of individual articles. This means that newspapers could not escape liability, as one case held they could, because a number of them had acted in a similar way and together had caused the prejudice.

Work is proceeding on the form that the necessary legislation should take. It will be brought forward when a suitable opportunity is found.

Lord Chancellor's Residence

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the maximum number of guests that can be accommodated for (a) official receptions and (b) official lunches and dinners in the Lord Chancellor's residence in the Palace of Westminster. [31453]

Mr. Hoon: There are two rooms which will be used for functions in the Lord Chancellor's Residence. The Dining Room will sit 16–18 for official lunches and dinners. The River Room will sit up to 50 people, depending on the nature of the function. For a reception, the maximum number of guests who could comfortably be accommodated is 100. One of the key attractions of the rooms is their location in the Palace of Westminster with views of the River Thames.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department from which date the official residence of the Lord Chancellor will be opened for public view; and on which days of the week and during which hours of those days it will be open to the public. [31454]

Mr. Hoon: The restoration of the Lord Chancellor's Official Residence is likely to be completed by the end of the Easter Recess. Arrangements for public viewing will be in place as soon as possible thereafter.

The precise arrangements for the opening will be announced in due course: it is currently envisaged that during parliamentary sessions the Residence will open for two mornings a week, between 10 and 11.30 am. More frequent access will be possible during parliamentary recesses. Regular use will be made of the Residence by charities for fund raising occasions.

Judicial Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultations he carried out before deciding not to proceed with the establishment of a judicial appointments commission. [31580]

Mr. Hoon: Last summer, officials in the Lord Chancellor's department consulted informally with various groups and individuals about the issues relating to the possible creation of a judicial appointments commission. Following this consultation and in view of the other substantial priorities facing the Department, the Lord Chancellor decided that it was right to concentrate on making the changes which he considered most urgent in the existing judicial appointments system to improve its openness, flexibility and effectiveness. The Lord Chancellor therefore announced in October that he had decided not to proceed further with work on a possible commission. Among the measures that the Lord Chancellor has already taken to improve the judicial appointments system are: introducing advertising for High Court appointments; increasing the upper age limit for appointment as lay magistrate so as to achieve a better social and political balance on the bench; opening the magistracy to blind candidates on an experimental basis; and involving lay people in the shortlisting of judicial candidates for interview. Other measures announced in October are in the process of implementation.

Law Terms

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he plans to extend the length of the law terms; and if he will make a statement. [31578]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has no such plans. The county courts and crown courts do, however, sit throughout the year and the Court of Appeal and the High Court sit during the vacation to hear cases deemed to be urgent.

Written Judgments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases since 1992 the written judgment of the court has been delivered (i) six months, (ii) nine months, (ii) one year and (iv) 15 months after the case was heard. [31579]

Mr. Hoon: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Judges

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to monitor the performance of judges. [31581]

Mr. Hoon: Judges are and must be independent of the Executive. They undertake their responsibilities and obligations in the terms of the judicial oath which they take on appointment. The Lord Chancellor considers any complaints made about the personal conduct of a judge and draws them to the attention of the judge as appropriate. The powers available to the Lord Chancellor to remove judges from office are, however, strictly limited. In considering the suitability of a judge for promotion to a higher office, the Lord Chancellor takes account of the views expressed to him by senior judges, and in considering holders of part-time judicial office as candidates for full-time appointments, he also places weight on the opinions he receives from judges and senior practitioners on the basis of the published criteria for appointment. Arrangements are in place for the observation of certain part-time judicial office-holders. For example, since Autumn 1997 newly-appointed Assistant Recorders have been the subject of some in-court observation by a full-time Circuit Judge during their first week of sitting.

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 27 January 1998]: An "Informal Ministerial Council" is held during each Presidency of the EU, to which Ministerial spouses are traditionally invited. The programme for spouses during the Netherlands Informal Agriculture Council of EU Ministers is given. The Netherlands

The total cost for the year's activity is expected to be in the region of £3.5 million.

The programme for 1998–99 has still to be finalised, and no plans have been formulated for subsequent years up to 2001–02.

Woodlands

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to promote coppicing in the management of woodlands. [32237]

Mr. Morley: The Government will continue to promote coppicing through the Forestry Commission's Woodland Grant Scheme. This offers both annual management grants for coppiced woodlands and a one-off woodland improvement grant to bring neglected woodlands back into management as coppiced woodlands.

The Forestry Commission also promotes training courses in traditional coppicing skills and supports the publication of the Woodlots sales magazine which gives owners the opportunity to offer coppiced timber to potential buyers.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 19 February 1998, Official Report, column 1174, what urgent diary commitments obliged the Minister of State to cancel his attendance at the Hortex Exhibition; when the Minister informed the organisers of his decision to withdraw; and for what reasons no representative from his Department substituted on his behalf. [31916]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 27 February 1998]: Hortex were advised well in advance that my hon. Friend would be unable to attend their exhibition on 17 February. A MAFF official was sent on his behalf and gave a presentation.

On 17 February, my hon. Friend visited an abattoir in Uttoxeter, an upland farm in the Derbyshire/Staffordshire area, a large supermarket in Stoke to present a "Golden Checkout Operator" award and then held a liaison meeting with representatives of:

producer groups including the Country Landowners' Association, the National Farmers' Union, Peak District Beef and Lamb; consumers;

rural business;

banking;

the Transport and General Workers' Union.

My hon. Friend regrets that in the hurly bury of oral questions on 19 February, he referred only to diary commitments in London. He did return to London later on 17 February to carry out his duties in the House.

My hon. Friend, and those he met, found the whole day a very useful opportunity to discuss a wide range of opinions on farming, food and rural issues.

Countryside March

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason he decided not to attend the Countryside March on 1 March 1998. [32806]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 3 March 1998]: I had long-standing engagements elsewhere in Britain over the weekend.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason two Ministers will be attending the Countryside March on 1 March. [32808]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 3 March 1998]: My right hon. and noble Friend Lord Carter and my noble Friend Lord Donoughue attended the pre-March breakfast to listen to the views of those participating in the March, and to emphasise the Government's clear commitment to the Countryside.

Engagements

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish his list of official engagements for Saturday 28 February and Sunday 1 March. [32807]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Since last June, I have been planning to hold the UK Informal Agriculture Council—a major gathering of EU Ministers which this country will host as EU Presidency—in the North of England. On Sunday 1 March, I met officials in Newcastle-upon-Tyne to discuss the detailed preparations for this event.

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32450]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The cost of employee travel on official business within the UK in each of the financial years 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 is detailed below. For 1997–98, the figures represent expenditure incurred during the first 11 months of the financial year, i.e. up to the end of February 1998. Information relating to the cost of unproductive time during travel is not recorded and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Total fuel allowances	3,709,999.06	3,444,990.50	3,222,498.23	3,144,064.11
Costs related to car transport	404,574.31	404,904.55	426,869.31	368,645.62
Costs related to public transport	1,166,066.66	1,210,630.03	1,112,860.56	963,104.24

Rural Development (Uplands)

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about grants for rural development and conservation in the uplands of England. [33229]

Mr. Morley: The future of the rural economy and future protection of the uplands countryside are closely linked, and we need to continue to develop our grant schemes to help to strengthen that relationship.

I am therefore issuing new proposals for an experimental scheme, under which an integrated package of Objective 5b rural development grants and Countryside Stewardship grants could be put together to meet local employment and conservation needs. This experiment will apply in two areas of England. Secondly, I am proposing to extend the range of grants for the conservation of the uplands under the Countryside Stewardship scheme.

I am issuing today a consultation paper setting out these proposals in detail. We will welcome comments by the end of May.

Copies of the consultation paper are being placed in the Library of the House.

Herbal Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action the Government are taking to implement Article 8(j) of the Convention on Biological Diversity regarding the conservation of traditional herbal medicines; [31506]

(2) what steps he is taking to meet the Government's obligations under Article 8 (j) of the Convention on Biological Diversity in respect of traditional herbal medicine in the United Kingdom; [31505]

(3) if the Government will include plants used in traditional herbal medicine in (a) their assessment of the value of biodiversity and (b) the legal and policy framework for biodiversity conservation and sustainable use. [31504]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are playing an active part in international efforts to implement Article 8(j) of the Convention on Biological Diversity, including by participating in the workshop held in Madrid last November under the auspices of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention. We are now coordinating EU preparations for further consideration of the issue at the next meeting of the Conference of the Parties, to be held in May in Bratislava. Traditional herbal medicines represent a significant area of indigenous and local knowledge, and we are keen to see them receive their due attention in implementation of the Convention. Domestically, the UK's Biodiversity Action Plan identifies plant species in need of urgent conservation action, for which action plans are being drawn up to conserve and enhance their populations, but this selection is made irrespective of a species' significance to herbal medicine.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what mechanisms she has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25906]

Mr. Field: Social Security policy has little direct input on development issues and we do not expect that the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review will conflict with the promotion of sustainable development.

War Pensions

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for what reasons disability living allowance assessment forms were sent out to war pensioners in receipt of (a) the War Pensions Agency mobility supplement and (b) the war pensions constant allowance; [29387]

(2) if she will make a statement on the relationship between the War Pensions Agency payments, mobility supplement and constant allowance, and disability living allowance; [29385]

(3) how many disability living allowance assessment forms have been sent to war pensioners in receipt of (a) the War Pensions Agency mobility supplement and (b) the war pensions constant allowance. [29386]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Prior, dated 3 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions regarding Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and War Pensions.

Over the next two or so years, as part of the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) specially trained staff will make enquiries by postal questionnaire or home visit in over 400,000 cases to establish whether DLA is being paid correctly. Enquiries are directed to those people receiving the higher rate of the mobility component combined with the highest rate of the care component—who are visited, and those receiving the higher rate of the mobility component combined with the middle rate of the care component—who are sent a questionnaire by post.

Under the War Pensions Scheme, where the need for care or where mobility problems are due to the war pensioned disablement, the more preferential Constant Attendance Allowance (CAA) and/or Mobility Supplement (WPMS) may be awarded. A war pensioner may however be entitled to DLA where the need for care or mobility problems are not a result of the war pensioned disablement. War Pensioners who are in receipt of DLA at the rates mentioned above will receive either a questionnaire or visit.

It is a basic principle of the Social Security system that only one benefit at a time can be paid to a person for the same need. If someone in receipt of CAA or WPMS claims DLA, the DLA entitlement will be assessed in the usual way. However as CAA and/or WPMS overlap with DLA, payment of the latter will be affected. A War Pensioner in receipt of CAA or WPMS who is also entitled to DLA will retain underlying entitlement to the appropriate component of DLA.

The number of War Pensioners in receipt of WPMS and/or CAA who have been contacted as part of the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) is contained in the following table.

Benefit	Postal	Visit	Renewal
War Pensions Mobility Supplement	53	19	11
CAA WP Service Pension Instrument	12	6	1
Totals	65	25	12
Grand Total 102

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

Customers in receipt of only one component of DLA should not be contacted by the BIP. I apologise for any errors that have occurred and investigations will be undertaken to establish the circumstances as to why these War Pensioners have been contacted under BIP to avoid any recurrence.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 9 July 1997, Official Report, columns 516–17, concerning the face-to-face interviews being conducted as part of the Benefit Integrity Project, what further estimate her Department has made of the cost of (a) the face-to-face interview and (b) postal questionnaire aspects of the project. [32800]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefit Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 3 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking pursuant to her Answer of 9 July 1997, Official Report, columns 516–17, concerning face to face interviews being conducted as part of the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP), what further estimate her department has made of the cost of (a) the face to face interview and (b) postal questionnaire aspects of the project. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

The cost of a face to face interview is variable and depends on the distance travelled and the length of the interview. The most recent estimate suggests that the average cost is £73. The cost of dealing with a postal questionnaire is included in the whole BIP process and it is not possible to provide an estimate of the cost of this particular activity. However, it is expected to cost significantly less obtaining a completed questionnaire by post than by obtaining one on a visit.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to measure the number of people who no longer receive benefit as a result of the change from invalidity benefit to incapacity benefit. [32384]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available.

Detailed information on the numbers leaving Incapacity Benefit and the reason for cessation of benefit is provided in Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance Quarterly Summary of Statistics. Actual and forecast numbers on benefit are provided at Table 6 in the Social Security Departmental Report, "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1997–98 to 1999–2000". However, it is not possible to isolate the effects of the change from Invalidity Benefit to Incapacity Benefit from other factors which influence numbers on the benefit.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she proposes to announce the new levels of contracted-out rebates to apply from April 1999. [33141]

Ms Harman: I have today laid the relevant reports by the Government Actuary and myself, together with draft Orders which set the new levels of National Insurance rebates for contracted out money purchase schemes and appropriate personal pensions applicable from 6 April 1999 for the remainder of the current quinquennium ending 5 April 2002.

The Orders must be debated in both Houses before 6 April 1998 to fulfil the legislative requirement that they are made one year in advance of their effective date.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Information Films

13. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the value of public information films produced by the Central Office of Information being screened in the early hours of the morning. [30876]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Public information films are transmitted free of charge by the BBC, ITV, cable and satellite stations. Last year, TV stations donated £30 million of airtime. Just under half of that total was accounted for by transmissions between midnight and 6am.

Open Government

14. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received on his Department's policies on open government. [30877]

Dr. David Clark: This Government believe that open government is good government, in stark contrast to the record of the previous Administration.

With our proposals on Quangos and Freedom of Information, we are laying the foundations for a culture of proactive openness which will change the face of government.

My Department is also publishing more information as a matter of course, on issues such as how central Government are tackling the Millennium Bug.

18. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his responsibilities in respect of the disseminating of information to the public about Government policy and activities, with particular reference to his open government initiative. [30882]

Dr. David Clark: My responsibilities include Freedom of Information. I recently published the White Paper "Your Right to Know" setting out our proposals for a Freedom of Information Act, which includes a requirement on public authorities to publish information about their policies and activities.

Freedom of Information

15. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his policy on freedom of information as it relates to his own Department. [30878]

Dr. David Clark: I have published a White Paper on Freedom of Information which will open up not just my Department, but the whole of Government. I intend that my Department will set an example in terms of openness, and I therefore published the background material relevant in forming the White Paper's proposals on 4 February.

I have also taken other steps to further openness within my own Department. I have appointed a Webmaster to improve the quality and scope of the Cabinet Office Internet site. I have set up a virtual seminar—on the Internet—to discuss the issues surrounding Better Government; and I am in the process of setting up a People's panel to consult and involve the public in issues about public services.

16. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress in his consultation on freedom of information legislation. [30880]

Dr. David Clark: The consultation period on the White Paper ended on 28 February. Around 500 responses have been received. We will now be considering these responses carefully with a view to the preparation of a draft Freedom of Information Bill, to be issued later this year. This will provide a further opportunity for consultation on our proposals for a Freedom of Information Act.

25. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from national organisations concerning his White Paper on Freedom of Information. [30890]

Dr. David Clark: I have received a large number of representations from national organisations including the following 96 organisations:

Public Appointments

17. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to change the system for public appointments. [30881]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government made a number of proposals about public appointments and public bodies in our consultation paper "Opening up Quangos". We are now considering responses to that paper and also the recent Report on Public Appointments from the Select Committee on Public Administration (HC327). We will carefully consider each of the recommendations of that Report, and respond in due course.

Information Technology

19. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the effective use of Information Technology systems by Government departments. [30883]

Dr. David Clark: It is for individual departments and agencies to assess the effective use made of their IT systems.

However, the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) provides advice and guidance to government departments and agencies to help them to improve the delivery of their services through the best use of IT. In particular, CCTA provides assistance in benchmarking IT related processes to assist departments to continue to use IT effectively and efficiently.

New technology will underpin the Better Government programme and will help bring government closer to the people by making it accountable, accessible, efficient and responsive.

22. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he is considering for the electronic delivery of Government services. [30887]

Dr. David Clark: Later this year I will publish a White Paper on Better Government which will set out the ways in which access to government services can be transformed. We will use modern technology to make life simpler and easier for people—making government fit with the way they live their lives, and businesses run their affairs.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to permit individuals to supply information electronically to Government. [30885]

Dr. David Clark: Last December I launched the Intelligent Form project, which converts what were once six paper forms on notification of self-employment into one electronic form, and in so doing enables individuals to supply several departments with information simultaneously via the Internet.

I also intend to publish later this year a White Paper on Better Government, which will set out further ways in which IT will enable individuals to supply information to the Government electronically.

Citizens Charter

21. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to improve the effectiveness of the charter programme. [30886]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I announced our plans to relaunch the Charter programme in June last year. We are currently developing proposals for the new programme, in the light of our recent wide-ranging consultation exercise. Details of the programme will be published as part of the Better Government initiative later in the spring.

Civil Servants

23. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to improve civil servants' understanding of the regions and nations of the United Kingdom. [30888]

Dr. David Clark: The Government recognise the importance of ensuring civil servants are fully aware of the context within which they work. An important means of achieving this is through practical experience. Targets have been set to increase the mobility of civil servants across Government. The Government will ensure that there is inter-departmental mobility between civil servants working for the Welsh Assembly, the Scottish Executive and the rest of the Home Civil Service.

Millennium Compliance

24. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Government departments have completed their work on the year 2000 problem. [30889]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner) on 3 March 1998. I will continue to report progress by Departments and agencies to the House on a quarterly basis.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

26. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce the number of non-departmental public bodies. [30891]

Dr. David Clark: The Government remain committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum. Already a number of NDPBs have been abolished and several more have been targeted for abolition or merger. The Comprehensive Spending Review, which involves a zero-based analysis of the functions of NDPBs, may reduce the overall number of NDPBs further. Ministers will continue to examine the NDPBs they sponsor with a view to identifying additional candidates for abolition.

Next Steps Agencies

27. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to improve the effectiveness of policy implementation where co-operative working between next steps agencies is required. [30892]

Dr. David Clark: The scope for enhancing co-operative working between agencies, both within and across Departments, is being considered as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review and the Better Government initiative. It will be addressed in the Better Government White Paper, to be published later in the Spring.

Magistrates

28. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to achieve political balance among magistrates in the Duchy. [30893]

Dr. David Clark: I welcome recommendations for appointments to the bench to ensure that the guidelines are followed in order that the magistrates benches reflect the demographic, political and religious composition of the communities they cover. It therefore follows that in areas which have been solidly Labour for a number of years and where the balance of the Bench favours another party I expect to receive recommendations which will rectify the imbalance. Furthermore I have taken steps to relax the age of initial appointments to allow more mature entrants to be considered.

Data Protection

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has had from the Data Protection Registrar on reconciling current privacy and freedom of information bills. [30875]

Dr. David Clark: I have received a formal response from the Data Protection Registrar in which she warmly welcomed the general tenor of the proposals and made a number of significant points for consideration.

Deregulation

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what decision he has taken on the future of the enforcement provisions of section 5 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [33230]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer to my answers to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) of 23 July 1997, Official Report, column 583. The Access Business Group, a partnership between central and local government and business, has drawn up an enforcement concordat. It sets out the principles that:

Performance will be measured against agreed standards

There will be openness in dealing with business and others

Enforcers will be Helpful, courteous and efficient

Complaints procedures will be publicised

Enforcement decisions will be taken in a proportionate manner and Enforcement officers will strive for high standards of consistency.

The Concordat also establishes the procedures that participating enforcers will follow. These include distinguishing best practice advice from legal requirements and giving businesses a chance to discuss and remedy problems before action is taken, unless immediate action is required.

Where section 5 procedures already apply through legislation, Departments will identify opportunities to amend the legislation in the light of this new voluntary approach to good enforcement.

The Access Business group will keep both the adoption of the concordat and the effectiveness of it under review. I commend these principles and procedures to all enforcement officers and to the House. Copies of the enforcement concordat are available in the Libraries of the House.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio which firms have signed contracts to provide commercial sponsorship for the Millennium Dome; and how much they have each pledged. [30512]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Ms Cooper) on 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 204.

Written Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans have been made in case of failure of (a) the CAA's suppliers to complete year 2000 compliance changes and (b) the year 2000 compliance changes of CAA's suppliers during live running. [32633]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For some equipment, National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS) relies on external support and there are some cases where NATS, at this stage, is not adequately assured of completion. These suppliers are being urged to respond. Where such systems are identified as an on-going risk, a solution involving a method of working around the system or backing it up will be included in contingency plans.

Efforts are being made to gain assurance from suppliers that services can be relied upon. NATS aims to involve suppliers in validation tests, where that is feasible, in order to increase the level of confidence. Where there is a lack of assurance, there may be alternative sources of supply, but this may not always be the case. An example is telecommunications services—NATS uses several suppliers and it might be possible to change supplier over time. Contingency plans will be drawn up in full after the validation tests have been completed, when more will be known about the nature of the risks.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress reports his Department has sought in respect of the CAA's millennium compliance; and if he will place these in the Library. [32720]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Officials in my Department first wrote to the Civil Aviation Authority on 14 March 1997 in pursuit of the Department-wide initiative to approach sponsored bodies about their work on resolving the millennium problem. Since then, my Department has contacted the Civil Aviation Authority and National Air Traffic Services (NATS) regularly to obtain progress reports and information on specific points. On each occasion, the Authority or NATS has sent a progress report or a position statement setting out how the work is progressing. In addition, officials are keeping in touch with the CAA Board in order to obtain regular overviews of how the work is progressing.

A memorandum by the CAA's Science and Technology Committee, entitled "Year 2000 and Computer Compliance Enquiry" (7 January 1998), and a copy of NATS' "millennium problem action plan" (26 February 1998) have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 553, when checking of (a) non-National Air Traffic Service and (b) National Air Traffic Service operational items for millennium compliance began; how many items in each category have been checked to date for year 2000 compliance; how many have been found to be year 2000 (i) compliant and (ii) non-compliant; how many of the items which are not year 2000 compliant have been fixed and satisfactorily tested; how many man days were required to complete and test these changes; when integration testing is to start; and what contingency plans have been made in the case of failure (1) to complete year 2000 compliance changes and (2) of the year 2000 compliance changes during live running. [32719]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS) began initial study work to address the year 2000 compliance issue in April 1996.

A total of 582 operational in-service items have been checked, of which 483 have been found to be compliant; 99 items have been found to be non-compliant. Fixing and testing of the non-compliant items is expected to be completed by July 1998. The work to implement any necessary changes is not accounted for centrally. Systems are fixed and tested individually and are then reintegrated into operational service as part of the existing process for change implementation. A wider set of cross-system and cross-site year 2000 validation tests will then take place between September and December this year. Estimating the number of man days used to complete the changes would involve disproportionate cost.

Changes required to ensure year 2000 compliance are generally of a minor nature and there are none that it is considered will not be completed in time. Ways of working around the system would be developed in the event of non-compliance. The purpose of the validation testing exercise is to identify residual risk areas which will be fed into the development of operational contingency plans in the early part of 1999.

With regard to non-NATS systems, I would refer the hon. Member to the memorandum placed in the Library by the CAA's Science and Technology Committee (Year 2000 and Computer Compliance Inquiry, dated 7 January 1998).

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the CAA has made of the year 2000 compliance of CAA suppliers which exchange data with the CAA electronically; and what independent assessment of the year 2000 compliance of CAA's suppliers will be conducted. [32632]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The process of identifying suppliers and dependencies in order to find out what plans they have to deal with this issue, to ask for evidence of progress and tests carried out, and to arrange for testing in conjunction with National Air Traffic Services' (NATS) systems at a suitable stage has been underway since 1996. These interfaces have been identified, and dialogue with suppliers is at an advanced stage.

NATS is currently planning an independent audit of its year 2000 activities which will take place later this year. The audit will also consider the adequacy of the compliance assurances that suppliers have provided.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when (a) each of his Department's agencies and (b) the Government Offices for the Regions estimate their millennium compliance programmes will be completed. [32613]

Angela Eagle: The estimates are provided in the latest returns released by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 621–22, and placed in the libraries of both Houses and published on the Internet.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when (a) each of his Department's agencies and (b) the Government offices for the regions will have completed their examination of the available options for achieving millennium compliance. [32614]

Angela Eagle: Five of the Department's Agencies have completed their examination of the options for achieving millennium compliance, and the remainder aim to complete their examination by the end of April 1998. Within the Government Office for the Regions it is anticipated that the examination of the available options will be completed by June 1998.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans have been made in the event of a failure due to Year 2000 computer problems for (a) each of his Department's agencies and (b) the Government offices for the regions. [32612]

Angela Eagle: The position on contingency plans is included in the latest returns released by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 621–22, and placed in the Libraries of both Houses and published on the Internet.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if IT contracts for millennium compliance for (a) each of his Department's agencies and (b) the Government offices for the regions will be put out to tender. [32610]

Angela Eagle: Most Agencies have existing contracts which will be used for millennium compliance. Where extra support is required this will be subject to competitive procurement procedures. The Government Office for the Regions will look to existing IT service suppliers to address millennium compliance issues.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the millennium compliance of the data processing systems (a) at the London Air Traffic Control Centre and (b) due to be introduced at Swanwick Air Traffic Control Centre. [32726]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services (NATS) has been running a year 2000 project since 1996, and included within the scope of the project is the London Area and Terminal Control Centre and its supporting infrastructure. All in-service operational systems have been checked, and NATS is now in the middle of a comprehensive update programme to correct faults or replace sub-systems which might be affected by the millennium bug. NATS expects to be fully compliant by the end of 1998 and this timescale includes extensive testing at all levels of their systems.

Year 2000 compliance for the systems in the new centre at Swanwick is an essential part of NATS' overall programme. In conjunction with NATS' supplier, Lockheed Martin, NATS has conducted a full system assessment. A small number of minor corrections are required to the operational systems and some updates are required to the off-line support systems. All work in this area is included in the plan for readiness by the end of 1998.

Departmental and Agency Plans

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what revisions to the cost estimates in the Summary of Departmental and Agency Plans as received by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster dated November 1997 have been made for (a) each of his Department's agencies and (b) the Government offices for the regions. [32611]

Angela Eagle: The cost estimates are provided in the latest returns released by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 621–22, and placed in the Libraries of both Houses and published on the Internet.

Tree Preservation Orders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of trees in England which are subject to tree preservation orders; and how many have been designated primarily because of their age. [32652]

Angela Eagle: Tree preservation orders are made and administered by local planning authorities. Information on the number of orders currently in force, or estimates of the number of trees protected by these orders, is not held centrally. My Department advises authorities to use tree preservation orders to protect selected trees which, if removed, would have a significant impact on the local environment and its enjoyment by the public. Age may therefore be a contributory but should not be the primary reason for designation.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions have been brought in each year since 1990 for felling trees subject to a tree preservation order. [32653]

Angela Eagle: This information is not held centrally.

Business Parks

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the number and surface area of business parks that have been built on (a) green-field land excluding Green Belt, (b) Green Belt land and (c) recycled land in each of the last 12 years by (i) county and (ii) region in England. [32855]

Mr. Caborn: The information requested is not held centrally. Most decisions on planning applications for business park developments are taken by local planning authorities. They provide statistical returns of all major applications which they handle, in order to provide an overall picture of planning activity. These data do not classify applications by location. It is, therefore, not feasible at the moment to assemble such information, except at disproportionate cost.

Leaseholders

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with the Institute of Chartered Accountants to ensure that full disclosure of certified accounts is made by landlords to leaseholders under section 21 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985; and if he will make a statement. [31131]

Mr. Raynsford: No such discussions have taken place. It does however appear that some clarification may be needed of the duties of a qualified accountant certifying a summary of costs under section 21 of the Act, and we are considering the best way to take this forward.

Hedgerows

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the number of hedgerows which are protected. [32390]

Angela Eagle: On 29 May 1997, the Government announced a review to consider how the Hedgerows Regulations 1997 might be strengthened so that they give better protection for hedgerows. The review is being undertaken by a group which includes nominees of the statutory agencies, local authorities and the main farming and conservation bodies. It is expected to complete its work shortly.

West Coast Main Line

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with (a) Railtrack and (b) Virgin Trains about improvements to services on the West Coast Main Line. [32864]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I met with Railtrack on 27 January to discuss their plans to upgrade the West Coast Main Line. Railtrack have agreed to provide regular updates on their progress with the modernisation programme.

I met with Richard Branson on 10 July 1997 to discuss general rail and aviation issues. However, the Franchising Director is responsible for monitoring the performance of Virgin Trains. He has regular meetings with Virgin Trains and has impressed on them the importance that the Government place on improving services on the West Coast Main Line.

Deputy Prime Minister (Car)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost of acquiring the Jaguar 4.0i LWB for the use of the Deputy Prime Minister and the subsequent cost of conversion to an alternative fuel system. [32991]

Mr. Prescott: The cost to the Government Car Service (GCS) of acquiring the second hand P registered Jaguar which I currently use was £35,000. For technical reasons, Jaguar Cars Limited advise that this car cannot be converted economically to operate on alternative fuels and the cost of its conversion does not therefore arise.

Following several months of discussion between the GCS and Jaguar Cars Ltd., the company has offered the GCS the opportunity to replace the current car with a similar, P registered ex-test vehicle which can be converted easily to run on LPG. This car will be made available by Jaguar Cars Ltd. at no change in cost to the public purse.

The proposed arrangement represents an excellent opportunity for the Government to work with a major British engineering company to achieve a showcase environmentally friendly vehicle development. The replacement car will therefore be brought into service as soon as possible and will be exhibited at a Green Car Exhibition which I will be opening in Chester on 25 April on occasion of the Informal Meeting of the EU Environment and Transport Councils.

SCOTLAND

Business Parks

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number and surface area of business parks that have been built on (a) greenfield land excluding Green Belt, (b) Green Belt land and (c) recycled land in each of the last 12 years by (i) county and (ii) region in Scotland. [32853]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not held centrally although the results of more general research commissioned by the Scottish Office on current and future trends in office development and location in Scotland should be available shortly.

Hepatitis C

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations calling for financial assistance he has received on behalf of people with haemophilia infected with Hepatitis C through their NHS treatment. [32048]

Mr. Galbraith: Departmental records show that since 2 May 1997 eleven representations (four of these from hon. Members) concerning financial assistance have been received by the Secretary of State on behalf of people with haemophilia who have been infected with Hepatitis C through their NHS treatment.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigation the Chairman of the Scottish Ambulance Service NHS Trust has made of concerns raised about management practices in the service; what conclusions and recommendations he has reached; and if he will make a statement. [33282]

Mr. Galbraith: Mr. Clarke has carried out what I believe to be an exhaustive investigation into the matters raised as I had asked him to do and has produced a Report dealing with them honestly and frankly. The Report has identified shortcomings of practice and procedure in relation to the handling of certain personnel matters. It recommends various changes that are designed to prevent any recurrence of these shortcomings. I met Mr. Clarke recently to discuss his findings and recommendations, which I have accepted in full. I know that the right hon. Member and other right hon. and hon. Members have been taking a close interest in this matter on behalf of constituents. I hope that those concerned will, on reading the report in its entirety, feel able to accept that their legitimate claims have been fairly and objectively dealt with. I have made arrangements for copies of the Report to be sent to the right hon. and hon. Members involved and the relevant constituents and for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

It has emerged in the course of the investigations conducted by Mr. Clarke that information provided by the Scottish Ambulance Service NHS Trust and used by the then Minister during the Adjournment Debate on 26 November 1996, Official Report, columns 239–48, was misleading. In the course of that debate secured by the then hon. Member for North Tayside the Minister of State stated in all good faith that the matter of Hepatitis B vaccine had not been raised by the hon. Member's constituent prior to her dismissal from the Scottish Ambulance Service. The matter was in fact raised on three occasions but for the reasons set out in paragraph 6.2.5 of Mr. Clarke's Report neither the Minister nor the House were made aware of this. I apologise to the House and I am also writing to both the then Minister of State and the then hon. Member for North Tayside.

Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total financial contribution of non-Scottish United Kingdom students to the Scottish higher education sector for each of the last five years. [25347]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Information in the form requested is not readily available. Estimates of the tuition fee payments made by Local Education Authorities to the Scottish higher education sector to support study by non-Scottish United Kingdom students in the latest available years are provided in the table.

Estimated total fee expenditure[1] for mandatory award holders, 1991–92 to 1995–96

Year	Estimated expenditure
1991–92	36,206
1992–93	43,474
1993–94	43,864
1994–95	[2]27,260
1995–96	[2]28,362

[1] Total expenditure has been estimated by multiplying average fees paid for English and Welsh students by the total number of non-Scottish UK mandatory award holders. These figures do not include fees paid by non-Scottish UK students not in receipt of a mandatory award.

[2] Average tuition fees were reduced in 1994/95.

PRIME MINISTER

News International

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when (a) he and (b) officials in his Department have had discussions with (i) Mr. Rupert Murdoch and (ii) senior representatives of News International; and what matters were discussed. [31109]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1998]: My staff and I have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals.

Ministerial Visits

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on discussions relating to the Single Currency during his recent visit to Japan separately identifying discussions between industrialists. [32988]

The Prime Minister: I discussed the United Kingdom's policy towards Europe and the Single Currency with a large number of business leaders and politicians during my recent visit to Japan, including during a dinner on 9 January at which I gave a speech to over 300 representatives of Japanese Government and industry. I also set out the EU's approach to the Single Currency at the EU/Japan summit on 12 January.

"Britain in Europe"

Mr. Gray: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his role and that of Government Ministers in respect of the booklet, "Britain in Europe". [32965]

The Prime Minister: The Government have no formal involvement in the production of this booklet, neither in exercising editorial control nor making any financial contribution. The booklet contains articles from across the political spectrum expressing a wide range of opinion.

I think it is important to take suitable opportunities to explain to people this Government's new, more constructive approach to Europe; and the unique opportunity provided by our Presidency of the EU to rebuild Britain's standing. This booklet is one such opportunity and I and my right hon. Friends the Foreign and International Development Secretaries contributed on that basis.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Iraq

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which non-governmental organisations her Department is currently funding in Iraq; what activities they are conducting; and if she will make a statement. [32289]

Clare Short: The Government are deeply concerned about the suffering of the people of Iraq. The UK co-sponsored UN Security Council Resolutions 986 in 1995 and 1153 on 20 February 1998 (oil-for-food scheme). The benefits to the people of Iraq have been less than intended as a result of Iraqi Government action. We are currently reviewing what we can do to help ease the suffering of the Iraqi people.

Our current bilateral programme of humanitarian aid to Iraq through NGOs consists of:

Northern Iraq

A grant of £1.6 million to Save the Children Fund to help Children and Marginalised groups.

£145,000 to ACORN to assist children through physiotherapy with physical disabilities.

£660,000 to Mines Advisory Group for mine detection and clearance.

£200,000 to Kurdistan Children's Fund to resettle displaced families.

£25,000 to Kurdish Life Aid to improve water and sanitation facilities in Atrush Camp.

Baghdad-controlled Iraq

We have recently completed the following Water system rehabilitation and hospital funding projects:

£525,000 to CARE to rehabilitate the Water Treatment Plant at Najaf Kufa.

£40,000 to Medical Aid for Iraqi Children for provision of medical supplies to Children's hospitals.

£325,000 to CARE for the supply of food to Maternity Hospitals.

£1 million to CARE for the supply of food to Hospitals.

£120,000 to CARE for Water and Sanitation Monitoring. We have recently agreed a new phase costing £35,000.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what security advice has been given by the Government to British citizens working for non-governmental organisations funded by her Department working in Iraq. [32288]

Clare Short: Department for International Development officials discuss security in their regular contacts with NGOs and in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office maintain up-to-date lists of British citizens and their contact numbers. They make a particular point of discussing security of NGO expatriate and local staff when visiting them in Iraq.

Homelessness (Russia)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received regarding the situation of the homeless in Russia. [32966]

Clare Short: We have played a significant part in raising awareness of the plight of the homeless in Russia through our support for the prominent St. Petersburg organisation, Nightshelter.

This Know How Fund project, which began in 1996, is due to run for two years and costs £100,000, collaborates with The Big Issue Scotland in helping Nightshelter produce their equivalent publication, The Depths. This has proved to be such a successful project, that the KHF is currently exploring with The Big Issue ways in which similar projects can be implemented in other regions of Russia.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's work in respect of homelessness in Russia. [32964]

Clare Short: Following a request from the Directors of The Big Issue magazine, my Department is supporting a two-year project to provide technical assistance to a Russian counterpart publication set up to help the homeless in St. Petersburg. This support is provided through the Know How Fund.

Last month we responded encouragingly to a further request for assistance for a similar project in other cities in Russia. We are waiting for a more detailed proposal.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list each information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contract, with its value, concluded by her Department and its agencies for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02. [32023]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development has concluded one contract, with Opinion Leader Research, for around £43,000, during 1997–98. It has not concluded any contracts for subsequent years.

Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what position Her Majesty's Government took at the meeting of donors in Dhaka on 23 February on the Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord; and what undertakings Her Majesty's Government made. [31972]

Clare Short: The meeting on 23 February was called by the Government of Bangladesh (GoB) to discuss with donors how best to co-ordinate and deliver appropriate development assistance in the Chittagong Hill Tracts. A list of possible projects was also presented by GoB but not discussed. Her Majesty's Government played an active part in the meeting which concluded that a core team of donors, led by the United Nations Development Programme, should work with GoB to identify priority needs, develop plans for co-ordinating the overall donor effort and identify appropriate implementation arrangements. This approach was proposed by GoB and is intended to provide a framework for assistance from donors, including Department for International Development.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current level of funding from his Department under section 11 for the employment of teachers. [31745]

But, in the current financial year, nearly £78.6 million is allocated under section 11 grant to support the cost of employing teachers and other staff (including bilingual assistants, nursery nurses and home/school liaison workers) on projects to address additional needs of ethnic minority school pupils.

Mr. George Howarth: All indigenous birds of prey are protected from being killed, taken or injured by section 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The table shows the number of defendants prosecuted and convicted under this Act from 1990 to 1996 (latest available) for offences related to birds, according to our Court Proceedings database. Alcohol Sales

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the licensing law in relation to the prosecution of people selling alcohol to persons aged under 18 years, where the person selling the alcohol is not the actual licensee or directly employed by the licensee; and if he will make a statement. [32578]

Mr. George Howarth: I am aware of this issue and am considering what action is necessary.

Allowances

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the allowances and special payments available to (i) police force employees, (ii) Fire Service employees, (iii) Probation Service employees, and (iv) Prison Service employees; and what was the total amount spent on each type of allowance and payment in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [32407]

Mr. Michael: The main allowances and payments made to police officers, probation officers and prison officers are shown in the tables. Not all the allowances are paid to each category of officer referred to in the tables. Each of the allowances and payments is subject to certain conditions being met before they are paid. Information on the total expenditure on these allowances and payments is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The allowances and special payments applicable to fire service employees is a matter for the National Joint Council (NJC) for Local Authorities Fire Brigades, and information about the level of such payments is not held centrally. Particulars are given in sections VI, VII and IX of the NJC's Scheme of Conditions of Service. Copies of the relevant extracts from the Scheme have been placed in the Library.

Private Prisons

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are in force to ensure that criminal offences committed by staff in privately-managed prisons are referred to the police and reported to the Prison Service; how many reports of such offences have been made; and if he will make a statement. [32577]

Ms Quin: It is for the contractor, as the employer of staff at privately managed prisons, to refer to the police any criminal offence which the contractor suspects an employee of having committed in the course of duty. The Director is also under a general statutory obligation to assist the Prison Service Controller to discharge his or her duty to keep the operation of the prison under review.

This is given additional force by a contractual requirement for the contractor to notify the Controller of any behaviour by a prisoner custody officer which casts doubt on his or her fitness for certification as a prisoner custody officer. The Prison Service Controller is required by statute to investigate complaints made against prisoner custody officers. If, in the course of an investigation, the Controller considers that a criminal offence has been committed, he or she may refer the matter to the police. The Director is also expected to inform the Controller of any criminal offence alleged to have been committed by other staff that may have a bearing on their suitability to work in a prison.

The number of reports of such incidents is not recorded centrally for any prisons.

Information Technology

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on proposals to provide IT links between the Crown Prosecution Service, the police and magistrates courts. [32793]

Mr. Michael: The new information technology systems and services currently being planned for use by the Crown Prosecution Service, the police and magistrates courts will incorporate electronic links that will significantly improve the efficiency with which information is shared and exchanged throughout the criminal justice process.

World Cup

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often individuals convicted of football-related offences will be required to report to designated police stations in Britain during the World Cup. [32408]

Mr. Michael: The Football Spectators Act 1989 provides that a person convicted of a football-related offence and made subject to a restriction order by the court is required to report to a police station at times that would prevent him travelling to key designated football matches outside England and Wales involving teams from England or Wales. Failure to comply with the order without reasonable excuse is a criminal offence

The Restriction Orders Authority will be writing in advance of World Cup matches to individuals subject to restriction orders informing them of their attendance times at the police station.

The 1991 Act extends to England and Wales only. There is no similar provision in Scotland.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those who landed at (a) Dover and (b) Ramsgate during 1997 have claimed the right to remain in the UK under asylum regulations; what was their country of origin; and what is their current status. [32551]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table and relates to those persons who applied for asylum on their arrival at the ports of Dover or Ramsgate. I regret that a similar breakdown for those who arrived at these ports and subsequently submitted in-country asylum applications, is not available.

Special Secure Units

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received Sir Donald Acheson's Second Report on the Effects on Health of the Regimes in Special Secure Units; and if he intends to make the results public. [33456]

Ms Quin: We have now received Sir Donald Acheson's second report on the Special Secure Unit (SSU) at Whitemoor. His report acknowledges that significant progress has been made in implementing his previous recommendations. In particular, a series of regime improvements have been made, and a robust system of regular health reviews for all SSU prisoners has been introduced.

With regard to closed visits, the report accepts that the improved regime and atmosphere within the SSU is, at least in part, attributable to the confidence which closed visits give to staff. Accordingly, there is no call for a change to the visits policy.

The report contains just one further recommendation, which we accept, about the involvement of an external consultant psychiatrist in the health review process.

A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Prison Medical Service

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards the introduction of a nursing-led service within the Prison Medical Service; and if he will make a statement. [32866]

Ms Quin: Between 1991 and 1997, the proportion of nurses in the health care workforce increased from 14 per cent. to 44 per cent.

The Prison Service issued a consultation paper on 21 October 1997 seeking views from a wide spectrum of interested parties on proposals whose effect would be, if implemented, to ensure that, in due course, all patient care would be nurse-led. The outcome of that consultation is currently being considered and the results will help inform the deliberations of the joint Prison Service and National Health Service Working Group on the future organisation of prisoners' health care established last autumn.

European Elections

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received in favour of retaining closed lists in the proportional system for the European elections; and if he will list the organisations submitting such representations. [32893]

Mr. George Howarth: We have received a number of letters from members of the public in favour of closed lists for elections to the European Parliament but no organisations have submitted such representations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the governments of (a) Yemen, (b) India, (c) Pakistan, (d) Bangladesh and (e) Sri Lanka regarding the present crisis in the Gulf. [31959]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None.

Camel Jockeys

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press the Abu Dhabi authorities to restrict the use of children as camel jockeys; and what representations his Department has received on this matter. [32815]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have taken this matter up with the UAE authorities, who have assured us that the necessary Federal Law to prevent such practices already exists, and will be applied rigorously.

Human Rights

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will be supporting at the forthcoming session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights a resolution identical or similar to that introduced by Denmark at the 53rd Session in Geneva headed, "Situation of Human Rights in China"; and if he will make a statement. [32075]

Mr. Fatchett: European Union Foreign Ministers decided on 23 February that neither the Presidency nor Member States should table or co-sponsor a draft resolution on China at this year's Commission on Human Rights. We support that decision and will continue to pursue our human rights concerns through dialogue and co-operation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Tea Room

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what the cost was of the new curtains installed in the Members' Tea Room. [33040]

Mr. Dennis Turner: The cost of the seven pairs of curtains and the pelmets was £9,443.17, excluding VAT.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Abduction

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if it is his Department's policy that legal aid should be provided under the terms of Regulation 14 (1) of the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulations 1989 to overseas citizens whose Governments fail to provide legal aid on the same terms to UK citizens in child abduction cases; and if he will make a statement. [32074]

Mr. Hoon: It is the Government's policy that any person whose case is accepted by the Central Authority under the Hague or European Child Abduction Conventions will receive legal aid. This is because of the vital importance of cases affecting the residence of children litigated before the English and Welsh courts. The availability of legal aid in other countries is not considered. The award of legal aid to foreign nationals is perfectly proper under the terms of the existing legal aid scheme. Many applicants under the Conventions are United Kingdom citizens.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list in respect of each country that is a signatory to the Hague Convention on Child Abduction, the number of cases where the judicial or administrative authority of the requested state has (a) ordered the return of the abducted child and (b) declined to order the return of the abducted child when requested to do so by the UK Central Authority. [31932]

Mr. Hoon: Hague Convention cases are not recorded separately. For the calendar year 1997, the outcome of applications by the Central Authority for England and Wales under the 1980 Hague and European Child Abduction Conventions is shown in the table.

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 621–22.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many officials or individuals within his Department on millennium computer compliance have (a) given notice of their intention to leave or (b) left his Department in the last six months. [32641]

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the answer of 27 February 1998, Official Report, column 388, how many works of art borrowed since 1 May 1997 for the offices and official residences of Ministers derived from (a) the National Galleries of Scotland and (b) Glasgow Museums and Galleries; what is the insurance value of these as registered with the Government Indemnity Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [33014]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since 1 May 1997, seven works of art have been borrowed via the Government Art Collection from the National Galleries of Scotland, and six from Glasgow Museums and Galleries. Works from National Collections, which include the National Galleries of Scotland, are borrowed at the Government's own risk and so do not have either insurance or indemnity values. The total indemnity value of the six works on loan from Glasgow Museums and Galleries is £500,000.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32480]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by my hon. My Department appointed a co-ordinator in February this year.

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when regulations will be laid to bring into effect the television licence fee increases announced last December and due to come into force on 1 April. [33360]

Mr. Chris Smith: On 11 December 1997, Official Report, column 636, I announced that, from 1 April 1998, the fee for a colour television licence would increase to £97.50 and that for a black and white licence to £32.50. I have today laid before Parliament the regulations necessary to bring these fees into force.

TREASURY

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of non-United Kingdom based EU companies which have been liable to pay higher rate insurance premium tax on their products in 1997. [31122]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The information held centrally by Customs and Excise categorises insurers registered for insurance premium tax (IPT) only into UK and non-UK. Of the non-UK insurers approximately 77 have indicated on their IPT returns that their payments include some tax at the higher rate. Customs are however aware that some insurers have used "higher rate" box on their IPT returns to declare tax due at the standard rate of 4 per cent. rather than the previous standard rate of 2.5 per cent.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost to public funds of introducing for the next financial year (a) a single lower rate insurance premium tax for all insurance products at (1) 4 per cent., and (2) 5 per cent., and (b) a higher rate of insurance premium tax for all insurance on motor vehicles, travel and electrical retail goods at (i) 10 per cent. and (ii) 17.5 per cent.; and if he will make a statement. [31115]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The cost, in a full financial year, of introducing a single rate of insurance premium tax on all insurance products currently liable to the tax, is estimated at £255 million for a 4 per cent. rate.

Introducing a single rate of 5 per cent. as you propose is estimated to yield £45 million.

(i) The full year cost from introducing a new rate for both direct and indirect sales of:

travel insurance

mechanical breakdown insurance or warranties for motor vehicles or domestic appliances is estimated at £135 million for 10 per cent. rate.

(ii) A 17.5 per cent. rate is estimated to yield at £15 million.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1998, Official Report, columns 478–79, which of the European Commission Tax Directorates Customs and Excise officials have met to discuss higher rate insurance premium tax; if she will list the dates of such meetings and who was present; if she will place in the Library copies of the information provided by HM Customs and Excise to the Commission; and what discussion took place over (a) the cross-border impact of higher rate insurance premium tax and (b) the treatment in law of higher rate insurance premium tax and VAT; and if he will make a statement. [31121]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The discussions referred to in my answer of 16 February took place at a meeting on 22 January between Customs and Excise officials from VAT Policy Directorate and officials from the Competition directorate (DGIV) of the European Commission. The United Kingdom Permanent Representation to the EU(UKREP) was also represented. DGIV had received representations from certain UK trade bodies about the impact of the higher rate of insurance premium tax and had sought information on this subject from the appropriate UK authorities. The information provided by Customs officials was in response to the requests from DGIV for background information. Copies of letters sent to DGIV via UKREP have been placed in the Library. Although the meeting was informal, Customs officials made clear the Government's view that the higher rate of insurance premium tax would have no effect on cross-border trade and fully complied with both UK and EC law.

Scotland Bill

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the readiness of the Inland Revenue to administer the mechanisms relating to taxation set out in the Scotland Bill, by the financial year 2000–2001. [31384]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The Government intend to make the tax-varying power proposed in the Scotland Bill available to the Scottish Parliament from the year of assessment 2000/01. In order to achieve this, the Inland Revenue has set up a project which will implement a system to enable them to collect income tax at any varied rate set by the Parliament, pay into the Scottish Consolidated Fund the amounts due to the Parliament, and account for tax collected on the Parliament's behalf. This system will, among other things, enable Scottish taxpayers to be identified and enable tax at the correct rate to be collected from them. The Scottish Office are represented on the Board overseeing the project. There will also be close consultation with representatives of employers and others to ensure that the system is in place by April 2000.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the report by the SIB into the administration of the Melton Medes (Fletchers) pension fund. [31071]

Mrs. Liddell: No. Information obtained from investigations by the SIB (now the Financial Services Authority) into the conduct of individual firms is restricted information under section 179(2) of the Financial Services Act 1986 and may be disclosed by the FSA only in the circumstances prescribed by section 180 of the Financial Services Act.

VAT (Artisan Golf Associations)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has evaluated into the advantage of exempting artisan golf associations from VAT. [32803]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Customs and Excise previously concluded in 1995 that the normal tax rule should apply to artisan golf associations. Membership fees charged by artisan golf clubs are exempt from VAT; but charges made by other (host) golf clubs to artisan golf clubs and their members are taxable at the standard rate. This is because no membership facilities are extended by the host club to "artisan" golfers, and the normal rules for green fees charged to non-members are appropriate.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32479]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions encouraged Departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. This function naturally falls to an existing post within the Treasury, and since September 1977 the occupant of this post has explicitly included co-ordination of green transport in the Department within her duties.

Teachers (Income Tax Relief)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of allowing income tax relief on computers and software purchased by teachers for use at home indicating his assumptions in calculating these figures. [32317]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 1998]: No reliable estimate can be made because no information is available about the number of teachers who purchase their own computer equipment to work at home.

Pensions

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government's proposal to introduce resource accounting includes accruing for the Government's unfunded liabilities for pay-as-you-go state pensions. [32794]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Government propose to publish separate scheme statements for the main departmentally administered occupational public service pension schemes alongside departmental resource accounts. The schemes include the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme, the Armed Forces Pension Scheme, the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme and the NHS Superannuation Scheme. Although the Statement of Recommended Practice "Financial Reports of Pension Schemes" does not apply to unfunded pension schemes, its recommendations represent best practice for pension scheme accounting in the UK and the Treasury is developing with departments scheme statements which conform as far as appropriate to this best practice. The unfunded liabilities of these schemes will be disclosed as part of the Actuary's Report. For these schemes, contributions (or any government finance out of which contributions are paid) to meet the accruing cost of pensions will be included in departmental resource accounts and budgets.

The Government do not propose to include state pension liabilities in departmental resource accounts because they do not believe that it is meaningful to do so in order to provide a realistic balance sheet at departmental level. However, the Government recognised at an early stage in the development of resource accounting and budgeting that potentially different arguments might apply in considering the production of a balance sheet for the public sector as a whole.

The Government are currently carrying out a joint scoping study with the National Audit Office into the desirability, practicalities, timescale and resource and other implications of preparing a consolidated set of financial statements for the public sector as a whole ("whole of government accounts"). In assessing the case for proceeding within the preparation of whole of government accounts, the study will consider whether the coverage of such accounts should include Government liabilities, including state pension liabilities. The report of the scoping study will be published in the summer.

VAT (House Renovation)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost of the Exchequer of reducing VAT on house renovation to the lowest level permissible under European Union law. [32073]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The lowest rate of VAT permissible under European Union law for house renovations is 5 per cent. The cost of reducing VAT on all house repair and maintenance to 5 per cent. is estimated to be £1.1 billion. From the source data it is not possible to separate renovations.

Betting Duty

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of reducing the level of betting duty from 6.75 per cent. to 5 per cent. [32046]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The full year revenue cost in 1998–99 of reducing the level of betting duty from 6.75 per cent. to 5 per cent. is £120 million.

VAT (Continence Products)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what involvement his Department has had in the Department of Health's review of the funding implications of the removal of VAT zero-rating for home-delivered continence products. [31868]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Treasury and Customs and Excise have not been involved in the NHS Executive's review of funding, but are being kept in touch with progress.

Business Taxes

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of the impact on the total taxes paid by business before April 2002 of the changes to (a) corporation tax, (b) the utilities tax, (c) the pensions tax and (d) the radio spectrum charges so far announced. [20894]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 15 December 1997]: Figures available for the effects of tax changes announced in July 1997 are given in table 2.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". The Government are currently consulting on corporation tax measures set out in the Pre-Budget Report; estimated effects of those proposed changes are on page 19 of the Inland Revenue's consultative document, "A modern system for corporation tax payments". The planned introduction of Radio spectrum pricing is not comparable with the tax changes discussed above. The primary purpose of spectrum charges is to encourage the more efficient use of the radio spectrum. Charges, whether through fees or auctions, will be in respect of licences for access to the spectrum. Estimates of the financial effects are given in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum to the Wireless Telegraphy Bill.

Income Tax

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in a full year of widening the 23 per cent. income tax band to £30,000, assuming no changes in rates or allowances. [32401]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year cost for 1998–99 would be £2.2 billion.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cash value, in pounds per month, of converting (a) £1,000, (b) £2,000, (c) £3,000 and (d) £4,100 of the 20 per cent. income tax band to 10 per cent. for (i) a single person and (ii) a married couple in each decile of the income distribution. [26204]

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue will complete its remedial work to ensure its computer systems are fully millennium compliant. [32618]

Mrs. Liddell: The remedial work needed to ensure the Inland Revenue's computer systems are fully millennium compliant will be completed by April 1999.

Tax Harmonisation

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if future discussions in ECOFIN about tax harmonisation will include discussion of income tax rates. [30603]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government's firm view is that decisions on income tax is a matter for national Governments.

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 536, which areas of tax have been covered by discussions in ECOFIN regarding aspects of tax harmonisation. [30693]

Dawn Primarolo: A variety of tax proposals have been discussed at ECOFIN since May 1997 including Taxation of Savings. Internet and Royalties for cross border payments. Reduced Rates of VAT for labour intensive industries and the Energy Products Directive. The outcome of each ECOFIN has been reported to the House and all the Commission's proposals on tax matters discussed have been the subject of Explanatory Memoranda.

Duty Free

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the United Kingdom has taken during the EU presidency to address concerns about the abolition of duty free within the EU in 1999. [32278]

Dawn Primarolo: The issue of abolition of duty free within the EU in 1999 has not been raised in ECOFIN so far during the UK Presidency. However, as the Government have previously said, the UK will not stand in the way of any proposal for a Commission study particularly if this were also to examine the nature of any successor regime to duty free.

Windfall Tax

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the spending allocations of estimated windfall tax receipts in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000 and (d) 2000–01 in terms of (i) welfare to work programmes, (ii) other identified programmes and (iii) receipts not yet allocated. [31264]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Windfall Tax is expected to raise £5.2 billion to finance the Welfare to Work programme over the course of this parliament. Estimates of the allocation of the Windfall Tax between programmes and between financial years was set out in Table 2.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997, "Equipping Britain for our long-term future". Further details of estimated expenditure in respect of 1997–98 was set out by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment in the answers to the parliamentary questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy) on 5 November 1998, Official Report, column 228, and from my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Judy Mallaber) on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 109. A revised allocation for future years, taking into account developments since the last Budget, will be published in the forthcoming Budget.

Sea Empress

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funds Her Majesty's Treasury (a) has received and (b) expects to receive as a result of salvage claims on vessels listed in the report on the Sea Empress incident. [32002]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

None. The Government do not expect to be involved in any salvage claims relating to the Sea Empress. However, the Government will shortly submit a claim for around £11.5 million for their costs on clean-up operations following the Sea Empress to the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schools (Funding)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the (a) approved enrolment numbers, (b) numbers currently enrolled and (c) numbers used by DENI on 31 October 1997 for the purpose of school funding for (i) Down High School, (ii) Grosvenor Grammar School, (iii) Hunterhouse, (iv) Knockbreda High School, (v) Methodist College, Belfast, (vi) Newtownbreda High School, (vii) RBAI, (viii) Victoria College and (ix) Wellington College. [31668]

Mr. Worthington: All of the figures shown in the tables relate to pupil numbers in secondary departments (ie pupils in preparatory departments are not included).

(a) Approved enrolment numbers: 1997–98 school year

School	Numbers
Down High School	796
Grosvenor Grammar School	1,076
Hunterhouse College	710
Knockbreda High School	700
Methodist College	1,827
Newtownbreda High School	810
RBAI	1,050
Victoria College	870
Wellington College	850

Note:

Approved enrolment numbers exclude statemented pupils and pupils admitted to a school on appeal.

(b) Numbers currently enrolled: figures provided by the schools as at 31 October 1997

School	Numbers

Grosvenor Grammar	1,088
Hunterhouse College	700
Knockbreda High School	596
Methodist College	1,860
Newtownbreda High School	800
RBAI	1,044
Victoria College	863
Wellington College	795

Note:

Numbers used by DENI and the Boards for the purpose of school funding in the 1998–99 financial year include statemented pupils and pupils admitted to a school on appeal. However, they exclude fee paying pupils and pupils exceeding the overall approved enrolment numbers for individual schools.

Organophosphates

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will provide guidance to doctors on the known chronic effects of organophosphate poisoning. [31994]

Mr. Worthington: Guidance on the effects of organophosphate poisoning on health has been issued to doctors on a number of occasions. The first advice to GPs and A&E consultants was issued on 20 July 1993. This was followed by further advice contained in a book on Pesticide Poisoning which was issued in April 1996. In addition, in June 1996, an article on this subject was included in the CMOs Update which is circulated to all doctors.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ensure that licensing of organophosphates is not carried out by bodies relying exclusively on research data supplied by chemical companies. [31995]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The licensing authorities responsible for the approval for use of organophosphate products employ expert scientific staff to assess all data available to them. Advice is also given to them by independent panels of experts, the Veterinary Products Committee, the Committee on the Safety of Medicines and the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, and only when all safety and efficacy criteria are met will a product be approved.

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were employed by the Housing Executive (a) five and (b) 10 years ago; and what were the numbers at the latest available date. [32251]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose Chief Executive advises me that the information is as follows:

Year	Number employed
To 31 December 1997	2,903
1992–93	3,327
1987–88	3,531

The figures include permanent and temporary staff.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been recruited to permanent posts by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last five years. [32249]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose Chief Executive advises me that the information is as follows:

Year	Number
1997	18
1996	17
1995	16
1994	33
1993	30

These were mostly for basic trainee, technical or specialist posts.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the percentage pay increases for each level of management in the Housing Executive in each of the last five years. [32250]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose Chief Executive advises me that pay increases for all Housing Executive staff are governed by the National Joint Council Conditions of Service, applying to Local Government employees. Over the last 5 years, the annual salary increase has been 2.5 per cent. In addition, staff not on the maximum of their salary scale may be entitled to annual increments. Increases for Directors are determined under a Performance Pay Scheme which is capped at 2.5 per cent. of the salary bill for that grade.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been employed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at its basic level of secretarial/management employment in each of the last five years; and how many of the posts were (a) temporary and for what periods and (b) permanent; how many employees in each category were (i) male and (ii) female; and how many in each category and gender were (1) Roman Catholic, (2) Protestants and (3) others. [32247]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose Chief Executive advises me that there is no basic level of secretarial/management grade; however, the breakdown of the broad categories of equivalent grades are:

Year	Total in grade	Temporary male	Permanent male	Temporary female	Permanent female
Clerical/Secretarial
December 1997	649	80	55	161	353
December 1996	747	83	69	138	457
December 1995	787	95	71	155	466
December 1994	794	97	72	149	476
December 1993	790	84	75	175	486
Management
December 1997	247	1	144	1	101
December 1996	254	—	148	2	104
December 1995	256	—	153	1	102
December 1994	262	—	157	—	105
December 1993	265	—	161	—	104

I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 712. Details of religious affiliation for the whole organisation are reflected in the annual return for monitoring made to the Fair Employment Commission.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many posts at each level in the Housing Executive management structure have been filled by (a) external applicants and (b) persons already in the employment of the Executive in each of the last five years. [32248]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose Chief Executive advises me that, because of reducing running costs budgets and re-organisation, vacancies have been filled by redeployment and promotion of existing staff, with the exception of one third tier post, which was filled by an external candidate.

Management level	External applicants 1997	Persons already in the employment of the Executive 1997	1998
First and second tier[1]	1	2	0
Third tier[2]	0	0	[3]11

[1] The first tier is the Chief Executive and the second tier comprises the Directors.

[2] Assistant Directors and Area Managers.

[3] Filled by re-deployment of staff at the existing grade and by internal promotion.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the future European Structural Funds regime for Northern Ireland. [31946]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Under the proposed post-1999 reforms, qualifying for Objective 1 status will be more difficult because Northern Ireland's GDP will exceed the 75 per cent. maximum proposed by the Commission. Northern Ireland's Objective 1 status has been vital over the past years and there is a continuing need for substantial EU support after 1999, commensurate with the region's special circumstances, to help in adapting the region's economy to peace.

Schools

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils were enrolled in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary and grammar schools in each of the past five years. [31953]

Mr. Worthington: The information is as follows:

School type	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
a. Primary schools[1]	190,503	190,238	190,787	190,208	187,094
b. Secondary-Grammar	148,264	150,036	151,576	152,743	153,095

[1] Includes pupils in reception and nursery classes at primary schools. Also includes pupils in preparatory departments of grammar schools.

Toll Roads

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her policy on toll roads. [31961]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There are no toll roads in Northern Ireland at present. Tolling is considered as an option, where the circulation arrangements are appropriate, to advance the provision of desirable schemes. In this context, consideration is being given to the possibility of a small privately funded toll road to by-pass the village of Toome in County Antrim.

Green Transport Co-ordinator

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32478]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), encouraged Departments to appoint Green Transport co-ordinators. My Department is actively considering this issue.

Car Parking Spaces

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32467]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 March 1998]: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), Northern Ireland Departments will be actively considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for key buildings.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the impact upon Central Science Laboratory research contract pricing of relocating Norwich scientific staff to York. [32867]

Mr. Rooker: First estimates are that the impact of relocating scientific staff based at the Central Science Laboratory Norwich site to the York site would be to reduce expected future pricing by approximately 5 per cent. overall.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost to his Department of constructing the new food research laboratory at Sand Hutton, York. [32868]

Mr. Rooker: The cost of the Department of constructing the new Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York (whose functions go wider than food) is £126,874,000. This includes: payments to contractors; fees for architects, engineers, project managers and other specialists; legal fees; and VAT. In addition, the Department paid £6,958,000 for the site, road improvements beyond the site boundary and bringing utilities to the site.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the impact on the continuity of food research contracts of a relocation of Norwich-based scientific staff to York. [32869]

Mr. Rooker: Previous experience from initial occupation of the Central Science Laboratory at York was that relocation had a minimal impact on the science programme. The average down time for scientific staff during that exercise, including decommissioning, moving and recommissioning equipment, was an average of three weeks.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the proportion of Central Science Laboratory scientific staff who would transfer to York if requested to do so. [32870]

Mr. Rooker: The majority of scientific staff are in mobile grades and transfer to new locations, when necessary, forms part of their conditions of employment. Experience of the previous relocation exercise to occupy the Central Science Laboratory at York was that at a large proportion of staff in mobile grades, between 80 and 90 per cent., transferred to York.

Fisheries

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answers of 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 374, and 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 185, if the national quota constitutes a derogation from the principle of non-discrimination. [32263]

Mr. Morley: No.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the derogations from the principle of free access to fishing grounds which will not be effective after the year 2002. [32571]

Mr. Morley: The derogations from the principle of equal access which expire at the end of 2002 are those limiting access within Member States' 12 mile fisheries limits and those which apply by virtue of the Acts of Accession of Portugal, Spain, Finland and Sweden.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the continuation of the permit system for the Common Fisheries Policy after 2002. [31997]

Mr. Morley: Under the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No. 162/94, it is the responsibility of the flag Member State to issue and manage the special fishing permits of vessels flying its flag. The Fisheries Departments issue such permits to vessels over 18 metres in overall length fishing for deep-water species, edible crabs, spider crabs and scallops in Western waters, as part of the licence to fish in those waters, in accordance with the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No. 685/95. The Fisheries Departments will continue to issue such permits wherever they are required to do so by Community obligations.

Calshot Oyster Fisheries

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 166, on Calshot Oyster Fisheries, if he will place in the Library copies of the advice from (i) the Department of Transport, (ii) the Deputy Harbour Master and (iii) Associated British Ports on the extension of the fishery into Thorn Channel. [32024]

Mr. Morley: A copy of the Department of Transport's letter of objection has been placed in the Library. Associated British Ports did not formally object but, as recommended by the Department of Transport, my officials spoke to the Deputy Harbour Master, ABP Southampton, who confirmed that in his view the extension proposed would represent too great an intrusion into the Thorn Channel.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the savings achieved by the measure to anticipate the pensions uprating order contained within the Social Security Bill. [33357]

Mr. Denham: Subsequent to the saving published in the Financial Memorandum to the Bill, I estimate administrative savings to be £65,000 per annum.

Child Support Agency

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions she has had with the Child Support Agency on delays in paying maintenance to a parent with care when a payment from an absent parent has been received. [32865]

Mr. Keith Bradley: My noble Friend Baroness Hollis of Heigham, the Minister with day to day responsibilities for child support, has regular meetings with the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss operational issues. We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients throughout the child support process.

One of the targets for the Agency is to pass on to the parent with care 97 per cent. of payments within 10 working days of receipt. The current Agency performance statistics show that, at 31 January 1998, 98 per cent. of payments had been passed on within that timescale. The balance includes cases where the instrument of payment from the absent parent is not honoured or those where the identity details of the parents involved are not clear.

Benefits

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish a revised version of the table in the 1997 Departmental Report (Cm 3613) which shows estimated numbers of people receiving benefits at a particular time; and if she will set out the reasons for this revision. [33358]

Ms Harman: The main reason for revising Table 6 is to correct an error in the estimates of forecast caseloads for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit (due to incorrect transcription of figures), which was not picked up prior to publication of the 1997 Departmental Report. At the same time, other improvements have been made to Table 6 which will be adopted in the Departmental Report for 1998 and subsequent years.

The revised table shows caseload figures consistent with the expenditure figures shown in the 1997 Departmental Report. It is in the same improved format as will be adopted for the corresponding table in the 1998 Departmental Report (to be published in April 1998). The table differs from Table 6 in the 1997 Departmental Report in the following ways:

It corrects for a transcription error in the estimates of forecast caseloads for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, which was not picked up prior to publication of the 1997 Departmental Report.

It includes outturn information for 1996–97 which was not available at the time of publication of the 1997 Departmental Report. This is particularly important in improving the estimates for Jobseeker's Allowance.

Estimates for forecast years are for average annual caseloads. This ensures complete consistency with expenditure estimates presented elsewhere in the Departmental Report.

Welfare to Work Scheme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her Department's latest estimate of the total cost of the welfare to work scheme in 1997–98 and each of the next three financial years calculated (a) gross and (b) net of reduced social security spending, and increased tax and national insurance receipts. [31278]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I have been asked to reply.

The Windfall Tax is expected to raise £5.2 billion to finance the Welfare to Work programme over the course of this parliament. Estimates of the allocation of the Windfall Tax between programmes and between financial years was set out in Table 2.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997, "Equipping Britain for our long-term future". Further details of estimated expenditure in respect of 1997–98 was set out by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment in the answers to the parliamentary questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy) on 5 November 1998, Official Report, column 228, and from my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Judy Malleber) on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 109. A revised allocation for future years, taking into account developments since the last Budget, will be published in the forthcoming Budget.

The Government have not made an assessment of the effect of the Welfare to Work programme on social security spending, tax and national insurance receipts. To do so would require information on the full effect of the programme on unemployment, wages and the broader economy. The Welfare to Work programme will be carefully evaluated to help, where possible, to determine these effects.

WALES

Higher Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current levels of reserves held by each higher education establishment in Wales. [31363]

Mr. Hain: The current levels of reserves held by each higher education institution in Wales are as follows:

Education Institution	£
North East Wales Institute of Higher Education	12,598,000
Swansea Institute of Higher Education	12,038,000
Trinity College Carmarthen	1,857,000
University of Glamorgan	40,022,000
University of Wales College of Medicine	24,636,000
University of Wales College, Newport	22,740,000
University of Wales Institute, Cardiff	33,013,000
University of Wales Registry	8,118,000
University of Wales Swansea	8,045,000
University of Wales, Aberystwyth	104,712,000
University of Wales, Bangor	73,407,000
University of Wales, Cardiff	106,349,000
University of Wales, Lampeter	4,088,000
Welsh College of Music and Drama	3,700,000

These figures include the Revaluation Reserve and the Income and Expenditure Account Reserve.

The Revaluation Reserve relates to the fixed assets of a higher education institution and demonstrates changes in the value of those fixed assets. It does not therefore represent cash held by an institution.

The Income and Expenditure Account Reserve represents the total of all reserves (excluding the Revaluation Reserve) of a higher education institution and its subsidiary undertakings and is made up of the cumulative annual surplus (or deficit). The Income and Expenditure Account Reserve is not necessarily available for spending as, in the main, the constituent reserves are not backed by cash in the bank.

I would like to emphasise that the figures cannot be taken as an indication of the financial health position of higher education institutions nor are they an indicator of their cash position. In order to determine financial health a wide variety of accounting factors are required to be taken into account which are far wider than just the issue of reserves.

Land Deals (Merthyr Tydfil)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up an independent inquiry into allegations of irregularities in land deals at Merthyr Tydfil, involving the local authority, statutory agencies and private companies. [31402]

Mr. Ron Davies: This matter continues to be the subject of an inquiry by the District Auditor which is the proper course of action. My Department and the Welsh Development Agency, who have also asked their internal auditors to review their files, will offer whatever assistance is required by the District Auditor in pursuing her inquiry. The National Audit Office have been notified of the action taken. Relevant information has also been drawn to the attention of the Police.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on allegations of irregularities on land deals at Merthyr Tydfil; and what action he has taken in respect of those representations. [31344]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) on 18 February 1998, Official Report, column 674.

International Rail Freight Terminal

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress towards building an international rail freight terminal in South East Wales. [31747]

Mr. Hain: Proposals for the establishment of a European/International Railfreight Terminal in South East Wales are currently being considered.

Merchant Designs Manufacturing (Machynlleth)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much public money was paid in respect of the Merchant Designs Manufacturing plant in Machynlleth; and if he will make a statement; [31895]

(2) what involvement his Department has in investigating the financial arrangements of Merchant Designs Manufacturing in relation to the factory in Machynlleth; and if he will make a statement; [31897]

(3) what guidance he has given to the Development Board for Rural Wales in respect of the search for a new buyer for the former Merchant Designs Manufacturing plant in Machynlleth; and if he will make a statement; [31899]

(4) what assessment he has made of the potential for attracting new jobs to Machynlleth; and if he will make a statement; [31894]

(5) if he will visit Machynlleth to assess the impact on local residents of the closure of the Merchant Designs Manufacturing factory; and if he will make a statement; [31898]

(6) what special financial assistance he is giving to Machynlleth following the closure of the Merchant Designs Manufacturing plant in the town; and if he will make a statement. [31900]

Mr. Hain: No public money was paid in respect of the acquisition by Merchant Designs Manufacturing of the plant at Machynlleth although the company was offered a one-year rent concession by the Development Board for Rural Wales to the value of £33,000. The company also received funding from Powys TEC for the retraining of staff. The financial arrangements for the take-over of the former Laura Ashley plant were a matter for Laura Ashley and Merchant Designs Manufacturing and the Welsh Office has had no involvement in them.

Whilst guidance specific to Machynlleth has not been issued, it remains our priority to ensure that increased resources are devoted to the western areas. As part of its efforts to attract new jobs to the area, the Board has made a substantial investment in developing the Dyfi Eco Park where two units are under construction and where the prospects for letting both units shortly after completion are considered to be good. The closure of the Merchant Designs Manufacturing operation has also generated interest in both the premises and the skilled workforce and a number of inquiries are being actively pursued by the Development Board.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the area at present.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Welsh Development Agency abroad, indicating in which (a) countries and (b) cities; and if he will make a statement. [32215]

Mr. Hain: The WDA has 25 people employed in its International Division abroad and they are based in the following cities and countries; Brussels in Belgium; Hong Kong in China; Milan in Italy; Seoul in Korea; Taipei in Taiwan; Tokyo in Japan; Boston, Chicago and San Francisco in the USA and Ottawa in Canada.

Two operating consultants are employed in Australia and the Wales European Centre in Brussels respectively. In addition three people are seconded to the Wales European Centre in Brussels. I attach great importance to the continuing International work of the WDA which has been very successful in attracting inward investment to Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Welsh Development Agency in north Wales; in which locations; and if he will make a statement. [32214]

Mr. Hain: The WDA currently employs 36 people in North Wales. In addition there are four people employed in posts funded by the European Commission/Welsh Office. All the staff are based at the WDA's office at St. Asaph, although use is made of the WDA's office at Parc Menai, Bangor as and when required.

Public Bodies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the (a) Welsh Development Agency, (b) Mid Wales Development Corporation and (c) Land Authority Wales; and how many in each body are engaged in administrative work. [32213]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is as follows:

(a) 340 of which 103 are engaged in administrative work;

(b) 93 of which 23 are engaged in administrative work;

(c) 48 of which 13.5 are engaged in administrative work.

It should be noted that (b) relates to the Development Board for Rural Wales and that administrative work has been taken to mean clerical/secretarial activities.

Far Eastern Industries

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of recent financial developments in the economies of the Far East on Far Eastern owned industries in Wales. [32220]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office is monitoring the financial developments in the Far East and the impact of these on Far-Eastern-owned industries in Wales very carefully.

Land Use (Housing)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what percentage and surface area of recycled land has been decontaminated in each of the last 12 years by county in Wales; and what percentage and surface area of that land has been used for housing developments; [32422]

(2) what percentage of housing has been built on (a) recycled and (b) greenfield land in each of the last 12 years by county in Wales. [32423]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not held centrally. However, the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) is responsible for managing the land reclamation programme in Wales and may have some of the information which the hon. Member requires or which he may find helpful. I will, therefore, arrange for the Chief Executive of the WDA to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rural Roads

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance he is providing to projects to reduce congestion on rural roads in Wales. [32433]

Mr. Hain: A range of measures designed to reduce traffic congestion on rural and urban roads is being considered as part of our plans to develop an integrated transport policy. A UK-wide White Paper on transport will be published soon. At around the same time, we will publish a Welsh Transport Policy Statement drawing out those issues of particular relevance and importance to Wales.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will take to protect Welsh interests under the current review of European structural funds. [32630]

Mr. Ron Davies: I am totally committed to ensuring that Wales continues to secure the maximum benefit from the Structural Funds during the period 2000–2006. Apart from being closely involved with the development of the overall UK policy approach, I have met Commissioner Wulf Mathies personally on two separate occasions over the past few months to put the Welsh case and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met earlier this week with a senior Commission official to make similar representations.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if pilot studies of computer millennium compliance in respect of each NHS trust in Wales have been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement; [32768]

(2) if pilot studies of computer millennium compliance in respect of each health authority in Wales have been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32767]

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what contingency plans he will establish in case of failure on 1 January 2000 of computer systems in the Ambulance Service in Wales; [32775]

(2) what contingency plans he will establish in case of failure on 1 January 2000 of computer systems in the NHS in Wales. [32774]

Mr. Win Griffiths [holding answer 3 March 1998]: All NHS bodies in Wales have, or will very shortly complete, initial audits of their Millennium compliance. Draft contingency plans are required by April 1998. Questions of cost will be addressed in those plans but are expected to be within notified allocations.

Business Parks

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number and surface area of business parks that have been built on (a) greenfield land excluding Green Belt, (b) Green Belt land and (c) recycled land by authority in Wales in each of the last 12 years. [32854]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information relating to greenfield and recycled land is not held centrally. However, the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) is responsible for managing the land reclamation programme in Wales and may have some of the information relevant to recycled land which the hon. Member requires or which he may find helpful. I will, therefore, arrange for the Chief Executive of the WDA to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House. There are currently no Green Belts in Wales.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if a committee established under sections 3, 4 (1)(a) and 17 of the NHS Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 (S.I. 1990 No. 2024) prior to the establishment of a remuneration committee has powers (a) to appoint a chief executive and (b) to agree the terms and conditions of employment of the chief executive. [30931]

Mr. Win Griffiths [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1998, c. 71]: I would like to correct the position. Regulations 3, 4(1)(a) and 17 of the NHS Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 provide for a committee, comprised of the Chairman and Non-Executive Directors of a trust, whose function is to appoint the Chief Officer of a trust as a director of the trust. Regulation 17 does not confer on the committee the function of agreeing the terms and conditions of the Chief Executive. Paragraph 16 of Schedule 2 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 confers powers upon a trust to employ staff on such terms as the trust thinks fit.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Law

17. Mr. Caplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to reform company law. [31145]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced on Wednesday 4 March 1998, Official Report, columns 636–37, we have published a consultation paper setting out our proposals for a long term and consultative review of company law.

Corporate Governance

18. Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the need for legislation on corporate governance. [31146]

Mr. Ian McCartney: A number of organisations have made representations to us on corporate governance. This is a matter in which the Government are keenly interested.

As I said in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath and Crayford (Mr. Beard) earlier today, we look to companies and institutions to show leadership in delivering best governance practice. If they do not, the Government may have to act.

Newspaper Industry

19. Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to outlaw predatory pricing in the national newspaper industry; and if she will make a statement. [31147]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Competition Bill introduces a prohibition against abuses of a dominant market position, including predatory pricing. The prohibition will apply in the newspaper industry as in the economy generally.

As the House will be aware, an amendment to the Bill accepted in the other place introduced a new prohibition specifically targeted at the newspaper industry. The Government are considering the implications of the vote in the other place. However, we believe that the amendment is unnecessary, and that there is no case for having a different prohibition for the newspaper sector.

European Regional Development Fund

20. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the negotiations under the British presidency concerning the reform of the European regional development fund. [31148]

Regeneration

22. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her policy for assisting with the regeneration of areas suffering from the decline of their traditional industries. [31150]

Mr. Battle: Regional Selective Assistance is the main instrument of regional industrial policy in my Department. This provides support for new commercial investment which creates and safeguards jobs in the Assisted Areas. The European Structural Funds also support regeneration programmes in some industrial areas.

23. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about her Department's role in preparing British businesses for economic and monetary union. [31151]

The Best Practice Working Party, chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs, is looking at how to maximise the potential of all firms through the adoption of best practice. In addition to the advice of the members, the Working Group has received presentations from several business support organisations.

Utility Regulation

27. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to publish her Department's review of the utilities regulators. [31155]

Mrs. Beckett: I hope to be able to publish the conclusions of the Review on Utility Regulation in a Green Paper in the near future. Following publication, there will be a period of consultation during which all interested parties will have the opportunity to make representations on any proposals for change.

33. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the objectives of her Department's review of the utility regulators. [31161]

32. Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to strengthen links between Government Departments and foresight panels. [31160]

Mr. Battle: The Ministerial Foresight Group has been established under my chairmanship to provide top-level co-ordination of the Foresight Programme across Government. The Ministerial Group will receive regular progress reports from the Whitehall Foresight Group of officials which is working to foster closer links between Panels and the activities of individual departments.

Competitiveness

34. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the current sterling exchange rate on British competitiveness in overseas markets. [31162]

Mrs. Roche: The Government understand the difficulties that exporters face as a result of the strength of sterling. Competitiveness, however, depends on a range of factors. We are working in partnership with business to improve the competitiveness of British firms by addressing all the relevant factors.

35. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she last met representatives of the electrical retailing industry; and if she will make a statement. [31163]

We maintain regular contact with Ministerial colleagues with an interest in these matters.

For an explanation of the mechanisms in place to co-ordinate policy on genetic modification at official level, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 2 February 1998, Official Report, columns 476–77.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates the Undertakings regarding Retail Petrol Suppliers in the United Kingdom 1966 have been amended, and to what effect; and if she will make a statement. [31701]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The 1966 undertakings, given by petrol suppliers following a 1965 Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of petrol, have been amended three times.

On 16 August 1968, the constraint limiting the acquisition of company-owned stations was removed.

On 13 August 1976, provisions were introduced for the settling of certain disputes by reference to arbitration, and to ensure proposed licence renewal were on terms that were fair and reasonable.

On 12 January 1994, restrictions on tying retailers to particular brands of lubricants, kerosene or anti-freeze products were lifted. In respect of company-owned petrol stations, all other tying restrictions on non-oil goods and restrictions on suppliers taking commission on sales by licensee retailers were lifted.

Mr. Boswell. To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) at what temperatures refined petrol should be delivered by wholesalers to retail petrol outlets; and if comparable arrangements exist for DERV; [31696]

(2) what evidence she has received concerning refined petrol being delivered by wholesalers to retail petrol outlets at temperatures higher than specified in regulations. [31697]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Petrol Retailers Association has made representations requesting that the Government amend the legislation on liquid fuel deliveries to ensure that a temperature range is specified for the future. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Department does not comment in detail on the affairs of individual companies before proceedings have been concluded. However, Barings was referred to the Accountants' Joint Disciplinary Scheme on 3 October 1995 for investigation of the former auditors and chartered accountants employed within Barings. The investigation has been completed, and a decision by the Executive Counsel to the Joint Disciplinary Scheme on whether to lay complaints for hearing by a Joint Disciplinary Tribunal is expected shortly. It is the usual practice of the Joint Disciplinary Scheme to issue a Press Notice when complaints have been laid; and the Reports of Joint Disciplinary Tribunals are published. Where, however, the Executive Counsel decides not to lay complaints, the Executive Committee has a discretion whether to publish the Executive Counsel's Report.

BCCI was referred to the Accountants' Joint Disciplinary Scheme on 19 March 1992. Further progress in the investigation has been stayed by Order of the Court of Appeal dated 21 December 1993.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Ms Drown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the provisions in the draft Multilateral Agreement on Investment which emphasise the responsibilities and duties of foreign investors. [31138]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We are pressing for the close association with the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, which encourage good corporate behaviour. Foreign investors, like others, are also bound by the national laws of the countries in which they operate.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Mike Hall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Telecommunications Council on 26 February. [33471]

There was unanimous political agreement to the adoption shortly of a common position on a directive on telecommunications terminal equipment. There was also a televised debate on a Commission Green Paper on convergence in the broadcasting, telecommunications and information technology sectors.

Following a European Commission presentation, the Council adopted conclusions on a Commission Communication on Internet domain name governance. The Commission gave an oral presentation of a draft decision on the further development of mobile and wireless communications in Europe (universal mobile telecommunications system). The Commission also made oral presentations of Communications on: implementation by Member States of Community legislation in the telecommunication sector; globalisation and the Information Society; universal service in telecommunications; and the century date change problem for computer systems. I informed the Council that the UK would be hosting an EU conference to tackle the Millennium Bug.

Business Performance

Kali Mountford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from business about the development of her policies to improve business performance. [31140]

Mrs. Roche: Forging a strong partnership with business lies at the heart of the Government's drive to help companies improve their performance. This agenda is being driven forward by the Competitiveness UK initiative. Business people are working directly with DTI Ministers to identify barriers to improved competitiveness and develop practical proposals to overcome them. This radical approach will lead to policies for sustainable wealth creation, based on a high skill, high investment, innovative, modern economy.

[33470]

Mrs. Beckett: Since 2 May 1998, the UK has issued eight licences covering the export of formulated complex growth medium to Iraq. In each case, in accordance with our obligations under UN Security Council resolution 661, the Government confirmed that the applications were to export supplies strictly for medical purposes; notified the UN Sanctions Committee; and, in accordance with the Import and Export (IMPEX) Mechanism established under Security Council Resolution 1051, notified the UNSCOM/IAEA joint unit. The IMPEX mechanism covers specified goods with the potential for use in weapons of mass destruction and in their development, and provides for monitoring of their use in Iraq by the UN Special Commission (UNSCOM).

For five licences, the consignees were UN agencies. For the three other licences, the exports were specifically authorised by the UN Sanctions Committee under the "Oil for food" programme based on UN Security Council resolution 986 and successor resolutions.

The date of each licence, the quantity of formulated complex growth medium covered and the intended end-use are as follows:

Wickes

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department's report on audit failures at Wickes will be published. [31198]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Department does not comment in detail on the affairs of individual companies before proceedings have been concluded. However, this matter was referred to the Accountants' Joint Disciplinary Scheme on 4 March 1997 for investigation of the former auditors and chartered accountants employed within the company. The investigation is expected to be completed during the course of 1998. The Executive Counsel to the Joint Disciplinary Scheme will then decide whether to lay complaints for hearing by a Joint Disciplinary Tribunal. It is the usual practice of the Joint Disciplinary Scheme to issue a Press Notice when complaints have been laid; and the Reports of Joint Disciplinary Tribunals are published. Where, however, the Executive Counsel decides not to lay complaints, the Executive Committee has a discretion whether to publish the Executive Counsel's Report.

Mr. Randall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many meetings have been requested with her Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31295]

Mrs. Beckett: Other than in exceptional circumstances (for instance in relation to decisions on mergers) I would expect Ministers to meet hon. Members when meetings are requested.

The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is working with transport providers to develop integrated transport and entrance tickets.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Student Loans

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the competition to sell part of the student loan portfolio. [33359]

Dr. Howells: I have today announced the sale of a portfolio of student loans for £1 bn. This is the outcome of a policy first announced in September 1996. The sale has been achieved after a vigorous competition and we have accepted the most competitive bid. NatWest Markets was the successful bidder.

The loans sold are those made under the current scheme. None of the new income contingent loans available from the 1998–99 academic year are involved.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said in his statement of 10 July 1997 that we would continue the policy of student loan debt sales as part of our pledge to work within the spending plans already announced for this year and next. The sale also underlines our commitment to developing a wide range of public-private partnerships which involve a transfer of risk to the private sector. This sale transfers to the private sector much of the risk of loans defaulting.

The Student Loans Company, the existing administrator, will continue to administer the loans sold for at least for the next five years. Borrowers who are currently repaying their loans or who have made deferment arrangements will consequently notice little change. We have also taken steps through the Education (Student Loans) Act 1998, to ensure that the position of borrowers is protected. Borrowers will retain their existing rights of deferment, where their income is below 85% of average earnings, and interest rates will continue to be linked solely to inflation.

These rights mean that existing student loans are provided at subsidised rates. Additional subsidies will therefore need to be paid to the purchaser to reflect this. Given the value of loans sold, and that some of the loans will be outstanding for a considerable length of time, the estimated net present value of these subsidies is likely to be in the region of £350m. This compares with estimated present value costs of nearly £300m which would have been incurred by the Government had the loans remained publicly owned. Annual subsidy payments will be high in earlier years and reduce over time as borrowers repay more of their debt and the total level of debt outstanding falls.

During the 1998–99 financial year a gross subsidy of about £60m will be paid to Finance for Higher Education Limited (FFHE), a company formed for the purpose of acquiring the assets by NatWest Markets. However, part of the gross subsidy payment will be repaid to the Government through the administration charges paid to the Student Loans Company and tax receipts on private sector profits. The estimated cost to the Government in 1998–99 of selling these loans will therefore be in the region of £15m above the £40m cost of keeping loans in the public sector.

The agreement between the Government and FFHE for the purchase of the loans, with commercially confidential information removed, will be placed in the Library of the House on completion of the sale.

A second competition to sell a further tranche of student loan debt involving loans made under the current scheme is being planned later this year.

School Expenditure

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority in England, the average per capita spend from (a) capital and (b) revenue budgets for 1997–98 and each of the three previous years on pupils in (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools. [29920]

Mr. Byers: The requested information for the years 1994–95 to 1997–98, the latest year for which the figures requested are available, are set out in two tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Film Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently studying courses relating to film production. [29423]

Dr. Howells: Information is not collected centrally for students studying courses relating to film production. Research undertaken last year by Skillset, the National Training Organisation (NTO) for the Broadcasting, Film, Video and Multimedia sectors, indicated that at that time there were over 400 Higher Education courses in Media studies attended by over 32,000 students.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many replies his Department has received from (a) schools and (b) individuals in Bedford and Kempston to the Green Paper, "Excellence for All Children-Meeting Special Educational Needs". [31759]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have received responses to the Green Paper consultation from three schools—Harrowden Middle School, St. John's School (Grant Maintained Special) and Mark Rutherford School and Community College—and a small number of individuals in Bedford and Kempston.

Specialist Teachers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the likely impact on recruitment of specialist teachers as a result of the recent reductions in the numbers of teacher training courses for teachers of maths. [31751]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government have set the Teacher Training Agency (TTA) a target of 2,150 entrants to teacher training courses for secondary maths teaching in 1998–99, compared with a target of 2,250 in 1997–98. Each year the Government review the demand for newly-qualified teachers in each phase and secondary subject, taking into account the latest information on relevant factors. The targets issued reflect the estimated demand, so recruitment to target should ensure an adequate supply of qualified teachers. In November 1997, the Department published an explanatory paper on 'Teacher Supply and Demand Modelling', a copy of which is in the Library.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31291]

Dr. Howells: No formal records are kept of the number of meetings requested with this Department's Ministers by hon. Members.

However, it is our policy to accommodate all such requests and since 1 May 1997–98 meetings have been held; 87 with Labour and 11 with Conservative hon. Members.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31178]

Dr. Howells: This question cannot be answered in full because of the disproportionate cost that would be involved in locating and collating the information.

After-school Clubs

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to encourage the creation of after school club places in premises other than schools, with particular reference to youth clubs and community centres; and if he will make a statement. [30802]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government are keen to encourage out of school hours clubs in schools and in other community premises, including youth clubs and community centres. We will shortly publish a National Framework for out of school hours learning, which will acknowledge the valuable work already done by youth and community workers, as well as others, to motivate young people and help them become more active learners. The National Framework will also suggest ways in which such partnerships can be developed and make clear that, although schools have a key role to play in promoting and participating in study support, it can be provided entirely by people or organisations who are not part of a school. The New Opportunities Fund will administer £200 million of Lottery funding for out of school hours learning activities.

Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the (a) gender profile, (b) average length of service and (c) average age of the teaching profession. [30828]

Mr. Byers: On 31 March 1996, 33 per cent. of full-time teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in England were male and 67 per cent. female, the average length of service was 15 years, and the average age was 41 years.

Inspectors' Ratings

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the averages of inspectors' ratings for all maintained primary schools with Year 6 pupils inspected by OFSTED in each school year from 1995 on the scale 1 to 7 in their Judgment Recording Forms of the standards of attainment of their Year 6 pupils in the year of inspection (i) English, (ii) maths and (iii) science at Key Stage 2 for each of the seven groups of school produced by ranking all such schools for each year by their same Year 6 pupils' average Key Stage 2 SAT test levels attained for each of these subjects in the same school year as that of inspection; and if he will divide that ranking into seven groups with equal numbers of schools, indicating for each group the number of schools, their simple average SAT test levels and the averages of inspectors' ratings rounded to three decimal places. [31039]

Mr. Byers: This is a matter for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Competitive Tendering

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of he effect of competitive tendering on the ability of a partnership under the welfare to work scheme to meet its contractual obligations. [31205]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We keep under continuous review the ability of partnerships to meet contractual obligations. In letting the contracts we took into account the method of contracting in terms of quality, value for money, inclusiveness and client choice. Partners were actively involved in developing this strategy.

Physical Education

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve teacher training in physical education for primary schools. [31003]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our new requirements for Initial Teacher Training, which I announced last June, will allow trainees to specialise across the 7 to 10 age range. From this September, for the first time primary teachers will be able to specialise in PE as part of their course. The new standards for Qualified Teacher Status, which trainees will be required to achieve from May 1998, will ensure that all teachers, including those who teach PE, are equipped with appropriate subject knowledge, understanding and skills.

Training

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what level of training will be undertaken by Employment Service staff to prepare them for their new duties under the New Deal. [31204]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 27 February 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the level of training that will be undertaken by Employment Service staff to prepare them for their duties under the New Deal. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

All Employment Service staff are receiving extensive briefing about the New Deal through a combination of guidance, conferences and written information. The main recipients of additional training will be the ES New Deal Personal Advisers, who have been careful selected from amongst the most experienced members of the ES's current advisory teams. In general they will have either to hold an NVQIII in advice, guidance and counselling or to be working to that qualification. In addition they will be provided with an overview event lasting a minimum of half a day on the aims and objectives of New Deal followed by a specific three day event focusing on the knowledge and skills required for the adviser's task.

Specific training has also been designed for other ES staff including a New Deal Overview event, New Deal Marketing and Vacancy Taking event, New Deal Team Leader event and modularised New Deal processes events.

I hope this is helpful.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has made to the Department of Social Security about the recommendation of the Dearing Report to conduct a review of the interaction between entitlement to JSA and part-time study. [30240]

Mr. Alan Howarth: No such representations have been made. DfEE Ministers have the lead responsibility for JSA and study rules. We have already taken action on the Jobseekers' Allowance rules on education and training. We have extended the JSA Workskill pilots so that there are now pilots in eight areas allowing people unemployed for six months or more to undertake employment-related courses of education and training, full or part-time, for up to a year while on JSA. The pilots aim to test whether and how different benefit arrangements help unemployed people obtain and retain employment.

We are also introducing more flexible arrangements in our New Deals for unemployed people. The New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds includes an option of full-time education and training for up to a year. People on this option will receive a training allowance in place of JSA. Those aged 25 years and over, unemployed for two years or more, will be allowed from June 1998 to undertake full-time employment-related education and training for up to a year while receiving JSA. Learning for Work—full-time education and training—is also an option in all five prototype Employment Zones.

We will further review the JSA rules on education and training in the light of experience of the Workskill pilots and our welfare to work programme.

HEALTH

Acute Service Beds

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the number of NHS hospital acute service beds in each health authority in England and (b) the number per head of population in each area arranging the health authorities in order of the number per head of population. [30850]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

I regret that in my previous reply on 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 494 the information placed in the Library was incorrect. A revised version has been placed in the Library.

London Hospitals

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Turnberg Committee submitted to him an analysis of the costs of (a) keeping Bart's Hospital open, as proposed by the committee and (b) concentrating all services on the Royal London site in a new hospital building. [30996]

Mr. Milburn: No.

General Practitioner Budgets

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 553, (1) for what reasons he did not publish the exact number of submissions received; and if he received written submissions from doctors requesting an end to general practitioner practice level budgets; [31653]

(2) how many submissions he received requesting that general practice level budgets be continued in some form. [31342]

Mr. Milburn: Since May 1997, the Department has received both written and oral contributions from individuals and on behalf of local groups and national organisations about the Government's proposals for replacing the National Health Service internal market, as set out in the White Paper "The New NHS", and about the implications for the general practitioner fundholding scheme and GP commissioning. The opinions expressed have gone into varying degrees of detail.

It is not possible therefore to enumerate the views expressed on these points on a complete and consistent basis.

Food Poisoning (Milk)

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the risk of acquiring (a) E. coli 0157, (b) salmonella sp or (c) campylobacter infection from the consumption of unpasteurised milk or dairy products; and if he will make a statement; [30725]

(2) how many outbreaks of food poisoning there have been in each year between 1986 and 1996, listed according to the known infective agent; how many of each were linked to the consumption of unpasteurised milk or dairy products; and if he will make a statement; [30727]

(3) what research he has commissioned on faecal contamination of unpasteurised milk; what were the results; and if he will make a statement. [30728]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 24 February 1998]: The potential for acquiring E. coli O157, Salmonella or Campylobacter infection from the consumption of raw cow's drinking milk is considerably higher than that for pasteurised milk. Microbiological surveys have shown that raw cows' milk in England and Wales is a potential source of these pathogenic microorganisms. In England and Wales between 1992 and 1996 there were 15 reported outbreaks of illness involving E. coli O157, Salmonella species or Campylobacter species where milk was the suspected source. Of these outbreaks, 10 were directly associated with raw milk and 5 with pasteurised milk, of which 2 were attributed to pasteurisation failure. As the volume of raw milk consumed in England and Wales is only a small fraction of the total liquid milk drunk, the risk of a person becoming infected from drinking raw milk is, therefore, substantially greater than the risk of a person becoming infected from drinking pasteurised milk.

In response to a request by the Government's independent expert Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food, we commissioned surveillance of the prevalence of E. coli O157 in raw cow's milk cream and raw milk cheeses. The Committee will be asked to consider the public health significance of the results when these become available.

The Department commissioned ADAS to undertake a survey of the microbiological status of raw (unpasteurised) cows' drinking milk in England and Wales. The survey shows that 62 per cent. of milk samples had evidence of organisms indicating faecal contamination. The findings of the survey have been summarised in the December 1997 issue of the Food Safety Information Bulletin. Copies are available in the Library.

The Government are currently funding surveys on the microbiological status of raw milk from cows, sheep and goats. This work includes looking for microorganisms indicating faecal contamination.

The information requested about outbreaks of food poisoning in the years 1986 to 1996, listed to known infective agent has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the notified cases of food poisoning associated with (a) raw milk and (b) pasteurised milk in each of the last five years. [31870]

Ms Jowell: The information in the format requested is not routinely collected as the majority of notified cases of food poisoning are sporadic and the vehicle of infection is not known. Cases may also occur as part of general outbreaks and for some of these the vehicle of infection may be established. During the period 1993–96, there were 13 reported general outbreaks involving milk and dairy products in England and Wales. Nine outbreaks were associated with unpasteurised milk, affecting 146 people, and four outbreaks were associated with pasteurised milk, affecting 111 people. Of the four outbreaks involving pasteurised milk, three were due to pasteurisation failure and one was due to recontamination after pasteurisation. Detailed information on these outbreaks has been published in the monthly publication "CDR Review", Volume 7, No. 3, dated 7 March 1997, Table 1. Copies have been placed in the Library.

For 1997 provisional information indicates that there were no general outbreaks of food poisoning in England and Wales associated with pasteurised milk. There was one reported general outbreak in England and Wales associated with unpasteurised milk, affecting eight people.

NHS Boards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account he takes of previous membership of community health councils in considering appointments to the boards of NHS trusts and health authorities. [32099]

Mr. Milburn: The new criteria for considering candidates for National Health Service boards stipulate that successful applicants must: have a strong personal commitment to the NHS; be able to demonstrate a commitment to the needs of the local community; be able to demonstrate an ability to contribute to the work of the board; and be able to demonstrate an interest in healthcare issues. The criteria also state that candidates might have already served the community in some other capacity, and be able to offer specialist knowledge relevant to the work of the trust or health authority.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 264, if he will make it his policy to collect information centrally on the number of board members of NHS trusts, ambulance NHS trusts and health authorities who prior to their appointment served on a community health council. [32097]

Mr. Milburn: Details of Community Health Council membership is currently collected in the application form for appointment to National Health Service boards. This information is taken into account in considering individual applications but there are no current plans to collate the information for monitoring purposes.

Voluntary Sector Funding

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department provided to (a) Alcohol Concern, (b) Action on Smoking and Health, (c) the Child Accident Prevention Trust, (d) the Portman Group and (e) the Terence Higgins Trust in the financial year 1997–98; and how much he proposes to allocate to each in the financial year 1998–99. [32538]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is in the table.

Hospitals

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a publicly accessible grading system for hospitals which will indicate the effectiveness of hospitals in delivering quality care to their patients. [32405]

Mr. Milburn: We are consulting on a new national framework for assessing performance in the National Health Service, and on an associated set of high-level performance indicators which includes a number of proposed clinical indicators. This new framework will form the basis for published information on NHS performance.

Some of the proposed indicators are available only at health authority level but others, including the clinical indicators, are expected to be available by NHS trust.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the list of projects costing over £25 million proposed by regional health authorities which will be allowed to go forward for PFI bids this year. [32990]

Mr. Milburn: An announcement about the major schemes going forward in the next tranche of the Private Finance Initiative will be made in due course.

Advertising Contracts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the advertising contracts his Department has awarded since 1 May 1997, indicating the value of contracts and the number of companies which tendered for them. [30712]

Ms Jowell: [holding answer 23 February 1998]: Information on publicity-related advertising contracts awarded since 1 May 1997 is shown in the table.

The nursing advertising campaign was last tendered in January 1991. The tendering process was set up for the Department by Central Office of Information under the Advisory Committee on Advertising (ACA) guidelines. The ACA is an independent group of media and marketing professionals appointed by Ministers to advise on the nomination of suitable advertising agencies for government work, and on cost effective working methods, including media buying.

The Campaign Against Living Miserably agency was selected from the ACA approved list and was chosen because it has experience of mental health including working with the Samaritans.

In addition to publicity advertising, the Department and its agencies place a number of staff recruitment advertisements through a variety of relevant recruitment agencies. The total cost for these since 1 May is £596,648.

Hepatitis C

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations calling for financial assistance he has received on behalf of people with haemophilia infected with Hepatitis C through their NHS treatment. [32049]

Ms Jowell: Since 2 May 1997 hon. Members have asked six Parliamentary Questions (in addition to this one) and we have received approximately 135 letters about the issue of special payments for haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through National Health Service blood products.

We have also met with the Haemophilia Society to hear their representations on the matter direct.

Pay

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to offer non-Pay Review Body staff early pay increases in line with those covered by the PRB. [32076]

Mr. Milburn: The pay claims which have been received so far for non Review Body staff are receiving careful consideration and we will open negotiations in due course.

National Health Service Real Estate Sales

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 February 1998, Official Report, column 712, how he establishes the open market value of NHS real estate sold to preferred bidders. [32628]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State seeks advice on the assessment of open market value of National Health Service property from the Valuation Office Agency, or suitable and professionally qualified private sector valuers where, exceptionally, any sale is to be made to a preferred bidder. Generally, surplus NHS property is sold in the open market.

Medical Research

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist to ensure that patients are informed before being included in any medical research; and if he will make a statement. [32544]

Ms Jowell: Research which involves the examination or treatment of an individual performed in the absence of valid consent may constitute an offence against the person.

The National Health Service has a well-established system of research ethics committees which give independent advice to NHS bodies on the ethical acceptability, including the procedures for obtaining consent, of research proposals involving NHS patients.

The recruitment of research subjects and the issue of consent is referred to in HSG(91)5: Local Research Ethics Committees and the Briefing Pack for Research Ethics Committee Members, copies of which are available in the Library. In addition professional bodies and others with an interest in carrying out research have produced their own guidelines.

Dr. Reid: The contract control systems in use at RNAS Yeovilton are those which apply throughout the Ministry of Defence. They are sound and are kept under review.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been recovered by his Department at RNAS Yeovilton following disclosure of irregularities in job booking practices in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [31939]

Dr. Reid: It is presumed that the question refers to the billing of minor works services undertaken on behalf of RNAS Yeovilton by a contractor. Over the past three years, validation of invoices has revealed that £1,686.06 had been overcharged out of a total bill of some £20 million. This sum has been recovered.

[32210]

Dr. Reid: Exercise "Diagonal Glance" is planned to be held in Somerset in September 1998. It is to be a joint UK/US nuclear weapon accident response exercise, the planning for which is being led by my Department. The exercise will test the response to an accident as described in the Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans. Information regarding minor exercises, organised at US unit level is not held centrally.

On 1 April 1996 PACE was created as an Executive Agency of the Office of Public Service. PACE inherited all the then wholly vacant office buildings across government on the Civil Estate, much of it in poor condition.

PACE is charged with the disposal of this vacant estate. Many properties are leasehold buildings and have a negative value. PACE has to spend such sums as are required to attract the interest of the market to obtain the best overall outcome for the Exchequer. This is reflected in the figures shown.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26581]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 5 February 1998]: For this purpose the Cabinet Office includes the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service and its executive agencies. The figures requested are shown.

[1] Valuations are carried out in March each year. Estimates for 1997/98 are not yet available. A number of leasehold properties have a negative asset value. This is reflected in the above figures.
[2] Figure given for 31 March 1997.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26584]

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the expenditure of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if he will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26579]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 5 February 1998]: For this answer my Department includes the Prime Minister's Office and the Central Office of Information.

My Department's agencies' and NDPBs' expenditure in (i) 1995–96; (ii) 1996–97; (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year (estimated outturn) is set out.

Consultants are not primarily used to achieve cost savings. The Department uses external consultants to assist in the improvement of its operational efficiency and effectiveness, for example by better use of Information Technology, and they are also used to improve the delivery of Government policy programmes by drawing consultants' expertise.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many contracts of a value greater than £5,000 his Department has with companies in (a) London, (b) South East England, (c) England, (d) Scotland, (e) Wales and (f) Northern Ireland; and what is the total value of such contracts for each area. [30069]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 18 February 1998]: This information is not held centrally and is available only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a regional breakdown of his Department's expenditure on (a) hospitality, (b) stationery and (c) travel in the last year for which figures are available. [30068]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 18 February 1998]: Expenditure on hospitality, stationery and travel by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's Office, the Office of Public Service and its executive agencies and the Central Office of Information, for 1996–97 broken down by region is shown in the table.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the properties and land owned by his Department which he has identified as surplus to requirements, giving in each case their estimated value. [30313]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 23 February 1998]: For this purpose the Cabinet Office includes the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service and its executive agencies.

The Cabinet Office is reviewing the use of all its assets, including identifying assets which are surplus to requirements, as part of its Comprehensive Spending Review which will be completed this summer.

The Cabinet Office has, so far, identified only one building as surplus to our requirements. We are currently in the midst of negotiations to sell the property and to reveal our estimate of the value of that building would prejudice our position and the eventual income to the Exchequer.

PACE, Property Advisers to the Civil Estate, was set up as an Executive Agency of the Office of Public Service on 1 April 1996. In addition to the buildings it occupies for its own use, PACE also inherited all the wholly vacant buildings then on the Civil Estate.

PACE is charged with the disposal of this vacant estate which currently totals some 286 properties. I have asked the Chief Executive of PACE to write separately to the hon. Member.

Letter from John C Locke to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 5 February 1998:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, to reply to your Parliamentary Question relating to the estimated value of the surplus government properties for which I have responsibility.

From 1 April 1996 responsibility for individual properties was transferred to government departments. At the same time, PACE inherited wholly vacant properties that were at the time surplus to departments needs. Departments retain responsibility for all accommodation subsequently declared surplus.

Our Annual Report and Accounts spells out the numbers and value of the surplus property for which we are responsible. We inherited 384 properties in April 1996 which were reduced to 268 properties by March 1997. We are on target this year to achieve a further 110 disposals. The majority of the properties are leaseholds with a negative value. At 1 April 1996 this negative value was £486 million and at 31 March 1997 it was £433.3 million. So far as freeholds are concerned the opening positive book value was £80.2 million at 1 April 1996, reducing to £67.6 million at 31 March 1997, taking into account the disposals achieved during the year. Copies of our Annual Report and Accounts have been placed in the libraries of both Houses of Parliament. Our second Annual Report and Accounts will report the position at 31 March 1998.

It might be helpful for me to explain how this value of surplus accommodation has arisen. Since 1990 the marked decline in civil service staff numbers, combined with rationalisation, relocation out of London and the more effective use of office space, has enabled Departments to declare an ever increasing volume of space surplus to requirements. Sluggish market conditions in the past have not enabled disposals to keep pace with these surrenders although the market has now picked up particularly in London. In the longer term reductions in the size of the government's office estate will provide the taxpayer with even greater value for money.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will update the information contained in tables 1, 2, and 3 of his Department's answer of 10 March 1997, Official Report, columns 81–82, to include (a) the year ending March 1997, (b) the calendar year 1997 and (c) the most recent months for which figures are available; if such figures are now maintained in relation to each of the new Crown Prosecution Service areas; if he will publish in the Official Report, such figures as are available for the period since 1 April 1997 ; and if he will make a statement. [32568]

The Attorney-General: Table 1 shows the number of defendants whose case was received from the police during the year ending March 1997, the year ending December 1997, and the quarter ending December 1997. The figures are inclusive of non-criminal proceedings and of cases in which the Service advised the police pre-charge.

Table 2 shows the number of cases completed by the Service in magistrates' courts for these periods, and the way in which they were finalised. Pre-charge advice cases and non-criminal proceedings are identified separately. The remainder of finalised cases are divided into those discontinued before the first court hearing; discontinuances at the first hearing and subsequent to the first hearing, but before trial; cases written off; those resulting in a bind over to keep the peace; committals to the Crown Court; proceedings discharged at a committal hearing; and cases heard in magistrates' courts. Hearings are inclusive of guilty pleas as well as cases proceeding to a contested hearing after a plea of not guilty.

Table 3 shows the number of proportion of hearings resulting in conviction and in dismissal in magistrates' courts.

Tables, 4, 5 and 6 show the same information for each of the 42 proposed new Crown Prosecution Service Areas for the period April-December 1997. This information is provisional until such time as the new structure of the Crown Prosecution Service becomes operational.

The number of cases handled by the Service has increased slightly over the last year for which figures are available: during the year ending December 1997, receipts increased by 3% and finalisations increased by 3.9%.

During 1997, a total of 161,461 cases were discontinued. This amounted to 12.2% of completed cases, compared with 12% during 1996. The overall level of discontinuance fell from 13.3% in 1992, and has remained little changed at around 12% for the last four years. The scope for further falls is dependent of the police not beginning cases where the evidence is incomplete.

The number of cases discontinued is not determined solely, or even primarily, by the judgment of lawyers. The Crown Prosecution Service has no choice but to discontinue cases when witnesses fail to appear, reuse to give evidence, or change their story; when defendants produce driving documents proving their innocence; when evidence must be excluded because of irregularities in its collection; and when gaps in the prosecution case cannot be plugged by the police. About half of all cases discontinued are estimated to fall into these categories.

Where a case must be discontinued, an early decision avoids the commitment of time and resources to proceedings in which there is no realistic prospect of conviction. Discontinuance before the first hearing fell slightly from 10.2% of all discontinuance in 1996 to 9.1% in 1997, and future progress in securing early decisions is dependent on improvements in the timeliness and quality of police files.

There is no connection between discontinuance and write offs. The latter is an administrative process carried out when the case cannot proceed, for example because the defendant cannot be traced by the police or because a warrant for the defendant's arrest remains unexecuted. When the defendant is eventually arrested, the prosecution can then continue.

Convictions have remained consistently high at around 98% of all cases proceeding to a hearing. During the year ending December 1997, 98.1% of hearings resulted in a conviction, inclusive of guilty pleas, compared with 98% for the previous year. The high level of convictions supports the view that the Crown Prosecution Service has succeeded in identifying cases in which the balance of evidence weighs in favour of prosecution, and has pursued them effectively in the courts.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement as to the nature of the statistics compiled in relation to cases referred to the Crown Prosecution Service since 1 April 1996 in relation to each of the new Crown Prosecution Service areas. [32570]

The Attorney-General: The information systems maintained by the Crown Prosecution Service are sufficiently flexible to provide in relation to the new areas information on case numbers and outcomes from April 1996 equivalent to that presently available in relation to the 13 existing areas.

Millennium Compliance

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Attorney-General what is his latest estimate of the costs of millennium compliance for (a) the Crown Prosecution Service, (b) the Serious Fraud Office, (c) the Treasury Solicitor's Department and (d) the Government Property Lawyers; and by what date compliance testing will be completed within (a) to (d). [32567]

The Attorney-General: The position is as follows:

(a) the latest estimate of the costs of millennium compliance for the Crown Prosecution Service is £663,000 with compliance testing expected to be complete by the end of May 1998.

(b) The latest estimate of the cost of millennium compliance for the Serious Fraud Office is £300,000 with compliance testing expected to be complete by the end of the year.

(c) and (d) I would refer to the information place in the library of the House by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March.

Discontinued Prosecutions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Attorney-General how many and what percentage of cases in England forwarded by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service for prosecuting were discontinued in each year from 1994 to 1997. [33020]

The Attorney-General: The number and percentage of defendants whose cases were discontinued are as follows:

Year	Discontinuances	as % of completed cases in magistrates' courts
1994	149,014	11.8
1995	145,472	11.9
1996	141,420	11.9

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Democracy Programmes

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what notification her Department has received from the European Commission about the consultation process relating to the future of the Phare and Tacis Democracy Programmes; and if she has responded to that consultation process. [33311]

Mr. Foulkes: The European Commission has tabled a draft Council Regulation for discussion in the Development Co-operation Working Group, covering the European Community's human rights and democratisation programmes worldwide (including Phare and Tacis countries). The Department will be contributing fully to the Working Group Discussion. We have not otherwise been invited to participate in consultations on the Phare and Tacis Democracy Programmes.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department will contribute to the Phare and Tacis Democracy Programmes in the current year. [33309]

Mr. Foulkes: The budget for the Phare and Tacis Democracy Programmes in 1998 is 25 mecu. The UK share of the programmes will be approximately 15% (i.e. about £2.5 million).

International Development

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received concerning the European Commission's review of the Phare and Tacis Democracy Programmes. [33310]

Mr. Foulkes: We received no representations concerning the review.

SCOTLAND

Greenfield Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of housing has been built on (a) recycled and (b) green field land in each of the last 12 years by county and region in Scotland. [32427]

Mr. Macdonald: While this information is not held centrally at present, research will be commissioned shortly to advise on how best it might be collected for current local authority areas in Scotland.

Phoebe Traquair Murals

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that enough funds are obtained to achieve the restoration of the Phoebe Traquair murals in the Mansfield Place Church, Edinburgh, and its opening to the public. [32541]

Mr. Macdonald: The repair and restoration of Mansfield Place Church, Edinburgh is the responsibility of the owners. As the church is a category A-listed building of outstanding architectural and historic interest, it is open to the owners to apply for financial assistance under the Historic Buildings Repair Grants Scheme administered by Historic Scotland, as well as from other sources. In determining an application, the Agency would take due account of the urgency of the repair work, the extent to which public access would be provided, the other demands on its budget and the views of the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland.

Recyled Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of (a) the percentage and surface area of recycled land by county and region in Scotland and (b) the percentage and surface area of this land which requires decontamination. [32424]

Mr. Macdonald: Information is not held centrally on all land that is recycled. However, the table provides information from the Scottish Vacant and Derelict land Survey 1996 on vacant and derelict land which was brought back into use since the 1995 survey.

[1] The figures for Scottish Borders, Aberdeenshire, Dundee and the Western Isles are since the 1994 survey, as they contain district areas that did not participate in the 1995 survey.

Notes:

1. Figures relate to 1996 and may not sum due to rounding.
2. The figures for Dumfries and Galloway, East Ayrshire, Highland, Midlothian and West Lothian are not included as they were unable to participate in the 1996 survey.

Of the 688 hectares of land brought back into use, 15 hectares (2.2%) were recorded as being contaminated. Copies of the full report on the Vacant and Derelict Land Survey are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants are available to assist with the cost of decontaminating recycled land in Scotland; and what grants have been available in each of the last 12 years. [32425]

Mr. Wilson: Scottish Enterprise, which came into being on 1 April 1991, has comprehensive discretionary powers under Section 4 of the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990 to undertake or assist the undertaking of the development, re-development and improvement of the environment. Scottish Enterprises's predecessor body, the Scottish Development Agency, had broadly similar powers.

Higher Still Programme

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that teachers have the time, materials and resources requested by teachers' organisations to implement in full the Higher Still programme by August 1999. [32540]

Mr. Wilson: Within months of taking office, we allowed an extra year for teachers to prepare for Higher Still. This has been widely welcomed.

By the time Higher Still classes commence in schools in 1999, around £20m will have been invested in the reforms by The Scottish Office, with further substantial sums invested by other key partners. This investment will ensure that teachers in S5 and S6 are better supported than ever before. The Higher Still Development Unit has provided local authorities and colleges with detailed plans of what will be provided, and when. These timelines cover the period from now to implementation in 1999, to the Advanced Higher in 2000 and beyond.

The most significant initiatives in support of teachers are: the National Staff Development Programme, offering all principal teachers and subject leaders in-depth training; the support materials strategy, offering teaching support materials; the National Assessment Bank, offering nationally validated tests for teachers; and IT based guidance materials.

In the run up to introduction of the reforms, a programme of implementation studies will assist authorities in considering priorities and managing implementation within available resources. Field Officers have been assigned to work with each authority on implementation planning.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent response he has made to the concerns expressed by teachers of English about the content of the Higher Still English syllabus. [32542]

Mr. Wilson: Additional seminars and advice have been provided to English teachers about the new course. The Higher Still assessment arrangements are broadly comparable to those of the existing Higher. I recognise, however, that the workload associated with assessment in English has been an issue for English teachers for some time.

Workload issues are always prominent when major change is implemented. Teacher representatives have, however, been positive about the range of support which the Higher Still Programme will provide. This is because we have listened to the views of the profession; adapting the programme and responding to needs. I am confident that teachers in S5 and S6 will be better supported than they have ever been before.

In comparison with other subjects, however, English has a heavier load of internal assessment. We intend, therefore, to reduce the burden of internal assessment for English to bring it more into line with other subjects. I am confident that these changes will be broadly welcomed as further evidence of our commitment to partnership with the profession in implementing Higher Still.

Tourism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the money allocated for tourism per head in Scotland for the years 1995 to 1998. [32261]

Mr. Wilson: The Grant-in-Aid allocated to the Scottish Tourist Board expressed per head of population in Scotland is as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	3.43
1996–97	3.54
1997–98	3.79
1998–99	3.79

These figures exclude the residual impact of Section 4 grants, to support tourism business development. The Section 4 scheme in Scotland was suspended in 1993.

The tourism industry in Scotland also benefits from the support and activities of other public agencies, including Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise (which provide support for business development), the British Tourist Authority, Scottish Natural Heritage, Historic Scotland and local authorities. It is not possible to quantify the total spend directly attributable to activities in support of tourism in Scotland.

Dounreay

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which authority has regulatory responsibility for the waste disposal shaft and other repositories of waste at Dounreay. [32797]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The regulatory responsibilities on nuclear licensed sites such as Dounreay are differentiated according to the activities being carried out, not specifically according to the facility. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) regulates primarily the disposal of radioactive waste on or from the site and the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) regulates primarily hazards both to workers and to members of the public from any work carried out on the site, including the accumulation and storage of radioactive waste. The waste disposal shaft, which has not been used since 1977, is a disposal facility for Intermediate Level Waste. Accordingly, SEPA regulates aspects relating to disposal of waste and HSE regulates aspects relating to work on the shaft. A similar split of responsibilities relates to the pits where Low Level Waste is disposed. Radioactive waste is also stored in a number of facilities at Dounreay. HSE regulates the accumulation and storage of the waste while SEPA regulates any discharge from these stores. SEPA and HSE co-operate to ensure effective and comprehensive regulation of the site.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Protected Areas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Government will support proposals for a programme of work on protected areas at the Fourth Conference of the Parties of the Convention on Biological Diversity. [31540]

Angela Eagle: The Fourth Meeting of the Conference of Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity has a number of issues on its agenda. In formulating our position for the meeting, the Government will be considering the case for an initiative on protected areas.

Sainsbury's (Cockermouth)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to announce his decision in relation to the planning application relating to Sainsbury's at Cockermouth. [31727]

Mr. Raynsford: I expect to announce a decision shortly.

Toll Roads

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding toll roads. [31667]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are currently reviewing all aspects of transport policy as part of their commitment towards developing an integrated transport policy. One issue being addressed is whether to make greater use of the price mechanism, for instance through road user charging, to influence travel choice. The forthcoming Transport White Paper will set out our conclusions on this issue in the context of our overall objectives towards a sustainable transport system.

London Underground (Northern Line)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the maintenance and investment budget for rolling stock, signalling and track in each of the last 10 years for the Northern Line of London Underground. [32634]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information in the format is readily available only since 1994/95, when responsibility for maintenance of equipment and infrastructure assets was devolved to individual lines.

The following figures show the annual capital investment, including renewals, but excludes the Private Finance Initiative contract entered into with GEC Alsthom, which provides for a fleet of new trains at an approximate cost of £400m.

Investment

1996–97	5,962	2,744	10,901
1997–98	5,492	2,883	7,573

[1] Rolling stock maintenance was transferred to GEC Alsthom, with effect from 26 November 1995, under the above mentioned PFI contract.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the maintenance and investment budget for London Underground's Northern Line stations in each of the last 10 years. [32635]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) train, (b) signal and (c) track failures in each of the last 10 years for the Northern Line of London Underground. [32636]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information in the format requested is readily available only since 1994–95, when responsibility for maintenance of equipment and infrastructure assets was devolved to individual lines.

Year	Trains	Signal	Track
1994–95	3,044	179	150
1995–96	4,888	234	130
1996–97	3,536	194	40
1997–98	3,846	191	15

Notes:
Northern line has recorded the failures on the following basis:
Trains—all failures causing delays of two minutes or more.
Signal—all failures causing delays of two minutes or more.
Track—average impact in seconds per train per round trip journey (track failures during service hours are rare; any failures are generally detected early and result in the application of temporary speed restrictions).

House Building

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of housing has been built on (a) recycled land and (b) greenfield land in each of the last 12 years by county and region in England. [32419]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no specific definition of 'recycled' land but it is usually taken to mean land previously developed for urban uses. These uses include residential, transport and utilities, industry and commerce, community services, previously developed vacant land and derelict land. The Department's Land Use Statistics for England provide information on the percentage of new dwellings (excluding conversions) built on land previously developed for urban uses since 1989. Table 1 gives estimates for the number of new dwellings built on previously developed land, by Government Office Region for the period 1989 to 1993 (the most recent available). Figures are not available at county level. Table 2 shows the proportion of land for new housing that was previously developed over the same period, by Government Office Region.

There is no specific definition of 'greenfield' land, but it could be interpreted as 'land not previously developed'. The proportion of housing built on 'greenfield' land would then simply be the difference between 100 (per cent) and the figures in the Tables.

Recycled Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of (a) the percentage and surface area of recycled land by county and region in England and (b) the percentage and surface area of this land which requires decontamination. [32416]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no specific definition of 'recycled' land, but it is generally taken to mean land previously developed for urban uses. These uses include residential, transport and utilities, industry and commerce, community services, previously developed vacant land and derelict land. Figures on the total stock of previously developed land available for recycling are not held centrally. However, my Department is currently working with the Local Government Management Board, local authorities, English Partnerships, and others to establish a National Land Use Database that will provide, as a priority, a consistent assessment of previously developed land available for housing.

Estimates of the amount of derelict land—defined as "land so damaged by industrial or other development that it is incapable of beneficial use without treatment". by region and county are available from a survey of derelict land last undertaken in 1993. This information is included in Tables 3 and 5 of "Survey of Derelict Land in England 1993 Volume 2—Reference Tables", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what grants are available to assist with the cost of decontaminating recycled land in England; and what grants have been available in each of the past 12 years. [32417]

Angela Eagle: Both English Partnership and the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund can support projects which include land reclamation. Applications to English Partnerships are handled within the framework provided by its overall development programme (Investment Fund), largely as part of its Land Reclamation and Partnership Investment Programmes. The operation of this Fund emphases flexible partnerships and funding mechanisms and on maximising private investment. The Challenge Fund operates in a similar manner. Money from the European Structural funds can also be used for land reclamation as part of a wider project.

My Department ceased to accept further applications for Derelict Land Grant (DLG) in March 1994 when the programme ended. Since April 1994, transitional arrangements have been in place whereby English Partnerships make payments to local authorities on behalf of the Secretary of State for all DLG projects which had been approved at that time. Annual payments have, inevitably, decreased, with an annual breakdown as follows:

Year	£ million
1986–87	61.9
1987–88	66.9
1988–89	57.8
1989–90	52.4
1990–91	67.1
1991–92	81.5
1992–93	105.4
1993–94	103.8
1994–95	84.6
1995–96	65.5
1996–97	25.0
1997–98	18.0

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage and surface area of recycled land has been decontaminated in each of the last 12 years by county and region in England; and what percentage and surface area of that land has been used for housing developments. [32418]

Mr. Raynsford: Estimates of the amount of derelict land reclaimed, and the amount of this land that was used for housing are available from the "Survey of Derelict Land 1993". Derelict land is defined as "land so damaged by industrial or other development that it is incapable of beneficial use without treatment". Table 1 shows, for the period 1988 to 1993 (the most recently available), the amount of derelict land reclaimed annually, by Standard Region. Figures to county level are shown in Table 14 of "Survey of Derelict Land in England 1993 Volume 2—Reference Tables", a copy of which is in the Library. Table 2 shows the amount of that land that was used for residential purposes, by Standard Region. Information on the end use of derelict land is not available at county level.

Figures on the total stock of previously developed land available for recycling are not held centrally. However, the Department is currently working with the Local Government Management Board, local authorities, English Partnerships, and others to establish a National Land Use Database that will provide, as a priority, a consistent assessment of previously developed land available for housing.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of hectares of contaminated land in each of the last 12 years in each county and region. [33035]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is not currently collected.

Car Parking

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce additional charges for non-residential car parking spaces; and what estimates he has made of the revenue which will be so raised from Government Departments. [32221]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Government are currently looking at the potential costs and benefits of a levy on non-residential parking places. They will set out their conclusions on whether to legislate to introduce such a levy in the forthcoming transport White Paper. No separate assessment has been made of the financial implications for Government Departments of this policy option.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the experiment of fitting cameras to buses to record the identity of other vehicles misusing bus lanes; and if he will make a statement. [31495]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Traffic Director for London is running a pilot project in North London to test the technology to be used for bus lane enforcement. The results will be made public shortly.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates' Courts

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been tried at Swadlincote magistrates' court in each of the last five years. [32101]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect statistics at this level of detail. Swadlincote forms part of the Derby and South Derbyshire Petty Sessional Division, where 11,599; 12,184; 12,804; 12,456 and 12,862 cases were completed in 1993–1997 respectively.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance he has issued to county magistrates' committees on the allocation of cases where the nearest convenient magistrates' court for a locality is in another county. [32180]

Mr. Hoon: No guidance has been issued.

The magistrates' courts have statutory jurisdiction to try indictable offences triable either way and to deal with preliminary matters relating to indictable-only offences, wherever committed, by virtue of the Magistrates' Court Act 1980.

Section 2(1) of that Act provides that a magistrates' court for a commission area shall have jurisdiction to try all summary offences committed within that commission area.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions police witnesses have been called at Swadlincote Magistrates' Court in each of the last five years. [32179]

Mr. Hoon: These figures are not collected centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidelines are available to county magistrates' committees to define the appropriate geographical distance and elapsed travel time from an individual's locality to the magistrates' court at which his case is to be heard. [32178]

Mr. Hoon: No formal guidelines are issued by the Department. Decisions on accessibility of magistrates' courts are a matter for each magistrates' courts committee (MCC) to determine in conjunction with their paying authority.

However, distance and travelling time between one court and another is one of the geographical factors that is taken into account when the Lord Chancellor considers an appeal against the proposed closure of a magistrates' court in accordance with section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997.

Also, when assessing the need for new buildings with a Private Finance Initiative provider, the Department suggests that courthouses should be within 10–15 minutes' walk of more than one form of public transport. The Department does not provide guidance on total travel distance or time.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the reasons which have led to the transfer of cases to other courts from Swadlincote Magistrates' Court over the last five years; and if he will estimate the number of cases transferred on account of each reason. [32177]

Mr. Hoon: I have made no assessment. All decisions concerning the transfer of cases in a given area are for the relevant magistrates' courts committee (MCC) to determine. Each MCC has a statutory responsibility to provide an efficient and effective service to court users.

It is the practice of Courts Administration at Derby to ensure that all cases which arise in the South Derbyshire area are listed for hearing at Swadlincote. The only cases that have been transferred to other courts from the Swadlincote Magistrates' Court are the overflow of youth court cases. The Swadlincote Youth Court sits for only one day per month. Therefore, to avoid unnecessary delay, a case may be heard at one of the courts in the Derby City if there is an earlier date for hearing before a youth court panel sitting in one of the Derby City courts.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his policy on the operation of magistrates' courts committees. [32217]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have a policy on the operation of magistrates' courts committees (MCC) which is given effect in section 31 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. The Act explains that each MCC has a statutory responsibility to provide an efficient and effective service to court users. The committee will, of course, have regard to the quality of service which it is seeking to deliver locally.

The Justices of the Peace Act 1997 also provides the mechanism for any changes that an MCC may wish to effect to aid the delivery of the service provided. The Lord Chancellor may be asked to consider application or appeals arising from such proposals.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the magistrates' courts that (a) have been closed and (b) are scheduled to be closed in each of the counties of Wales since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [32216]

Mr. Hoon: Since 1990 there have been a significant number of local government changes in Wales. To answer this question, it would be necessary to reconstruct the history of those changes, as this information is not complied centrally or stored locally. To do so would involve great effort and could be completed only at disproportionate cost.

However, a survey was conducted in 1996 on courthouse numbers for each magistrates' courts committee which revealed a decreased number of magistrates' courts in Wales. In 1992 there were 70 courts; in 1993, 65; in 1994, 63; in 1995, 60; and 1996, 57.

Decisions concerning the future of a magistrates' court is for the relevant MCC to determine. A local authority that contributed financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. The procedure for such appeals is set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. This is the only time that I will be informed of a proposed magistrates' court closure. In the absence of an appeal, however, the Lord Chancellor plays no part in the process.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) magistrates and (b) magistrates' courts' clerks in Wales are (i) male and (ii) female. [32218]

Mr. Hoon: There are 1,110 male and 886 female magistrates, and 56 male and 54 female magistrates' courts' clerks in Wales.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contract, with its value, concluded by his Department and its agencies for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–2001 and (e) 2001–2002. [32008]

Mr. Hoon: The information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contracts concluded by this Department and its agencies are shown in the table.

With regard to the Court Service, regional budgets are devolved to court level and therefore full figures could be provided only at disproportionate costs. Figures are provided for the contracts from the Headquarters building.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines his Department issues relating to (a) genetic defects and (b) physical abnormalities caused by breeding of animals in respect of (i) commercial breeding establishments and (ii) genetic engineering; and if he will make a statement. [33018]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no guidelines issued specifically covering animals with physical abnormalities bred in commercial breeding establishments. Genetically modified animals are bred and produced under project licences whether in commercial breeding establishments or elsewhere, and such breeding is subject to the controls of these project licences. The project licences define the specific welfare endpoints which are to be implemented.

The Home Office will shortly issue a supplementary guidance to applicants for project licences on projects to generate or maintain genetically modified animals. The Inspectorate are also drawing up for publication a Code of Practice for the care and welfare of high health status pigs for use in xenotransplantation processes.

Mr. Farrakhan

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on whether the exclusion of Mr. Farrakhan is to be maintained or lifted. [33123]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I expect to be able to respond to the representations in Mr. Farrakhan's case shortly.

London Fire Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of preparations for the planned London Fire Service strike; and from what budget heading the costs will be met. [32890]

Mr. George Howarth: The London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has to meet costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence and the Home Office in preparing to provide the authority with military assistance in the event of a strike. These costs are still being calculated.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlie the length of interval between application and completion of the process for aliens to apply for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom, what plans he has to reduce this period; and if he will make a statement. [32821]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The factors vary according to the individual case, the category in which the application is being made, the need or otherwise for further information, and the number of other applications waiting to be decided. The introduction of compulsory application forms has enabled a large number of straightforward applications to be decided within a few days of receipt. The current computerisation and restructuring of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's caseworking functions is intended to speed up caseworking times, including those for indefinite leave to remain.

Dunblane

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy regarding implementation of the recommendations in Lord Cullen's report on the circumstances leading up to and surrounding the events at Dunblane Primary School on 13 March 1996, concerning regulation of those working with young people. [32609]

Mr. Michael: Recommendation 27 of Lord Cullen's Report proposed that there should be a system for the accreditation to a national body of clubs and organisations attended voluntarily by young people, the main purpose of which would be to ensure that there are adequate checks on the suitability of the leaders and workers who have substantial unsupervised access to them. Recommendation 28 proposed the development of a Scottish Vocational Qualification in respect of work with children, including the organisation of clubs and child development and protection.

In February 1997, the Scottish Office issued to a wide range of organisations a consultation paper inviting views on possible arrangements for a national system of accreditation and vetting for groups and individuals. The consultation drew a large number of detailed and thoughtful responses. These are currently being considered by the Scottish Office prior to wider consideration across Government to ensure that this difficult and important issue is dealt with in a way which will stand the test of time.

With respect to Recommendation 28, options for qualifications and training for adults working with children in groups and clubs are also currently being considered by the Scottish Office.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the (i) percentage, and (ii) amount, of Home Office expenditure on (a) prisons, (b) policing, (c) probation, (d) fire services, (e) direct crime prevention initiatives, (f) immigration measures, (g) asylum measures, (h) victim support and (i) other matters in each of the next two years. [32582]

Mr. Straw: I regret that I am not yet able to provide the information requested for 1998–99. This is because I cannot anticipate the presentation of the Home Office Departmental Report and the main Supply Estimates to Parliament. This will happen shortly after the Budget. I will then write to the right hon. Member with the information which he requests about the percentage of Home Office expenditure in 1998–99 allocated to the areas he has identified.

There is no information yet available about expenditure in 1999–2000. This is because decisions about the allocation of expenditure after 1998–99 will be made after the completion of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

"In Excelsis"

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that there has been no infringement of copyright on the work, "In Excelsis"; and if he will ensure that any dues payable will be paid to the beneficiary of Lord Alfred Douglas' estate. [32607]

Mr. Straw: I understand that, in accordance with normal Public Record Office practice in cases of material which is not in Crown Copyright, any member of the public wishing to reproduce "In Excelsis" will be advised to seek permission from the owner of the copyright. I understand also that no requests for reproduction have yet been received. No copyright royalty fees are levied by the Public Record Office for use on non-Crown copyright works.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 49, which member of the public requested access to the manuscript of "In Excelsis". [32801]

Mr. Straw: To provide this information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of the privacy of a third party.

Public Records

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many files have been authorised for early opening on the authority of the Lord Chancellor under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 since 1968. [32606]

Mr. Straw: Since June 1992, 3,337 Home Office files have been opened in accordance with Instruments made by the Lord Chancellor under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958. Figures for the period prior to June 1992 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he will establish in case of failure on 1 January 2000 of computer systems in the Fire Service in Wales. [32776]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Guidance was issued to all fire brigades in England and Wales on 7 January 1998 on contingency planning for the year 2000. A copy of this guidance has already been placed in the Library. Further information on progress has recently been sought from brigades. This will complement the ongoing review which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is undertaking of progress on tackling the millennium computer problem within central Government.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Draft Decommissioning Scheme

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make public the draft decommissioning scheme presented to the parties at the Talks. [33575]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today placed copies of the draft decommissioning scheme in the Libraries of both Houses and copies will be made available in the Vote

Office. The scheme provides the detailed mechanisms which would allow voluntary decommissioning to take place.

In conjunction with the draft scheme, I recently laid a draft Order which will extend by approximately one year the period during which an amnesty for those decommissioning arms in accordance with the scheme can be made.

Police Authority

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the number and purpose of official journeys outside Northern Ireland undertaken by the (a) Secretary and (b) Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997; [31633]

(2) if she will list the amounts of personal expenditure claimed by and reimbursed to the (a) Secretary and (b) Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97 and (v) 1997; [31636]

(3) what arrangements are in place to authorise or reimburse personal expenditure by the (a) Secretary and (b) Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland; [31635]

(4) what was the cost of official journeys outside Northern Ireland by the (a) Secretary and (b) Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in terms of (i) travel, (ii) subsistence and (iii) entertainment paid from official funds or for which reimbursement was claimed in (1) 1995, (2) 1996 and (3) 1997. [31634]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The Secretary and Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland is, and has always been, a post for a single individual and I therefore refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 290 and on 2 February 1998, Official Report, columns 474–75.

Processions

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the meetings she has had with representatives of each of the groups known as Concerned Residents to discuss processions, indicating the names of the persons she met on each occasion since 1 May. [26740]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1 May 1997, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has met delegations from the following Residents Groups to discuss processions. It would not be appropriate for reasons of confidentiality to indicate the names of the individuals in the delegations.

Date	Residents Groups
21 May 1997	Dunloy Residents and Parents Association
23 June 1997	Bogside Residents Association
18 June 1997	Bellaghy Concerned Residents
21 May 1997	Garvaghy Road Residents Association
17 June 1997	Garvaghy Road Residents Association
27 June 1997	Garvaghy Road Residents Association
21 May 1997	Lower Ormeau Concerned Community

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis, in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27741]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 5 March 1998]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

£ 000

Year	(a)	'(b)
1995–96	526	166
1996–97	787	204
1997–98 to date	512	162
1997–98 full year	859	204

' The information at (b) does not include figures from the Departments of Agriculture and of the Environment as the information was not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The figures for the Department of Health and Social Services relate to all Public Transport Fares as the information on taxis could be separated only at disproportionate cost.

Conference

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the conferences held by her Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27744]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The information requested has been placed in the library.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have a criminal record as a result of convictions for scheduled offences. [30032]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The information requested is not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to provide. However, from 1980 to the end of the 3rd quarter of 1997, 8,270 persons were found guilty of indictable scheduled offences.

Organophosphates

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will provide comprehensive advice on the potential dangers of exposure to organophosphate users and on appropriate protective equipment when using organophosphate products. [31993]

Mr. Ingram: The risks associated with the use of organophosphoros (OP) compounds are well known. Advice on measures which users can take to reduce risk, including advice on personal protective equipment, was issued on 25 July 1997 in a document entitled "Warning on Sheep Dipping". A booklet and video produced by The Health and Safety Executive containing comprehensive advice on this subject are available through the Health and Safety Agency for Northern Ireland and the Health and Safety Division and the Employment Medical Advisory Service of the Department of Economic Development.

The Health and Safety Agency for Northern Ireland is currently making arrangements for an updated booklet to be issued shortly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Places

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what proportion of (a) three year olds and (b) four year olds currently have nursery places in (i) Stoke-on-Trent City and (ii) each district and borough council in Staffordshire. [33045]

Ms Estelle Morris: 4,664 three year olds, 11,543 four year olds and 61% of children under 5 were in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools in the Staffordshire Local Education Authority area in January 1997.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current average cost of providing a full-time nursery place in Staffordshire. [33046]

Mr. Byers: In 1996–97, the latest year for which data are available, the net institutional expenditure per full time equivalent nursery school pupil in Staffordshire was £2,634.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current number of nursery places available in (a) Stoke-on-Trent City and (b) each district and borough council in Staffordshire. [33044]

Mr. Byers: Information on nursery places is not collected centrally.

School Pupils

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children are currently being taught in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in (i) Stoke-on-Trent City and (ii) each district and borough council in Staffordshire. [33048]

Mr. Byers: In January 1997, the number of children taught in maintained primary and secondary schools in Staffordshire Local Education Authority area was 96,437 and 71,712 respectively.

Class Sizes

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average class size in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Staffordshire. [33049]

Mr. Byers: The average size taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in Staffordshire Local Education Authority area in January 1997 were 27.5 and 22.3 respectively.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the costs of reducing class sizes for Key Stage 2 to a maximum of 30 (a) in total and (b) broken down into the costs of (i) additional teachers, (ii) teacher training and (iii) premises. [32377]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 3 March 1998]: We have made no estimate of these costs. The Government's pledge relates to reducing infant class sizes only.

Schools Spending

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average amount spent per pupil in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Staffordshire. [33047]

Mr. Byers: In 1996–97, the latest year for which data are available, the net institutional expenditure per pre-primary and primary pupil in Staffordshire was £1,588 and per secondary pupil was £2,138.

New Deal

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from private sector companies participating in the New Deal that they are unable to provide the equivalent of one full day's training per week to lead to an accredited qualification, for every placement. [32291]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Training is a key feature of all the New Deal options, not least the jobs options. All employers who receive the subsidy agree to ensure that the young person receives training during the time that they are with the employer, payment being made in arrears subject to satisfactory progress being made in training.

We have not heard of any employers for whom the provision of training during the option is an issue. Indeed, the response we have had from employers has been most enthusiastic and shows a clear understanding of the aims of New Deal to improve long term employability and raise skill levels and the emphasis that is placed on quality. These aims will be best achieved by giving young people the chance to acquire approved qualifications or working towards them by gaining specific units. Success in these areas will benefit not only the young person but also the employer.

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated timescale for the provision of 50,000 trained child carers under the New Deal for lone parents. [32293]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We aim to provide places for up to 50,000 young people to train as childcare workers under the New Deal for 18–24 year olds over the lifetime of the Parliament. Potentially, participants on the New Deal for long-term unemployed people could also train as childcare workers, and participants on the New Deal for lone parents could be helped to find employment in childcare. This initiative will make it easier for all parents, including lone parents, to balance their family commitments with employment.

Head Teachers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of applicants for headships are female; and what percentage are successful. [32603]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not held centrally.

Student Funding

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when his review of funding for post-16 education will be completed; who is chairing the review; and if he will make a statement. [32279]

Dr. Howells: Funding for post-16 education is being considered as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. It is expected that announcements will be made in the Summer or the Autumn.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce a single unit of resource for 16 to 19 year olds. [32399]

Dr. Howells: We currently have no plans to create such a unit of resource. As our recently published lifelong learning consultation paper, "The Learning Age", makes clear, we will reward providers for retaining people in learning, for raising achievement and for excellence. I will be consulting our partners in the education service before making any proposals about future funding mechanisms for 16 to 19 education.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average level of funding is for 16 to 19 year old students undertaking A level courses in (i) schools and (ii) sixth form colleges. [32280]

Dr. Howells: The estimates of median public funding costs for the achievement of a 3 A-level package in 1995–96 are:

LEA/Voluntary Aided School Sixth Forms: £6,970

Grant Maintained School Sixth Forms: £7,010

Sixth Form Colleges: £6,640

Further information on these figures is in "The Public Funding Costs of Education and Training for 16–19 year olds in England 1995–96", copies of which are in the Library.

Nursery Nurses

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to create a standard qualification for nursery nurses. [32190]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 2 March 1998]: There are many different qualifications in childcare and education held by staff working in the full range of early years settings. In the context of the promotion of both early education and childcare, the Government have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority, together with the relevant National Training Organisations, to examine the qualifications framework for the sector. It is the role of the NTOs to ensure coherence of the qualifications framework and to promote the value of qualifications in the sector.

Work is currently being undertaken to establish the range and type of qualifications held by nursery nurses. Preliminary indications are that there will be more than one qualification and more than one route to achieving it. Such diversity may be necessary to ensure sufficiently broad access to qualifications.

Early Years Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to give financial support to parents in respect of the education of children aged under one year; and if he will make a statement. [32316]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 3 March 1998]: There are no plans to give financial support to parents for the education of children aged under one year.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the (a) total costs and (b) specific costs of (i) additional teachers, (ii) teacher training and (iii) premises arising from the extension of high quality early years education to three year olds; and what assumption of likely demand was used in his calculations. [32492]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 3 March 1998]: In January 1997 approximately 416,000 three year olds did not have an early education place in the maintained sector. The cost of providing free places for those children in the maintained, private or voluntary sectors at the current rate for four year olds of £1,100 for five two and a half hour sessions a week over 33 weeks would be some £460 million.

National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what decision he has made on the future of the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities. [33693]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our Disability Rights Task Force is currently considering how best to implement the Manifesto commitment to comprehensive and enforceable civil rights for disabled people and, in particular, the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission (DRC). To ensure appropriate advisory structures are in place which will facilitate a smooth passage of responsibilities to the DRC when formed, I have decided that the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities (NACEPD) should not be reconstituted when members' current appointments cease on 31 March 1998. The duty in the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 to have NACEPD will accordingly be repealed by a statutory order laid before the House today.

This will enable the National Disability Council (NDC) to advise on its own initiative on employment discrimination issues and ensure that the Council can advise Government on all matters relating to the elimination of discrimination against disabled people. Additionally, I have decided to establish a non-statutory advisory body to provide the Government with independent advice on employment, self employment and training programmes and services for disabled people.

These changes have the full support of both NACEPD and the NDC, and I would like to take this opportunity to record my thanks and appreciation for the important contribution made by current and past members of NACEPD. Their willingness to work with officials and Ministers over many years has done much to help improve employment prospects for disabled people.

National Curriculum

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce science project work for pupils in Key Stages 3 and 4 as part of proposed changes to the National Curriculum. [31507]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have no plans to do so at present. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority will provide advice on the nature and scope of any changes to the national Curriculum for the year 2000 at Easter.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children under the age of 11 years currently benefit from the assisted places scheme. [31456]

Mr. Byers: At the start of the current academic year 1997–98, there were 2,030 children under the age of 11 years holding assisted places.

A-Level Turkish

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students in higher education have an A Level in Turkish. [31655]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not held centrally. The Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) collects data on the entry qualifications of applicants to HE, and the latest data show that there were 43 students with an A level in Turkish who were accepted for entry to a first degree course in autumn 1997.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that A Level Turkish will continue to be available after 1999; and if he will make a statement. [31656]

Dr. Howells: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) is working with the GCE A level examinations boards to develop new cost-effective arrangements for protecting small entry subjects, including A level Turkish. I am confident that these new arrangements will be agreed shortly.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he intends to respond to concerns expressed by the Governors of St. John's School, Kempston, about the proposals in the Green Paper, "Excellence for all Children-Meeting Special Educational Needs", regarding (a) the legal status of statements of special educational needs and (b) a redefined role for special schools and the effect upon parental choice. [31758]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are at present considering the many thoughtful comments on the Special Educational Needs (SEN) Green Paper. In the light of those responses, and taking account of advice form the National Advisory Group on SEN, we expect to announce an action programme in the summer.

The Green Paper did not propose changes to the fundamental legal framework for SEN. Parents will continue to have the right to seek a statutory assessment and a statement of SEN for their child. The Green Paper also made clear that we will maintain parents' present right to express a preference for a special school place for their child.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the integration of services with local authorities in the delivery of statements of special educational need. [31974]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department will shortly be publishing a report by Newcastle University of a DfEE-funded research project on effective communication between schools, LEAs, and health and social services in the field of special educational needs (SEN). The report will help LEAs to improve the integration of services in the delivery of statements and other aspects of SEN by providing models of effective co-operation; by recommending ways in which co-operation and decision-making in the field of SEN can be improved; and by setting out practical measures to achieve this improvement. More broadly, this is an issue which we shall be addressing in the Government's response to consultation on the Green Paper "Excellence for all Children—Meeting Special Educational Needs".

School Buildings (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money has been allocated to each London borough education authority in 1997–98 for the repair and modernisation of school buildings. [31658]

Mr. Byers: The table sets out the amount of credit cover and New Deal for Schools (NDS) grant we have allocated to each London borough education authority in 1997–98 to support capital expenditure at local education authority (LEA) maintained schools. NDS grant for 1997–98 was provided for the improvement, renovation or replacement of buildings used for educational purposes and the provision of equipment (including information technology) for educational purposes. This included support to develop a number of local public-private partnerships which we expect will result in substantial additional spending on capital. Credit approvals may be applied to capital spending of all kinds, as may other resources that LEAs have available to them, such as receipts and revenue. We do not collect information centrally about how much LEAs spend on the repair and modernisation of school buildings.

Waste Management

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance is provided within the National Curriculum on the teaching of waste awareness and the options for waste management provided by the waste hierarchy. [32055]

Ms Estelle Morris: The National Curriculum includes requirements and opportunities for pupils to study environmental issues, such as waste management. For example, pupils must be taught how considerations of sustainable development, stewardship and conservation affect environmental planning and management.

In 1996, the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority issued guidance to schools on teaching about environmental matters through the National Curriculum.

GCSE Results

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average proportion of pupils in all schools, excluding the independent sector, in each local education authority, gaining five or more GCSEs at grades A to C. [30845]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The information requested in respect of GCSE achievements is shown in the table.

[31854]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 27 February 1998]: The table shows the percentage of pupils assessed achieving (i) level 3 and above, (ii) level 4 and above, (iii) level 5 and above, and (iv) the average level attained in the reading and writing Key Stage 2 National Curriculum assessment tests by boys and girls in 1997.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27781]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The cost of Ministerial cars and drivers for the DfEE is estimated at:

£352,245 for 1996–97

£301,839 for 1997–98 to date, and

£357,398 for the full year 1997–98.

In 1996–97 there were six Ministers; from 2 May 1997, seven. For 1995–96 the figures is available only for the former Employment Department which spent £181,949 on Ministerial cars and drivers in the year.

The Department's bill for taxis can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26687]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The estimate of the costs of Ministerial overseas travel in the years stated are:

Year	Cost £
1995–96	124,430
1996–97	85,412
1997–98[1]	69,614

[1] Costs not yet fully brought to account.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing and Farming Support

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a breakdown of the total financial support his Department gave to (a) the fishing industry and (b) the farming sector in the last year for which figures are available in (i) South-East England (ii) England and (iii) total. [30102]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 February 1998]: Information in the format requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Farming (Information Technology)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives are being pursued to encourage farmers to use information technology. [32548]

Mr. Morley: The Department has its own Internet web site on which it publishes useful information and guidance for farmers and others in the agricultural industry.

In relation to the Government Direct and Better Government initiatives, the Department is considering further opportunities for using information technology for the direct provision of information and the provision and collection of information from the farming community via 'interactive forms'. This could extend, eventually, to the electronic processing of complete transactions over direct links with farmers. This will require wider consultation with the agricultural community and industry to establish cost effective opportunities, and to ensure that all parties concerned have access to the required facilities and that systems integrity can be maintained.

One current example of the wider use of information technology relates to the Cattle Tracing System, currently under development with private sector involvement, which will enable cattle markets, abattoirs, farmers and agents to submit cattle movement data via electronic mail services.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to end the holding of milk quota by farms which are not producing milk; and if he will make a statement. [32856]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no such plans. The leasing of milk quota by those no longer involved in producing milk is permitted under current Community legislation on milk quotas.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce a milk quota reserve; and if he will make a statement. [32841]

Mr. Rooker: There is already a limited national milk quota reserve. There are at present no plans to extend its scope.

Car Parking Spaces

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [33021]

Mr. Morley: In line with the Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Department will be actively considering this issue in preparing Green Transport Plans for its key buildings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mauritius

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the subjects to be discussed when one of her junior Ministers visits Mauritius in April. [33052]

Mrs. Roche: There are no plans at present for a DTI Minister to visit Mauritius.

Works of Art

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many works of art she has borrowed for use in her offices and official residence; which organisations she has borrowed these works from; what the insurance value is of these works; what guidance she received on the acquisition of these works; if the works have yet been removed for temporary public exhibition elsewhere; and if the works have been or will be replaced on a regular basis. [31536]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Retail Petrol Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what means and with what objectives the retail petrol industry is monitored by the Director General of Fair Trading; and if she will make a statement. [31703]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Director General of Fair Trading has been carrying out a major review of the petrol market in the UK to examine the effects of changes in the market's structure since the 1990 Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of petrol.

Under section 2 of the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to review commercial activities in the United Kingdom. The purpose of this is to help him detect monopoly situations and anti-competitive practices; the Director General can, if appropriate, refer these to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation.

In relation to petrol, the Office of Fair Trading meets representatives of the industry from time to time to keep track of the competitive processes within it. The Office also collects information about the market on a regular basis and investigates complaints about alleged anti-competitive behaviour.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on recent changes in the degree of competition (a) nationally and (b) locally in the retail petrol industry. [31704]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 March 1998]: The Director General of Fair Trading confirmed on 10 June 1997 that he was reviewing the wholesale and retail petrol market in the United Kingdom. I understand he expects to publish the findings shortly.

DEFENCE

Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of (a) the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation, (b) the Defence Vetting Agency and (c) the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [32187]

Dr. Reid: Where these matters fall to the Chief Executives of my Department's agencies, I have asked the Chief Executives to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mike Wilson to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 6 March 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence Vetting Agency's Newsletter as this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

The Defence Vetting Agency produces an unclassified internal newsletter for its staff called "Vetting News". The newsletter is produced quarterly. The first issue of Vetting News was published in June 1997; the third issue is in preparation.

You may care to note that the Defence Vetting Agency formed on 1 April 1997, and is faced with a particularly turbulent period involving collocation, reorganisation and the introduction of new systems and processes. The newsletter is an important means of helping to ensure that staff are kept aware of what is going on during this time.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from Grahame Jones to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 6 March 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the current security classification of newsletters produced for the staff of several of his Defence Agencies, as these matters fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment Defence Agency. Specifically, you asked for details of: how often each newsletter is produced, and when each newsletter was first issued.

The Agency currently produces three newsletters for its staff:

A Personnel Publicity Bulletin, which informs Service men and women of pertinent and topical personnel issues. The news letter has been in existence for many years, and certainly for the life of the Agency, and is published monthly and whenever there are specific topics of interest.

A Civilian Personnel Bulletin, which informs Civil Service employees of pertinent and topical personnel issues. Like its Service equivalent, this newsletter has been in existence for many years, but is published weekly.

"Antenna", a general interest newsletter, which also provides for the staff to express their views on any topic connected with the Agency's business. This newsletter was launched on 13 February this year, and is published weekly.

All three newsletters are unclassified.

Letter from Mr. S. R. Hill to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 6 March 1998:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence that sought the current security classification of the newsletters produced for the staff of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation (NARO) as this falls within may area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

2. I am able to confirm that the Fleetlands Bulletin and Almondbank Weekly Orders are both unclassified, issued weekly and first produced more than 20 years ago. Contact magazine is unclassified, is issued quarterly to both sites in the NARO, and was first produced in January 1998.

Parliamentary Answer

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the reply of the Minister for Defence Procurement of 12 February to the question for written answer of the Countess of Mar of 16 December 1997 in another place (Ref. D/Min/(DP)/JWG/MP 15551/97/M). [33152]

Dr. Reid: The text of the letter referred to in the hon. Member's question is to be found in Official Report, House of Lords, 2 March 1998, columns 137–43.

Major Eric Joyce

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Reigate of 21 January concerning Major Eric Joyce and the Labour Party. [33134]

Mr. George Robertson: I wrote to the hon. Member on 5 March 1998.

Night Shooting

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 41, in what circumstances he permits the use of rifles at night as a means of vermin control in areas of the Defence Estate that are being used for military training at that time; and how many (a) accidents and (b) other incidents arising from such activity have been notified to his Department in the last three years. [33122]

Mr. Spellar: The use of rifles at night for vermin control when military training is taking place has not been permitted. Accordingly, there have been no reported accidents or incidents.

Army Prosecuting Authority

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current security classification of the annual report produced by the Army Prosecuting Authority. [32188]

Dr. Reid: The Army Prosecuting Authority, which was set up on 1 April 1997 and operates under the general superintendence of the Attorney-General, has no plans to produce and publish an annual report. An internal analysis of the first years operation is being considered but the classification and distribution of this work has yet to be decided.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computer Systems

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what procedures he has in place to ensure that difficulties with computer systems experienced by one Government Department or agency are shared with other Government Departments and agencies. [31282]

Dr. David Clark: CCTA collects best practice where it arises in government and in co-operation with industry, and through central initiatives funded by the CITU on behalf of OPS, as typified by their current work with departments and agencies on the year 2000 date change. It provides a number of mechanisms to enable government departments and agencies to share both positive and negative IT experiences. These include: two groups which cater specifically for the needs of larger and smaller organisations; the publishing of best practice advice and guidance, and case studies based on departmental experiences; an inter-departmental forum funded by departments for information exchange known as the CCTA Foundation; and the delivery of direct services to departments on a full repayment basis.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 1104–05, on how Government departments and their agencies are tackling the millennium compliance problem, when he expects to make his first quarterly report to the House. [33336]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner) on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 621–22 and the quarterly progress reports that I have placed in the libraries of the House.

Cabinet Committees

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number of ad hoc Cabinet Committees established by Prime Ministers between the periods (a) June 1970 to February 1974, (b) February 1974 to May 1979, (c) May 1979 to November 1990, (d) November 1990 to May 1997 and (e) May 1997 to date. [29442]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Since May 1997, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has established four Cabinet Committees in the MISC series. The Government are not responsible for Committees established under previous administrations.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy Pay

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners what is the range and average pay of the Church of England bishops and archbishops. [33024]

Mr. Stuart Bell: For the 1997/98 stipends year (1 April to 31 March), the recommended rates of stipend are as follows:

	Stipends
Archbishop of Canterbury	48,825
Archbishop of York	42,780
Bishop of London	39,870
Diocesan Bishops	26,470
Suffragan Bishops	21,760

Theses figures are provided annually in the Commissioners' Annual Report.

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what is the range and average pay for the lowest ranking clergy of the Church of England. [33025]

Mr. Stuart Bell: For the 1997/98 stipends year (1 April to 31 March), the CSA recommended for full-time assistant staff a range between £12,850 and £13,850.

Dioceses are free to exceed the scale points, or to use the points flexibly, for reasons of responsibility, seniority, or personal circumstance.

The average stipend paid in the current stipends year is £13,620.

WALES

Recycled Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grants are available to assist with the cost of decontaminating recycled land in Wales; and what grants have been available in each of the past 12 years. [32421]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Development Agency (WDA) currently administers the Land Reclamation Grant and Urban Investment Grand (UIG) schemes in Wales. These may provide assistance towards the cost of dealing with contamination which is either part of a reclamation scheme or, in the case of UIG, is part of a more comprehensive redevelopment proposal. Land Reclamation Grants have been available from the WDA in each of the past 12 years. UIG was introduced and administered by the Welsh Office in April 1989. Prior to that, an Urban Development Grant scheme was available and could have provided assistance. On 1 October 1996, the responsibility for administering the UIG scheme was transferred to the WDA.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of (a) the percentage and surface area of recycled land by county in Wales and (b) the percentage and surface area of this land which requires decontamination. [32420]

Mr. Hain: This information is not held centrally. However, the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) is responsible for managing the land reclamation programme in Wales and may have some of the information which the hon. Member requires or which he may find helpful. I will, therefore, arrange for the Chief Executive of the WDA to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Tourism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the money allocated for tourism per head in Wales for the years 1995 to 1998. [32259]

Mr. Hain: Welsh Office funding for the Welsh Tourist Board in each of the last three financial years and in 1998–99 is as follows:

Year	Net provision £ million	Average spend per head of population £
1995–96 outturn	14.6	5.01
1996–97 outturn	14.7	5.04
1997–98 forecast outturn	15.0	5.11
1998–99 plans	14.4	4.92

It is estimated that in 1996 the total spent by tourists in Wales was £1.9 billion.

Regional Selective Assistance

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grants of regional selective assistance were made in Wales in 1997; how many were at the maximum level; what was the average level; and how many jobs he estimates were created. [32557]

Mr. Hain: 167 offers of Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) were made in Wales in 1997. Maximum levels for RSA in intermediate and development areas are fixed by the EU and cannot be exceeded. The Government also impose cost per job limits on the total RSA that can be offered to individual projects: no offers were made to development area projects at the maximum level permitted by the limit applying to those areas; 3 cases were approved at the lower limit applying to intermediate area projects and, for the first time in Wales, 1 case was approved for exceptional treatment above the intermediate area limit.

The average RSA cost per job in development areas was £8,033 and in intermediate areas, excluding the case afforded exceptional treatment, £4,139. These offers were in total associated with the planned creation of 14,013 new jobs and safeguarding 3,468. The actual number of jobs created and safeguarded cannot be ascertained until the project in question have been completed, usually some 3 to 5 years.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how the culture, media, sports and tourism sectors will benefit from the New Deal. [32290]

Mr. Chris Smith: The New Deal will deliver benefits in all the sectors for which my Department is responsible. The tourism, hospitality and leisure industry is particularly well placed to benefit, as a major employer with the potential to create many more jobs over the next decade. The creative industries can also use New Deal to ensure an adequate skills base for the future.

Lottery Awards

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what action he will take to redress the imbalance between the regions and nations of the United Kingdom in the awards made by the Millennium Commission, with special reference to projects in Wales; [33388]

(2) what are the (a) total sums awarded and (b) numbers of projects accepted by the Millennium Commission in each of the regions and nations of the United Kingdom. [33389]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

NESTA

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how he will ensure that there will be representation of scientific interests on the NESTA Board. [32874]

Mr. Chris Smith: In accordance with the provisions contained in paragraph 1(2) of schedule 4 to the National Lottery Bill currently before Parliament, my Department has consulted over 250 bodies considered representative of those engaged in the fields of science, technology and the arts, seeking suggestions of people who might serve as the Chair or Trustees of the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts (NESTA). The posts have also been advertised in the national press. In both exercises, we have stressed the need for the Trustees collectively to be able to reflect interests across the three fields of science, technology and the arts, and have sought information from candidates about relevant experience and expertise. In considering with my ministerial colleagues whom to appoint to these posts, I shall take full account of the need to ensure that NESTA is equipped to meet its objectives in each of the three fields, and at the points at which they meet.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that companies and individuals making donations or contributions to the millennium celebrations do not concentrate them disproportionately on the Millennium Experience. [31352]

Mr. Chris Smith: Individual private sector sponsors will make their own decisions on where they should direct their support for Millennium celebrations. The Policy Directions for the Millennium Commission require all funded projects to be supported by a significant element of partnership funding and/or contributions in kind from sources other than the National Lottery. Match-funding has been set at at least 50% for capital projects and 10% for the Millennium Awards scheme of bursaries to individuals. The Commission's expenditure of £2 billion will therefore lead a total of around £4 billion of investment in the social and economic infrastructure of every part of the United Kingdom. To date, the Commission has offered a total of £1.24 billion to 186 capital projects around the country, and has allocated £200 million to the Millennium Awards scheme.

Private sector contributions to the Millennium Experience will also support the associated Millennium Challenge, a country-wide programme of events and activities organised by the New Millennium Experience Company. All four of the founding partners in the Experience (Tesco, British Telecom, Manpower and Sky) have made it clear that their support is intended both for the Dome and for the Challenge programme.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 506, for what reason the Secretary of State for Social Security was unable to provide comparable information to that given in previous answers to the hon. Member for West Chelmsford. [33136]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information was not provided due to an error within the Department. I apologise for any inconvenience caused to the hon. Member.

Information on the operation of the New Deal for Lone Parents is available up to and including 31 January 1998.

As at 31 January: 20,205 first invitations had been issued to lone parents; 4,584 initial interviews had been arranged, and 3,761 lone parents had attended interviews; 3,368 lone parents had agreed to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents following initial interviews; 1,113 lone parents have found jobs following agreement to participate in the New Deal for Lone parents programme.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 503, for what reason statistics on the age and gender of income support recipients are not available for 1989. [33264]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Information on the age and gender of Income Support recipients in 1989 is held by age band, rather than by individual ages.

PRIME MINISTER

Blind Trust

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what official appointments have been given to the trustees of the blind trust set up to finance his office when Leader of the Opposition. [31091]

The Prime Minister: Two of the three former Trustees of the Labour Leader's Office Fund hold official appointments, one as a Minister of State and another as part-time Chairman of the Housing Corporation. The third was a Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and Home Secretary in a former Government.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the names of people who have been given official appointments and also donated towards the blind trust set up to finance his office when Leader of the Opposition; and if he will make a statement on the mechanism whereby he is notified of such matters. [31093]

The Prime Minister: I was not notified of the names of donors to the Labour Leader's Office Fund. The rules drawn up on legal advice deliberately required the three members of the Board not to reveal the names so there could be no suggestion that the making of donations might influence or secure favour.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister how many contracts of a value of greater than £5000 his Department has with companies in (a) London, (b) South East England, (c) England, (d) Scotland, (e) Wales and (f) Northern Ireland; and what is the total value of such contracts for each area. [30088]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 February 1998]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 5 March, Official Report, column 766.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give a regional breakdown of his Department's expenditure on (a) hospitality, (b) stationery and (c) travel in the last year for which figures are available. [30087]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 February 1998]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 767.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to meet the relatives of the victims of the Lockerbie air disaster. [33273]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs plans to meet the Lockerbie relatives in early April. I will meet them thereafter.

Ministerial Visits

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria governed which businessmen accompanied him on his recent visit to Japan. [32989]

The Prime Minister: I was accompanied by businessmen from companies with major interests in the commercial and trading relationship with Japan.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 581, on ministerial visits, if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 on which he has given his prior approval for personal companions, other than a spouse, to accompany a Minister travelling on official business. [33369]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 581.

TREASURY

VAT (Energy-saving Materials)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter sent by H.M. Customs and Excise to the European Commission DG XXI concerning the potential for reducing the rate of value-added tax levied upon energy saving materials and services, together with the reply received. [31571]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 4 March 1998]: Customs and Excise have advised the Commission that the Government intend to introduce a reduced rate of VAT for energy saving measures carried out under certain Government-funded schemes, and to explore the possibility of a reduced rate with wider application than European law presently allows. Customs did not expect, and have not received, a reply to the letter.

Publication of this letter is inappropriate under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Coins (50p Piece)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received from business concerning conversion to the new 50p piece; [32835]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the costs to British business of converting from the old to the new 50p piece. [32836]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 4 March 1998]: The decision to change to the new 50p coin was made following a review of the United Kingdom's coinage conducted by the Royal Mint and reflected the public requirement for smaller, lighter coins. In conducting the review, the Royal Mint sought the views of the general public and consulted major users and handlers of coins such as the vending industry, banks and retailers as well as special interest groups such as the blind and the elderly. A compliance cost assessment was undertaken prior to the decision in 1995 to introduce the new 50p and £2 coins. The vending industry's estimates of the total cost of the changes was £71 million.

Travel Insurance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the trend in the provision of travel insurance from (a) travel agents, (b) direct insurance brokers, (c) credit card companies and (d) other sources since the introduction of higher rate insurance premium tax. [31111]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 February 1998]: There is no conclusive evidence that any shift of business is due to the price effect of this measure. Figures supplied by travel agents support estimates that such outlets have lost between 5 per cent and 10 per cent of their travel insurance customers since the introduction of the higher rate of insurance premium tax (IPT). However, they also suggest that travel agents have been losing travel insurance business regardless of whether or not they have increased their insurance premiums in response to the tax change. This is in line with a 1996 Mintel survey which identified that in the period between 1992 and 1996 the share of the travel insurance market enjoyed by other outlets rose from 12 per cent to 23 per cent. I have no reliable information on how the current decline in market share is shared between other providers.

Expenditure Review

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the likely scale of the reallocation of resources between Departments following the completion of the comprehensive expenditure review in July. [32277]

Mr. Darling: Departments are still engaged in their own and the cross departmental elements of the overall review. It would be premature to give any estimates of the likely outcome.

Trusts

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on the tax treatment of the disposal of an interest in a trust. [33692]

Dawn Primarolo: This Government are determined to stem tax leakage by detecting, deterring and countering tax avoidance. We will therefore take action, to be included in the next Finance Bill, to prevent avoidance of tax by those who dispose of an interest in, or originating from, a trust which has ever been an offshore trust. The measure will have effect in relation to all disposals on or after today.

Further details will be given in an Inland Revenue Press Release which is being issued today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Communities

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those institutions and organisations authorised by his Department to distribute printed matter on the European Communities in the United Kingdom. [32962]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No such authorisation is required. Anyone may distribute printed matter on the European Communities in the UK, so long as they do so within the law.

EU Presidency (Youth Programme)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those prizes currently planned for the United Kingdom Presidency Youth Programme; and if he will list the agencies and Governments consulted. [32941]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Prizewinners from the FCO's "Ambassador for a Day" competition for 11–15 year olds will shadow certain personalities in other European Union countries for a day. Up to 60 prizes are being offered including days with British Ambassadors, European politicians, football clubs and fashion houses. Prizes were arranged with the co-operation of UK Diplomatic Missions, Foreign Ministries, individuals and sponsoring companies.

The ten award winners in the "Celebrating Europe" competition for schools, colleges and youth groups will receive major awards to the value of £5,000, and there will be a number of supporting awards. All awards will be provided by commercial sponsors. The competition is being administered by the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges and the Youth Exchange Centre. The four UK education departments are involved.

Gulf War

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to review the upper limit for compensation for loss of personal possessions suffered by UK citizens working in Kuwait at the time of the Gulf War. [32858]

Mr. Fatchett: Awards of compensation for personal property losses are decided by Panels of Commissioners appointed by the UN Compensation Commission (UNCC). Although there is no appeal against award decisions, where the compensation is considered to be too low it has been our practice to ask the UNCC for an explanation.

Kidnap Victims

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in ascertaining the whereabouts of Paul Wells, Keith Mangan, Donald Hutchens and Dirk Hassart. [32873]

Mr. Fatchett: Despite our continuing efforts, there is still no conclusive proof of what has happened to Paul Wells, Keith Mangan, and the US and German hostages. We have had no confirmed news of them since late 1995. We continue to pursue every lead that may help us to find out what happened to them. Together with the Governments of the other kidnap victims, we remain in close touch with the Indian authorities, who are leading the investigation, and with the Government of Pakistan. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have raised the plight of the kidnap victims at every possible opportunity.

EU Presidency (T-Shirts)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many T-shirts were printed for distribution to (a) schoolchildren and (b) others commemorating the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Union; and at what cost to public funds. [33009]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 154 T-shirts were printed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, bearing the UK Presidency logo. These were given to the children who designed the logo and children involved in Presidency launch events at British Embassies in other EU countries. The total cost was £661.60 excluding VAT. Other posts and organisations have also been able to use the Presidency logo and in some cases have produced T-shirts, but finding out how many and at what cost to public funds would involve disproportionate cost.

British Council

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the British Council advertised in the booklet, "Britain in Europe"; at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [32955]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Council advertised in the reputable publication "Britain in Europe" to publicise its forthcoming activities during the UK's Presidency of the European Union. The Council did not pay for the advertisement.

The Council also considered it appropriate and useful for its Chairman, Sir Martin Jacomb, to accept the Editor's invitation to contribute an article on the Council's activities in Europe.

Protection of National Minorities

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to (a) member states of the Council of Europe and (b) other states which are signatories to the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities encouraging them to ratify and enforce that Framework Convention. [32959]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made clear our strong support for the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities during the negotiations on the Convention in Strasbourg. We will continue to support the widest possible ratification of the Framework Convention. We supported the decision in the Council of Europe Summit Action Plan in October 1997 to complement the Convention with practical initiatives, and will encourage States, through the Convention's monitoring machinery, to abide by the commitments it entails.

Schengen Agreement

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of the special adviser present at the Amsterdam Treaty negotiations; and if the adviser was present for any part of the negotiations, with particular reference to the Schengen discussions. [32985]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The role of Special Advisers at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is to advise the Foreign Secretary in the development of Government policy and its effective presentation. One of these Special Advisers was present at the Amsterdam European Council. He did not attend any of the sessions of the European Council.

Japan (Embassy)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people his Department employs on a (a) full time, (b) part time and (c) temporary basis in the UK Embassy in Japan; and how many have commercial and industrial responsibilities. [32978]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Embassy in Japan employs 38 UK-based and 126 locally engaged members of staff. A number of the locally engaged staff job share. As a result, there are the equivalent of 122 full-time positions. This figure includes 45 manual workers. The time equivalent of 14.85 UK-based and 37.25 locally engaged members of staff is devoted to commercial, industrial or investment work.

Indonesia

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to raise the issue of human rights violations in Indonesia with the Indonesian authorities. [33022]

Mr. Fatchett: We regularly raise our concerns about human rights with Indonesia bilaterally and in multilateral fora. We are concerned about recent violence in Indonesia. We have urged the Indonesian authorities to act with restraint.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1998, Official Report, columns 543–44, on Indonesia, if he will list those hon. Members and NGOs from whom he has received representations on the question of police training in Indonesia. [33219]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received representations on police training for Indonesia from the hon. Member, my hon. Friends the Members for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd), for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) and for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) and the right hon. Member for Eddisbury (Sir A. Goodlad) and from NGOs. The NGOs include Tapol and the World Development Movement. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary also discussed the matter with the Indonesian NGOs in Jakarta last year.

China

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position the Government adopted within the EU on the draft Resolution in the UN in respect of human rights in China. [33019]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 711.

ASSIST Programme

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from which budget head the funding for the ASSIST programme will come. [33223]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The ASSIST programme will be funded from Class II, Vote II, Foreign and Commonwealth Office: other external relations, subhead C: Other FCO programmes and grants.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) governmental and (b) non-governmental projects which are to be funded under the ASSIST programme, with the level of funding in each case. [33227]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Funding for individual projects is allocated in response to proposals made by our Embassies and High Commissions overseas throughout the year. It is not possible at this stage to list projects to be funded with any accuracy.

Human Rights

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from which budget the £2.75 million for the Human Rights Project Fund not reallocated from the military training budget will come. [33224]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The £2.75 million for the Human Rights Project Fund was found through reprioritisation in the overall allocation of resources for 1998–99.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) governmental and (b) non-governmental projects which are to be funded by the Human Rights Project Fund, with the level of funding in each case. [33226]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Human Rights Project Fund will be used to promote human rights both through technical assistance to governments and through non-governmental organisations.

Funding allocations for specific projects will be determined during the 1998–99 Financial Year on the basis of bids from FCO Posts overseas and geographical Commands at home. Full details are not yet available.

Lockerbie

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the ruling by the International Court of Justice in relation to the Lockerbie bombing. [33225]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The International Court of Justice has held that it does have jurisdiction under the Montreal Convention to consider Libya's claims, but has equally held that it is not able to determine, as a preliminary issue, the effect of the resolutions of the Security Council on Libya's claims under the Montreal Convention.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support and sustain Gibraltar should unfriendly action be taken by the Spanish Government. [33051]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are committed to ensuring the security of all UK Overseas Territories and to promoting their prosperity.

HEALTH

Hepatitis C

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has evaluated on the impact of infection with hepatitis C on people's lives. [33220]

Ms Jowell: We are not aware of any studies on the overall impact of infection with hepatitis C on individuals' lives.

Reports on clinical aspects of hepatitis C infection indicate that the natural history varies widely. About 20 per cent. of those infected may recover completely; the others develop chronic infection. Some of those with chronic infection are asymptomatic and some experience vague symptoms such as fatigue. Some of those with chronic hepatitis C will progress to severe liver disease, including cirrhosis and hepatocellular carcinoma, but these complications may take 20 to 30 years to develop.

In February 1996, the Haemophilia Society produced an unpublished report relating the experiences of people with haemophilia who are infected with hepatitis C. Copies of this report are available from the Haemophilia Society.

Haemophiliacs (HIV)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with haemophilia have received financial compensation for being infected with HIV through the use of contaminated blood products given as part of NHS treatment; and how much has been paid. [33221]

Ms Jowell: I understand that, as at 31 January 1998, 1,239 haemophiliac patients had received a total of some £90 million since the beginning of such payments in 1988.

Guardian ad Litem and Reporting Officer Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions a court requested use of the Guardian ad Litem and Reporting Officer Service from each local authority in each of the last three years. [31942]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested, as supplied by local authorities in England, will be placed as a collated table in the Library. The information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Utting Report

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the membership and outline the terms of reference of the Ministerial Taskforce to implement the Government's response to the Utting Report. [23370]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 499.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 307

SESSION 1997–98

23rd February—6th March 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
